A GOOD TIME.

By Marian Douglas.

Said good Grandfather Gay,
"On a Thanksgiving Day,
If you want a good time, give something away."
So he sent a fat turkey to shoemaker Price,
And the shoemaker said, "What a big bird!..
How nice!
And with such a good dinner I ought
To give Widow Lee the small chicken I bought."
"This fine chicken—oh, see!" said the pleased Mrs. Lee;
"And the kindness that sent it
I would like to make someone as happy as I;
So I'll give Mrs. Murphey my big pumpkin pie."
"And oh sure!" poor Mrs. Murphy said,
"'Tis the queen of pies!
Just to look at its yellow face gladdens my eyes.
Now it's my turn, I think. So a sweet ginger cake
For the motherless Finnigan children I'll bake."
Said the Finnigan children—Rose, Danny, and Hugh—
"It smells sweet of spice, and we'll carry a slice To little lame Jake, who has nothing nice."
"Oh, I thank you, and thank you." said little lame Jake;
"Oh what a beautiful, beautiful cake!
And, oh, such a big slice! I'll save all the crumbs,
And will give them to each little sparrow that comes."
And the sparrows they twittered, as though they would say,
Like good grandather Gay, "On a Thanksgiving Day,
If you want a good time, give something away."

Both crew and passengers. Many of the ... ter arose and dressed, ready for any emergency. Some one went to the room of the eight year-old girl and informed her of the apparent danger. "Is father on deck?" was her question.

"Yes, your father is on deck," was the answer she received. Assured of this, she dropped back on the pillows again; and, in spite of the howling storm, was soon fast asleep. The undisturbed heart was hers because of the confidence which she had in her father who was in command of the ship. Even so does the Christian say, amid the confusion and bewilderment of life:

"In peace will I both lay me down and sleep;
For Thou, Jehovah, alone makest me dwell in safety." (Psa. 4:8).

The Christian can be undistracted because of the Master's promise of peace. "My peace I give unto you," He said, "not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be fearful."

"Christ does not withdraw His servants from the world in order that they may abide in peace," affirmed Sir W. Robertson Nicoll. "Like Wordsworth's water-lily, 'whose head floats on the tossing waves," because its root 'is fixed in stable earth,' so He would have men, there where their work is, abide in peace because they abide in Him."

"Peace, perfect peace, by thronging duties pressed?
To do the will of Jesus—this is rest.
Peace, perfect peace; with sorrows surging round?
On Jesus' bosom naught but calm is found."

Advancing years, with all their changing experiences and sometimes with their misty shadows, can be met with serenity by the undistracted heart. Julia Ward Howe one day visited her minister. As he was helping her to her carriage, he somewhat tactlessly said, "It is pretty hard to grow old, isn't it?"

Standing still and looking up, she gave the happy reply: "No, the deeper I drink the cup, the sweeter it tastes; all the sugar is at the bottom." It was a reply worthy of a noble nature, and indicated the presence of the undistracted heart.—Dr. W. J. Hart, in Christian Herald.

—Rev. J. W. Wellons, Christian minister, was one hundred years old last week. He preached on his hundredth birthday to a congregation of about one thousand people.

CHRISTIAN AND THE WORD.

...y be safely said that the growth of ...tian is, in the great majority of ...ite exactly proportioned to the real, knowledge of the Word of God. "Is ...or this cause that ye err, that ye know not the Scriptures nor the power of God," And so the Word becomes the greatest and most rational means to personal acquaintance with God. We may as certainly and truly come to know Him through His word as we may come to know a correspondent whom we have never seen through his letters.—Selected.

ON THE LEVEL OF THE CROSS.

One notes, with ever-deepening wonder, how rich and poor meet together at the feet of Christ. That is so written on the Gospel story that he who runs may read. These were times of bitter social cleavage, imperiling the whole fabric of society. It was a religious cleavage before it was a social one, and that is the most ominous of all. And then came Jesus, drawing to His feet the children of every separated section, mediator between sundered classes as truly as between God and man. Rich men like Nicodemus sought Him. Poor men like Simon Peter loved Him passionately. Women ministered to Him of their substance, and the beggars by the highway waited for Him. One came to Him with the request that He would settle some dispute about inheritance, and s ...ers who had no inheritance at all. So has it been right down the course of history. Slave and emperor have knelt together. Rich young rulers have come running to Him, and found the indigent were there before them. In every land where Jesus has been preached, the rich and the poor have met together there, for that Lord is the maker of them all.—George H. Morrison.

—We have an overflow of church reports this week. This indicates activity in the churches. We regret that we have not room for all. We thank those pastors who report their poundings in abridged form.

—How will this new year end for us? It is not a question of luck or chance or fate, but it is a question of will—yours and God's. God wills the best for you: what do you will for yourself?

—Fire broke out in the residence of Mr. Willis Booth last Saturday morning. Through the presence of mind and timely action of Mrs. Booth the fire was extinguished before the firemen arrived. Mr. Booth was at his office in the Court House when notified that his house was on fire. He never hurried home so fast before.

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD.

Herbert Taylor Stephens, D. D.

The Lord my Shepherd is, His voice I know,—
His loving care fails not. He leads me on Through pastures green, where living waters flow:
I feed and quench my thirst, and want is gone.
My soul, confused with woes, He doth restore.
He leads my steps in holy, restful ways,
In paths of righteousness, and opes Heaven's door,
And brings me safe through life's dark, winding maze.
Should darkness fall, and Death itself draw nigh,
I will not doubt His kindly, loving hand:
E'en in the vale of shadows, with the cry
Of wild beasts near, my God doth still command!
His rod can smite—His staff great comfort give:
He speaks, and angry foes must stand aside:
He spreads a bounteous table, and I live,
And in His boundless wisdom e'er confide:
My head, unworthy though, my Lord anoints
With oil of gladness, and my faint heart cheers:
He fills my brimming cup, and me appoints
A place to serve through all the coming years.
Such goodness fills my heart with joy and praise:
Such mercy,—Ah. 'twere hard to understand!
But I will sing His grace through endless days,
And live and dwell for aye in Beulah Land!

SAFEGUARDING OUR NATIONAL FUTURE.

Who Are To Provide The Children Of The Future? What Can We Do About It?

By Luther K. Long.

"The Fruit of the Family Tree," by Albert Edward Wiggam, continues to be one of the most dilligently read of recent books. In the 18th chapter, "Can We Make Motherhood Fashionable?" he enters a strong plea for a larger proporation of births in our best families; for it is only thus that we can be sure of a truly prosperous nation. Mr. Wiggam says:

"For we must reckon always in forecasting our national future with the type that shall be the actual living individuals who dwell in that future. 'Our most precious legacy from the past is not its institutions, but its ideals.' A race of fools will waste any bequeathment whether it be an ideal or an empire. And to forecast whether our heritage will be dissipated we must reckon with the stern biological warnings of the mathematician. We must accept as a fact proved by Professor Karl Pearson, that one-fourth of the married people of each generation produce one-half the next.

"This is one of the great warnings which modern biology has issued to the statesmen.

"But, since in our time the lower, more incompetent one-half produce children at a faster rate than the other half, which is socially more adequate, the net result is that the lower one-half is producing about three-fourths of the next generation, while the upper half is producing the remainder. Such a program would wreck the stock of any breeder no matter how much time and money be expended on feeding, housing and sanitation. And in the long run such a program can work nothing but disaster to the human herd.

"But, if motherhood can once more be made a fashion among the better one-half, and sound housing, economic and labor conditions set up so that these stocks can be induced to produce more than their share; if the lower one-half, by the diffusion of birth control and many other measures which are not repressive nor lacking in true humanitarianism, can be so educated that it will produce less than its share, the central problem of race progress will be solved."

Sensible Mate Selection.

Discussing the importance of wisdom in marriage if a better breed of children is to result, Mr. Wiggam says:

"The psychologists have been studying this matter of mate selection. And they find it is not an unfathomable mystery, but as open to study as anything else. Courtship has propably been correctly described as 'a man pursuing a woman until she catches him. But what determined one particular man to pursue one particular woman and what led her to decide to catch him is not in the realm of the occult, nor is it a matter of fate, nor is marriage altogether made in heaven. It is a thing which, mostly without our knowing it, has been immensely influenced by our early education.

"Instead of this taking the romance out of love, as some have hastily argued, all this new and wonderful knowledge, it seems to me, has added to the great romance of love, marriage, and children. Can anything more completely blast the romance of love than defective, neurotic and uncontrollable children? Does anything keep the romance in love more permanently than healthy, happy, well-born children? Moreover, we know from many actual instances that when young men and women have grown up in the light of this new knowledge of heredity and its influence upon themselves and their future children, it has had a profound influence upon their choice of mates.

"When young men and women realize that they are the trustees and guardians of this precious heredity, carried in the tiny germ-cells; when they realize that the individual with whose heredity they unite their own means so much to their unborn children; when they see clearly that a marriage into strong, healthy stock means sound, intelligent children, it is bound to elevate the dignity, responsibility and beauty of marriage.

"The fact that they have learned that mate-selection largely determines the character, happiness and intelligence of their children makes this 'sweet fulfillment of the flesh' and sweeter fulfillment of the spirit the greatest and most romantic adventure that the human mind can conceive. Moreover, they see also that through their healthy, well-born children they can control almost the whole future social destiny of man.

"Of course many people, including many of our social workers, industrial leaders and politicians, exclaim: 'I don't believe in heredity—it is all bosh. There are Mr. and Mrs. Brown, both fine specimens of humanity, and yet their oldest boy drank himself to death and one of their daughters was a wayward, worthless girl. It is the kind of enviroment, the way you raise them that counts.' The way children are reared does count for a great deal; such uninformed persons fail to note two things that are obvious and one thing not so obvious. First, Mr. and Mrs. Brown did give their children a good environment, as good as that of any children in the neighborhood. Second, this wayward girl had two or three brothers and sisters who, under the very same environment, turned out all right. Third, if they will go back on both sides of the parents' ancestry they will likely find almost exact duplicates of both the wayward and the good children, or else the elements out of which such combination might easily have been made."

Man May Manage His Own Development.

That man is still undergoing processes that lift him up or pull him down is evident to every thoughtful person. Changes in body, mind, and spiritual aspiration—changes in ideals and purposes—are continually taking place. Progress along some lines is quite evident; while along other lines a retrograde movement is apparent. It is interesting to feel that in all this we may have a conscious and an increasing part, that we may contribute largely to the intelligence and happiness of future generations. Mr. Wiggam says.

"Races have probably fallen in the past from a reversed birth-rate, the upper section dying by race suicide while the lower and more incompetent have been left to occupy the empty shell of the national edifice. But these races knew nothing better to do. In our age the case is different. We know how. We not only have means of diffusing knowledge, but we have a wholly new body of knowledge to diffuse. We have learned more about heredity and the factors of race progress and decay in the past twenty years than in the previous twenty thousand. And I like to believe that humanity is going to be equal to the task of using this new knowledge in the problem of the management of its own evolution. The moment man organiezs his kind into groups to further his happiness and progress, that moment he largely takes his race out of the hands of brute nature and natural selection."

—The medical faculty of the University of Belinhas decided to exclude American physicians from clinics until German representatives are again admitted to all international scientific associations.

OUTDOOR AND INDOOR SMOKERS.

Will H. Brown.

Rev. S. L. Coward has an article in the Central Methodist in which he gives extracts from letters from friends concerning tobacco addicts. One was from a woman school teacher near Billings, Montana, where she boarded at a ranch house. She had noticed that the cow-boys smoked a great deal, and asked if the open life of the cowboy prevented their lungs from being as badly affected by smoking as the lungs of smokers in the cities. The foreman's wife invited her to the bunkhouse when she made up the beds. Here is the teacher's report.

"As this was Saturday I followed her, and she gave me a horrid object lesson that I will never forget. She had spread out a newspaper by the bed of an inveterate smoker, who had a peculiar cough, on which he had been spitting through the night. There was a mixture of red and black in the mucous he had spat up—the black from burnt paper he had inhaled, and the red was lung tissue or cell lining. Think of it—a man literally coughing up his lungs."

Not many smokers seem able to maintain self-control. The habit grows on them. There is an occasional exception. Nicholas Coundron the Greek-American tobacco king, is a moderate smoker, and has manufactured millions of cigarettes. He was 90 years of age last year. In an interview in the Chicago Tribune he said he began smoking when he was 20 and limits himself to two or three smokes a day, adding: "The men and women of today who smoke from ten to twenty cigarettes a day are simply POISONING THEMSELVES INTO THEIR GRAVES."

Observe that he did not begin smoking until he was 20; that he is a moderate smoker, and that he admits tobacco is a POISON.

REMINDER OF THE WORLD WAR.

The expense to the Government of its World War control of the railroads of the United States amounts to a total of $1,696,000,000. That is shown in a report just submitted to President Coolidge by James C. Davis, Director General of Railroads. With the report Mr. Davis sent his resignation as Director General, for his work is finished. That work is a remarkable achievement. In accepting the report and r signation, President Coolidge expressed to Mr. Davis his heartiest congratulations and referred to him as "a public servant who has performed a particularly efficient, able and difficult task."

When the railroads were turned back to their private owners after the World War the Government was faced with perhaps 50,000 lawsuits. Many of these suits were brought by private parties against the railroads during the period when they were under Government operation. The railroads also filed claims against the Government for a total of more than a billion dollars. Mr. Davis succeeded in settling every one of these lawsuits out of court, to the satisfaction of both the Government and the claimants.—Current Events.

—Ogden H. Hammond, of New Jersey, was appointed by President Coolidge last week as U. S. Ambassador to Spain. Mr. Hammond succeeds Alexander P. Moore, resigned, who has been Ambassador to Spain since 1923. Mr. Moore sailed for the United States last week.

HIGH COST OF WAR.

"The amounts spent by this Government in aid of agriculture and business, for science, education, better roads, and other constructive efforts are insignificant when compared with outlays due to war and national defense. This will be the situation as long as war is the method of settling international disputes. These facts should be faced squarely by those who clamor for reduced Government expenditures and at the same time oppose the world's effort to devise rational methods for dealing with international questions."—Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Each pastor and each worker in the conference has my very best wishes, and my most devout prayers in the work to which this new year is calling. May God grant to each of you a very happy and a very successful year. Our prayers should be so blended and our efforts should be so united as to insure the best year we have ever known as a conference. Our record of last year will be difficult to surpass; but by God's grace and power we should do better during 1926 than we did during 1925.

Many things pertaining to the development of the church we love are claiming and will be claiming our attention as the days of 1926 go slipping by. We can only live one day at the time, and so can only shoulder the responsibilities of one day at the time. Each day will be lived in the presence of our Lord, and should be spent as He may direct, remembering that it is to Him that we must give account in the final reckoning. I am sure every Christian worker in the conference will join me in this statement when I say, "I am glad that all final accounts must be rendered to God and not to men." This I say because God knows all and men can only know a part.

After Conference Adjustments.

The after conference adjustments have nearly all been made. Some of them have been unusually and needlessly difficult. One of the best men I ever knew said the other day, "It is a pity that anybody will make a difficult situation more difficult."

It seems now that we are headed toward a settlement of the last adjustment for the present. It may be that not everyone will be wholly satisfied when it is done; but we trust that every one concerned will at least believe that we have honestly done the best we knew to do.

I am trying to live in Matt. 7:12. Can't we as a conference live in that verse? Arthur Nash of Cincinnati is working it out in a big business in that great city, surely we can live it in church work.

Rev. E. G. Cowan.

I am glad to report that Brother Cowan is improving. On December 27, 1925 he was ordained to the gospel ministry in the Grace Methodist Protestant Hut, Greensboro, N. C. Dr. S. K. Spahr, Dr. C. L. Whitaker and Rev. Lawrence Little assisted in the service. Conference directed that we assist Brother Cowan and his family financially for a while. So on December 18th I mailed a letter to each Sunday school Superintendent in the conference in which I asked that each Sunday school take an offering for this family. Many have responded and we thank you. Some have written saying they will take this up later. We also thank you. Many others have not responded at all. We believe you will. Surely not one Sunday school will let a call like this go by unheeded. Please look after it soon so this may get out of the way of other claims. Thank you.

Rev. D. A. Braswell.

As soon as I read of the loss sustained by our brother, Rev. D. A. Braswell, in the burning of his home and all his household belongings, I wrote to him to get an estimate of his loss. This is in part his reply:—"We received your welcome letter this morning, for which you have our thanks. Our loss is over $5,000. We only had $2600 insurance on the house and contents. This does not include the loss of my daughter's and grand-daughter's clothing. What makes the loss so sad is the helplessness of my wife and the ever increasing expense. Please continue to pray for us."

In a later letter Brother Braswell says:—"It looks like we are ruined financially. I believe our God will bring good out of it all. We have received a number of nice letters, some donations. All we had saved in a lifetime is gone."

Now, brethren, it is not for me to tell you what to do in this case, nor is there any conference action saying "Help Brother Braswell." But surely every one of us will do something to share this loss with him. A loss of $2,400 is too heavy for us to allow him to bear alone. Speak of it to your people, and get many to help.

Brother Braswell is almost beyond that period in life when he has earning capacity. He is serving a mission field which has promised him a very small salary. It will really cost him half of what he gets, or more, to serve the work. Do you sympathize with him? If so how much? Write Brother D. A. Braswell, Concord, N. C., direct and tell him how much.

Church Extension.

Conference directed that February be made Church Extensiin month. During this month all charges are expected to collect the full quota for Church Extension. No church extension approperations were made during the last annual conference for Church Extension on any field. These approperations to be made by the Board after we have heard from the fields. Please get ready for it, knowing that the actions of the Board must be directed by the response of the churches.

Faithfully yours in His service.

A. G. Dixon.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—The West Lexington Sunday school began the year 1926 with a splendid record, there being 127 in Sunday school last Sunday morning. It was the largest attendance the school has registered in several weeks. The offering amounted to $5.71. Brother H. C. Koonts, the superintendent, was well pleased with the attendance for the first Sunday in the New Year. He asked all who would resolve to be present every Sunday during the year to indicate it by the uplifted hand. There were 82 who thus avowed they would endeavor to maintain a perfect attendance in Sunday school during the coming year.

The Men's Bible Class was re-organized last Sunday morning with the election of the following officers: C. B. Way, president; C. B. Yates, vise-president; Archie Miller, secretary-treasurer. Brother C. L. Hedrick, formerly of Mt. Carmel Church, has been teacher of the class for several weeks. The president appointed two committees at the conclusion of the teaching of the lesson last Sunday morning, and these were: Membership, R. H. Gibson, Chairman, Committee to visit the sick, G. A. Barber, Chairman. Other committee chairman will be appointed later. The class is delighted to have Brother Hedrick as its teacher, for he is an interesting and excellent teacher. The class will likely undertake some definite work aside from the study of the Sunday school lessons.

The Sunday night service was well attended, considering the fact that a rain was falling at the time of the service. About as many as usual were present. Our pastor, Brother Crutchfield, delivered a helpful sermon, using as a text, Rev. 3.8. The theme of the sermon was, "Opportunities for Service." It was a New Year's sermon and was enjoyed very much by the congregation.

The Methodist Protestant Herald has been given consideration by our pastor and also the superintendent of our Sunday school for the past few weeks. The people of our church have been urged to become subscribers to the paper, and the interest in the Herald is increasing among our people here.

Doubtless the readers of the Herald have already learned of the horrible accident which occured here on the night of December 31, when three members of one of the Lexington Fire departments were killed as a result of the overturning of the big fire truck used by the firemen. In addition to the three men killed, two others have been in a critical condition in a hospital here since the night of the tragedy, and little hope is entertain for their recovery. One of the men in the hospital, Henry C. Gibson, is one of our Sunday school members, being former secretary of the men's class. Special prayer was offered in Sunday school last Sunday for the two men in the hospital and for all of the relatives of the deceased firemen, two of whom lived almost in the shadow of West Lexington Church. The entire town of Lexington has been stirred as never before because of the surpassing tragedy of New Year's night.

Our services for next Sunday will consist of Sunday school in the morning and preaching by the pastor at 7 o'clock at night.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Randleman Charge.—Christmas exercises were held at Worthville, New Salem, and Mt. Lebanon. Each service was well attended, and seemed to be throughly enjoyed by every one.

On the day before Christmas Level Cross did a fine thing for the pastor and family. It was this: Miss Dolly Vickry and her sister, Miss Gladys, came over with a Ford carrying an abundance of various items such as any family finds useful and necessary. Some of the packages were marked denoting their origin, others were not. We regard Miss Dolly, the Sunday school superintendent, as being responsible for putting this fine expression across. We thank you, every one.

In addition to the above we were not forgotten by a goodly number who exemplified the spirit of Christmas in various ways—by cards, checks and miscellaneous gifts. Thanks for all.

The Ladies' Aid recently added a new door to the parsonage, which is a decided improvement. They have also installed a kitchen sink for our convenience, and for those who follow us as well. The ladies of the Aid Society desiring to do something especially for us, purchased and presented to us one ten pound turkey for Christmas. This expression of theirs is gratefully appreciated.

Miss Carnin VanWerry, one of our faithful members, and Sunday School teacher, and Urban Trogdon were married during the holidays.

Mrs. M. J. Hughes who has been ill for some weeks does not improve, we are sorry to say. A great and noble woman is she.

Wm. H. Neese.

Henderson.—We are glad to report that most of our sick folks are well or improving. Little Miss Elizabeth Hight who was operated on for appendicitis in Decemoer and little Jessie Baity who was seriously ill with pneumonia are 'most well now. Mrs. Sam Fox and Mrs. J. W. Hayes, Sr., are on the convalescent list also. Mr. T. T. Hicks is confined to his home on account of illness.

Several homes have been saddened by the loss of dear ones. Mrs. J. J. Taylor's by the going away of husband and father; Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Harris and other relatives by the death of their little grandson, Clarence Kerner, Jr. Our hearts go out in sympathy to each one of them.

At the last Ladies' Aid meeting, Mrs. S. R. Watson was elected president and Mrs. S. R. Harris, vice-president, Mrs. F. R. Harris, secretary, and Mrs. H. T. Powell, treas.

The Sunday school has put in a new hot-air furnace in the annex, which makes the building much more comfortable.

The Philathea class had charge of the Christmas program. They had an old fashioned Christmas tree for the little folks and a short program of songs and recitations. A free will offering was taken for Brother Cowan.

Last Thursday night the Philathea class held their monthly business meeting and semi-annual election. Mrs. J. M. Baity was elected president. Mrs. C. L. Finch, teacher.

Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Hunter are back from a pleasure trip to Greensboro to visit friends.

Mrs. S. R. Harris is in Philadelphia visiting her daughters.

We were glad to have our college boys and girls at home for the holidays.

Two of our young people were married on Christmas Day. Mr. Blannie Hight and Miss Mary Powell. Mr. Hight is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hight, and Mrs. Hight is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Powell.

Mebane.—On December 11th the Ladies' Aid Society held their bazaar and served supper. This was quite a success, about $60. being cleared.

December 17th the Ladies' Aid met with Mrs. J. E. Barnette; a fine attendance present. Several important matters were brought before the meeting and discussed. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Barnette served fruit salad. Christmas night a short program, under the direction of Mrs. A. H. Jobe and Mrs. P. U. Thompson, was given; following this every member of the Sunday school was given a treat consisting of oranges and apples. Then presents were taken from the big Christmas tree. This was indeed an enjoyable occasion.

We feel our report would be incomplete if we failed to mention our two missionary societies. In December the W. H. M. S. and W. F. M. S. held a joint meeting at the church. These societies are doing a great work and we feel that these organizations are a great asset to our church. New members were added at the December meeting.

Mr. Hery Smith, an aged confederate veteran, died at his home here December 24. His funeral being conducted by Dr. Johnson in the M. P. Church Christmas day. He was a member of this church and attended services when able; for sometime he had been in very feeble health.

We extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones.

Misses Elizabeth Nicholson, Pomona Johnson and Alta Allen, students at H. P. college, spent the holidays at their homes here.

Asheboro.—The work here seems to be starting off nicely and we are hoping for a good year. The congregations have been good both morning and evening and all the organizations seem to be functioning very satisfactorily. Yesterday we had 181 in Sunday school and almost a full house for preaching service.

At Thanksgiving we took our offering for the Children's Home and secured a reasonably good offering. At Christmas we had a beautiful little Christmas Pageant, directed by Miss Kate Bulla. Quite a good many of the members of the Sunday school were used in the pageant. The offering for the budget was twenty odd dollars.

A splendid informal reception was given in the church on New Year's eve and a large number of our people were present to enjoy the occasion. Then at 10:20 the Christian Endeavor Society took charge and had a splendid programme during the Watch Night service. Almost ever since we came here the young people had been talking about the Watch Night service and we wondered how they could make one so interesting. Now we know. When they started the service at 10:30 we wondered how they could keep going until midnight but found they had to leave off some of their programme as the midnight hour came all too soon.

The people here have been very kind to us and we have been the recipients of many valuable gifts during the holidays. Since Peter Slewfoot wrote his letter years ago about enumerating all the gifts I have always been content to leave off the enumeration. But we appreciated the gifts anyway and feel that we are in the hands of good friends.

J. E. Pritchard.

Siler City.—We had a good day at Siler City yesterday. The preaching services were well attended. The Sunday school did nicely under the leadership of Mr. E. D. Woody, there being 56 present to start the new year.

The Christian Endeavor Society discussed the topic, "God's Care." It was a well planned program. Special music by Mr. Ralph Fraizer and Miss Minnie Cooper, added much to the meeting.

Mr. Wade Siler and Mr. L. L. Wrenn have been ill for some time. We hope they will soon be well again. F. L. Gibbs.

Pine Grove, Kernersville Charge.—The writer greatly enjoyed worshiping with the people of her church during the holidays.

The Christmas entertainment was rendered on Wednesday night, December 23rd. The children carried out their part in an excellent manner, for which much credit goes to Mesdames Robah Warren and Ernest Crews for their untiring efforts in training the children.

The people seem to be highly pleased with the enthusiastic young man whom conference sent over to preach for us this year.

The first quarterly conference will be held at the Kernersville Church next Saturday, January 9th. All the official members are urged to be present.

The Christian Endeavor Society is a devout band of young people. They love the work. Pastor Love and his cousin met with them last Saturday night. The Society presented the pastor with a nice ring as a Christmas gift from the Endeavorers.

Pastor Love preached a very helpful sermon at 11 o'clock yesterday. At this service one young man united with the church.

Misses Blanche Ingram and Trevah Beeson from High Point College and Bessie Cooke of Guilford College were among the young people who spent the holidays at home with their parents.

With all good wishes to the Herald and its readers. Nelle Gray.

Flat Rock Circuit.—Our Christmas service was held at Flat Rock, Wednesday night, December 23rd. The children did nicely with their speeches and songs. They all seemed to enjoy it to the highest extent.

Our Sunday school is doing just fine, but the attendance is not as large as it was before Christmas; 51 were present last Sunday. We are planning to run the Sunday school all winter, and we hope that more people will soon take a better interest, especially the parents. Our superintendent is doing all he can to make it interesting for both young and old.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Ogburn will be glad to know that they are improving, as they have been ill for some time. They have been greatly missed at Flat Rock Church, and especially in the Sunday school work as they both are teachers.

Mr. Byrd Johnson has been very ill. He is another faithful member when-ever his health permits him to come.

Our prayer meeting is still progressing. We expect to have prayer meeting every Sunday night when the weather is suitable.

Asheboro.—Since our last report we have had our Christmas exercises. The Christmas sermon was preached by Rev. Paul S. Kennett on account of the pastor, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, being called away to conduct the funeral of Mr. M. L. Winningham at Giles Chapel, December 20, 1925. This sermon was greatly enjoyed as Mr. Kennett served as our pastor during the last three months of last conference year and Mr. Kennett is always welcomed back at any time. The special music, consisting of two anthems sung by the Senior Choir, was an item of the Christmas service greatly enjoyed by many as these anthems were beautifully rendered. The evening service of December 20th was given over to the Sunday school, a very effective Christmas pageant was presented under the direction of Misses Kate Bulla, Ethel Lovette and Esther Ross.

On December 27th, the coldest day for us this winter, we had a good sized congregation despite the weather, for both Sunday school and the preaching services. At the 11 o'clock preaching service Mr. Pritchard preached the New Year's sermon on "The Untraveled Part of God's Highway" which was one of the most wonderful sermons yet preached by Mr. Pritchard to the Asheboro congregation.

Thursday evening, December 31st, the Annual Watchnight Service was held by the C. E. Society in conjunction with the church. The first two hours of the evening were given over to the church reception after which the C. E. Society held the watch-night services. The custom of holding the watch night service has been observed by the C. E. Society here since its organization in 1919. This service is thought to be one of the best held in a long time, and the training which the young people are receiving through the C. E. Society has greatly pleased the pastor and the entire membership of the church.

Sunday morning, January 3rd, Mr. Pritchard preached on "What is a Man Worth" and made it quite clear that a man is not and cannot be measured as to his worth in dollars and cents, but rather by his accomplishments in deeds of worth and achievements that live on after him—these are valued higher than dollars. Burlington.—The first Sunday in the new year was a good one with the Burlington Church. All the services of the day were well attended, and a good spirit prevailed. The Baracas had a surprise for the Sunday school in the gift of 300 Rodeheaver song books. The gift was gratefully received, and hearty thanks erpressed to the Baracas. Our church is taking on new interest in music, and we are hopeful of added inspiration through this feature of our worship. One of the pastor'r pleasant duties of the day was to present a beautiful open face gold watch, with chain, to Brother George C. Smith. This was a Christmas present of the Baracas and was expressive of the high esteem they have for him as their teacher.

We were glad to have our young people home from their schools for the Christmas holidays. Our interest follows them as they return to their studies.. We trust that these days of their school life may mean happiness and usefulness for them in the years that are ahead.

Cupid has been busy with his dart in these parts, and some of our girls have been his happy victims. On Christmas eve Miss Rodema Sykes became the happy bride of Mr. John Lee Boswell, and just before Christmas Miss Mabel Martin was equally happy in being united in marriage to Mr. Perry Stines. We hope for these splendid young people long years of unmarred married life. We were glad to receive Mr. Stines into the church Sunday, also Miss Daisy Johnson, our Sunday school pianist. Each joined on confession of faith. This encourages us, as a start for the new year; and others are to follow.

Plans are being made for the winter months. It is our purpose to keep spring time in our spirits, let the thermometer caper as it may. Our senior C. E. Society is holding fourth Sunday services at the County Home. Their first service was held December 27 just after Christmas. A treat was carried out for the inmates and distributed in connection with the service. The C. E.'s report a delightful time, and I suspect it would be difficult to tell who was happier, they or the old people at the Home.

Our hearts go out in deep sympathy to Sister Emma Baulding, whose sister, Miss Margie Baulding, recently passed into the great beyond. It is comforting to know that she was so well prepared to go. May the Father of us all make his grace abound towards those who will feel most keenly this separation.

All of our regular services will be held next Sunday and we are hopisg and praying for another good day. S. W. Taylor.

THE NEW CRISIS IN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Professor Homer E. Wark.

It becomes more and more apparent that the missionary is working in a new world. He is dealing no longer with an Orient asleep, but with an Orient wide awke. We are confronted with an Orient that is awake to the fact that while he slept, strong men entered his house, and today are keeping him in relative slavery. He is determined to break this hold of the Westerner. He is not too sure whether the missionary is partly to blame for his present plight or not.

The people among whom the missionary is working are disillusioned about the West and its civilization. They are quite aware of our failures. This knowledge has led to cynicism about everything Western, including Christianity. In view of these facts, they deeply resent our attitude of superiority.

How shall the missionary deal with a world like that? He is conscious that the time has come for various readjustments in his methods and objectives. Is the missionary likely to throw away his real objectives? Many feel that he is. Some think he is in danger of turning aside from his real task and losing his way. Ought we to lament this situation or rejoice over it, The writer sees no occasion for alarm or disheartenment. The situation is normal. The adjustments can and must be made speedily.

Here at home we find that the old slogans and catchwords are outworn and useless. The old appeals and the old arguments are no longer persuasive. What does this mean? It means that we are in a new world so far as missions are concerned. Our outlook here as everywhere is greatly altered. A new interpretation is imperative. A rational apologetic for missions must be found. A new statement of the fundamental aims and objectives of missionary endeavor is essential. The whole philosophy of missions has been undergoing change, and only lately have we realized it. A new synthesis is needed, a synthesis that will reassure our supporting people at home, and carry the leaders of the new movement abroad with its message. To some degree the giving of the churches may lag until the motive and aim are made clearer. Until we can achieve that, there will be some measure of doubt, uneasiness, and fear.

In the meantime, there are a few things to remember, and these facts will carry us along until we achieve the new apologetic. Let our people be told that in no quarter is there a belief that he movement has failed. To a considerable degree, the problems of today on the fields are occasioned by our success. The missionary has not failed. He has on the whole done his work well. The new spirit and outlook of the Orient are in no small measure due to his influence. Among other things, he has labored so well that today there are rising churches of promise and power. These churches are coming to self-consciousness and are beginning to act for themselves, as we should expect them to do. Their sense of independence is the best proof that Christianity has now become real with them. There is nothing in this fact to occasion discouragement, except to such as may have dreamed of some sort of domination over these churches. We must respect these peoples all the more for the spirit of freedom and independence they now show.

Again, let it be said that the missionary is not done with his task, but is needed as much today as ever before. No one wants the missionary to leave. No one is asking that he return home. It is true, however, that the feeling exists that his relation to the movement must now be quite different from what it has been in the past. He must now make way for the leadership of the nationals. Formerly, of necessity, he made decisions and constructed policies. Now he must allow the churches to express themselves in all such matters. Much of the detail of the work will now be done by nationals. The missionary will be left freer than he has ever been before to be a spiritual and intellectual leader. In other words, his position will be enhanced.

Once more, let it be said that there is no tendency to reject Jesus Christ throughout the Orient today. There is a good deal of opposition in some quarters to the Christianity of our missions and churches, but it is rarely that any opposition to Jesus is expressed In most parts o the Orient there is glad recognition of the uniqueness of Jesus Christ. These people are quite as ready as we are to accept Him as the consummate revelation of God. Many of them believe that His gospel affords the best basis of a new and better civilization. They are ready to acknowledge Him as he best international bond. But they are insisting upon their right to interpret Him for themselves. They are far from willing to regard our interpretation of Him as final.

These peoples are also unwilling to accept the ecclesiasticism of the West. The Western form of Christianity will not likely win the Orient. The Eastern peoples are now rethinking Jesus and His gospel. A new interpretation will be coming along before many years pass. They are not going to accept Western domination in church any more than in state. They demand entire freedom. In all this there is no occasion for alarm, only cause for thanksgiving. No better proof that Christianity has taken root could be found. We now know that it has reached down deep into their lives, and is a profound reality. Our work of introducing Christ to them has succeeded.

Finally, let it be said that there is the same need of Jesus Christ today that there has been in the years past. We are now hearing much about the good aspects of the non-Christian religions. The civilizations and cultures of these lands have been deeply studied, and a larger measure of value has been found than we had supposed existed. All this is well. The presentation of these peoples by missionaries has been one-sided and in a measure unfair. We can well afford to know the best about them. But after all is said in this connection that can be said, few will question the Orientals' need of Christ. The best relates simply to a portion of the people, and the need of the masses is only too apparent. The recognition of the good can never vacate the missionary program. Even after these peoples have become literate and their economic level has been raised, there will still be the need of spiritual help.

No, the missionary is not losing his way. He is simply readjusting his program to the new day, and getting ready for more successful advance. There is no less loyalty to Jesus Christ than there was a quarter o a century ago. There is no less expectation of His triumph than our fathers entertained. Missionary methods must now be altered, in order that Christ may best be exalted who is the same yesterday, today, and forever.—Zion's Herald.

HOME MISSIONS.

Since accepting the office of Secretary of the Board of Home Missions, October first, my time has been largely occupied in becoming acquainted with the detailed work of the office and familiarizing myself with the duties of the office, as applied to the annual conferences and churches where the Board has extended its activities. In addition I have attended three annual conferences, viz. Eastern, North Carolina, and Mississippi, and visited churches in Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas City.

My first official visit was to the Eastern Conference which was held in Bridgeton, New Jersey, in October. With the exception of the Mississippi Conference, which I attended a year ago, it had never been my privilege to visit any of our annual conference except Maryland, to which I belong.

The welcome I received from the brethren of the Eastern Conference, and the cordial greeting from the newly elected President, Rev. Roby F. Day, D. D., a personal friend for many years, made me at once to feel very much at home. With the other official representatives of the denomination, who were present, I was given ample time to present the interests of the Board of Home Missions, and was assured of the full co-operation of the Conference in extending the work of our Lord's Kingdom through our beloved church. The session of the Conference was not only a pleasant one but encouraging in the evidences of progress manifested in every department of its activities.

I called the attention of the Conference to the need of a close relation existing between the Church Extension Society of the Annual Conference and the Board of Home Missions. I wish to call the attention of all the annual conferences to this. The Board of Home Missions should, as far as possible, co-operate with the Church Extension Boards. In most cases the Church Extension Boards are in closer touch with the local work that is being done, and therefore better prepared to advise and supervise.

The Board of Home Missions has rendered assistance to a number of churches within the present bounds of the Eastern Conference. The only one now being helped is Trinity, Atlantic City, of which Rev. George D. Jones is pastor. It is to be hoped that a new church building will be erected there in the near future. As I see it, the Eastern Conference has a great field. No annual conference in th

Parker.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Parker passed away December 25, 1925, aged three years, four months and six days. Little Ruth suffered very much. Everything that loving hands and skilful physicians could do failed to keep her alive. She first took pneumonia and then other diseases set in. She was taken to Lincolnton hospital before she died. Little Ruthalthough very young had learned to sing several songs. Her little voice will be hushed in the home, her mother will no longer hear her sing, "Little ones like me," and, "At the Cross," but no doubt she is singing those very songs in heaven. She was laid to rest at Friendship Church, Fallston, December 27th under a beautiful mound of flowers. Reporter.

A fine report this week. West End continues the college column while Charlotte goes above Littleton on the A. C. B., and seven other names are added to the list on the A. C. B. We bid all these welcome and pray God's abundant blessings on them.

Asheboro takes first place on the G. C. B., and West End second. Littleton again is forced down the list and comes in third. Last report Littleton stood alone, this week there are fourteen entries. We welcome all these and bid them God-speed on their mission of light.

Remember that February is Church Extension Month, and that the work done on our Church Extension Fields this year will depend entirely on what the charges do in collecting Church Extension Money during February. Men, pastors and laymen, I am calling on you to make this a test of co-operation—to make an intensive effort all together to raise the entire amount of our Church Extension money. God knows that the conference needs it and we all know it. He knows too that we can do it if we try. Will you try for Him. The Christmas Offering is not all in. Those who have reported have done well. I am hoping that every church has been loyal and responsive to the request of the conference. May our God bless you as He can.

State St. Church.—Last Sunday was the second anniversary of the organization of our Sunday school. On the first Sunday in January, 1924, the Sunday school was organized in the Masonic Hall. It was the day that is referred to as the "cold" Sunday, and cold it surely was. Only 13 were present that day. 13 seems to be quite a lucky number in the M. P. denomination. From 13 our Sunday school has grown to be many times double that number. The First M. P. Church in High Point was organized with 13 charter members. Many other great things in the denomination have started with the so called unlucky number of 13.

The Christmas program was well rendered by the children and some of the young ladies on Sunday night before Christmas, quite a large crowd attended and all voted the entertainment a success. On Wednesday night following the C. E. Society gave a social entertainment that was much enjoyed by all present. There were games and contests and a spelling match, after which delicious home made candy was served. The children received their treats on Thursday afternoon.

Miss Cleo Spainhour of Greenville, S. C., spent the past two weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Bethea. She is quite a talented musician and reader and delighted us with recitations and music on several occasions. We all hope she comes again and comes often.

Mrs. Bethea had another good surprise for us last Sunday morning when she presented the church a lovely communion set. One of the most modern and convenient and also one of the most beautiful. Mrs. Bethea is one of the dearest women. I hope she knows how much we all love and appreciate her.

The Womans' Foreign Missionary Society will meet Thursday at the home of the president, Mrs. F. J. Cox.

The C. E. Society and some of their friends enjoyed a watch night party last Thursday night at the home of Mrs. A. H. Evans.

Gillburg.—We are very glad to say that we are doing better work in our Sunday school than we did last fall. Mr. Brannock Newman is our new superintendent and I am sure if all follow him and cooperate with each other we will have a fine Sunday school.

Last Sunday, January 3, at 3:00 o'clock P. M., our pastor, Rev. M. P. Chambliss, preached, his subject being: "Is the world growing Better?" The crowd was rather small but the sermon was enjoyed by all and we hope helpful.

The pastor and the stewards will meet next month, hoping to carry across, "The Every Member Canvass." We sincerely hope that there will be success.

Cleveland Circuit, Kistler Church.—Our pastor the first Sunday preached a good sermon. We are always glad to hear him; he always has something good to tell us. We are starting off for the new year by receiving five fine members; four from the Baptist and one from the M. E. Church. We are having the best Sunday school that we ever have had. Greater interest is being taken in the lessons and the song services. We are expecting more to join next preaching day.

Cleveland circuit is in the best shape that she has ever been in a long time. Pray for us.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for January 17. Great Ideas that have Spurred People to Action. Isa. 6:1-8; 2 Sam. 7:1-3.

Plans For The Meeting.

Draw upon the blackboard in rough outline an open book, making the drawing as large as the blackboard space will allow. On the left-hand page of the book write the names of great men who have been founders of great ideas, such as Abraham, Moses, Lincoln, General William Booth, Robert Livingstone, Washington, Carnegie, Roosevelt, Wilson, St. Paul, Savonarola, etc. Leave the other page blank until after the meeting is opened. After all have taken part who will, ask the members to think of the ideas those men have advanced. As they bring them out, place the idea opposite the name of the man who has advanced it, on the other page, for instance, "American Independence" after Washington's name, "World-wide Evangelization" after St. Paul, etc.

A Suggested Poster.

On a large piece of card-board, print in big capital letters, "A GREAT IDEA." Then in smaller letters, place an announcement of the meeting, hour, topic, leader, etc., and at the bottom of the page the words, "At Christian Endeavor Tonight—Come!"

Appropriate Hymns.

The following hymns, selected from our Methodist Protestant Hymnal, will be appropriate: No. 102, "I sing the almighty power of God"; No. 115, "God moves in a mysterious way"; No. 216, "Holy Ghost, with Light Divine"; No. 302, "Take my Life, and let it be."

Will you debate?

Suggested topic for debate: Resolved, that poets contribute more great ideas to mankind than statesmen.

Item For The Information Committee:

Endeavorers all over the world are making plans for the observance of Christian Endeavor Week, January 31st to February 7th. During this week, the movement will be forty-five years old, having been organized by Dr. Francis E. Clark on February 2, 1881. In recognition of his valued leadership during these years in which he has never accepted a penny's salary as President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, but has supported himself by his writings and lectures, the Endeavorers of the world are planning to raise $100,000 as a "Francis E. Clark Recognition Fund." During the life-time of Dr. and Mrs. Clark the income from the fund will be given to them. At their death and ever after the fund will be kept intact and the interest used in sprading Christian Endeavor, the movement for which Dr. Clark gave so much.

Christian Endeavor Doings.

On Christmas Eve, the society of Pleasant Grove Church went to High Point on an errand of mercy, supplying a needy family with a chicken, two cakes, apples, oranges, candy, toys and other necessary articles.

The societies of Greensboro organized themselves into carolling bands and went in several groups to different parts of the city to sing Christmas carols to shut-ins, aged, etc., Grace Church, under the leadership of Paul W. Rawlins, had a large number of Endeavorers to participate.

Please Report.

Please write to Rev. Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade St., Greensboro, whenever your society does anything unusual, so that other folks may know about it. We want this page to be full of interesting items from our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A Book A Month For Superintendents.

Surely if anybody needs to read and study, it is the Superintendent of a Sunday school. Nobody in the entire church program, except possibly the pastor, has a greater responsibility. No Superintendent is worthy of his place who is not willing to read and study in order to do his work more effectively. He ought to subscribe to and read regularly his own church papers. In addition, in so far as he is able, he should read good religious magazines and books.

The International Journal of Religious Education—by the way, the best paper in its field—has completed a list of books suitable for a Sunday school Superintendent and recommends that one book be read each month. All of these may be secured at the prices quoted from The Methodist Protestant Book Concern, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md. The list follows:

January. "Organization and Administra- $1.25.

February: "Memorial Biography of Marion Lawrance," by Lawrance, $4.00

March: "My Message to Sunday School Workers," by Lawrance, $2.00.

April: "The Sunday School at Work in Town and Country," By Brabham, $1.50.

May: "The Successful Sunday School at Work," by Leavell, $2.00.

June: "One Hundred Projects for the Church School," by Towner, $1.60.

July: "A Complete Guide to Church Building," by Burroughs, $2.50.

August. "The Church-School Blue Print," by Lawrance, $1.50.

September: "Church School Administration," by Fergusson, $1.75.

October: "The Sunday School Secretary," by McEntire, $1.50.

November: "Devotional Leadership," by Verkuyl, $1.25.

December: "Psychology of Leadership," by Tralle, $1.75.

If any superintendent cannot read one a month, it would be fine to read as many as possible in the course of the year. The officers of the Board of Young People's Work have a number of these books in hand and would be glad to lend them to superintendents who are interested but do not care to go to the expense of purchasing the books outright. May we lend them to you?

Sunday School Happenings.

Brother Braswell reports that new Sunday schools have been organized at North Charlotte and at Spencer. We wish these new schools the very best success in their great work.

A very interesting contest has been held during the month of December between the Sunday schools of the four M. P. Churches of Greensboro as to the percentage of attendance, based on the enrollment at the first of the month. All of the schools report increased interest because of the contest, several new scholars, and general awakening as to the value of the Sunday school work. The results of the contest were as follows: St. Pauls won first place with an average attendance of 77.7 percent; Calvary came next with 67.7. percent, with Grace a close second, attaining 67.5. percent; West End was fourth with 47.2 percent.

It is proposed to continue this contest during January, February, and March.

The Greensboro Institute for Sunday school workers will be held at Park place Methodist Church next Sunday to Tuesday, January 10-12. All Sunday schools workers are invited to attend.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING IN YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK? Let us know about it.

Albemarle.—As things have just about settled down to normal conditions, and we have collected ourselves, I will attempt to let you hear from this part of the work.

We arrived here after some delay caused by sickness, and found the work moving along nicely. The people were in the midst of their preparation for Christmas.

The Sunday school, under the splendid leadership of the fine superintendent, Mr. Laster Hatley, gave a Christmas program, consisting of a pageant and music by the choir and orchestra. The program was under the direction of Mrs. Carl Moton, assisted by Miss Blanche Furr at the piano. The pageant was followed by the unburdening of the beautiful Christmas tree of its many gifts.

In all the hurry and excitement over the Christmas preparation they did not forget to show their kindness and hospitality in entertaining us in their homes. And then, on Wednesday evening after we had moved in to the parsonage on Monday, about forty of the good people piled the table and stacked the floor with good things to eat.

Things are moving along well, it seems. We have had a very large congregation at each service. Interest in the Junior Christian Endeavor work has been revived. The young people also met last Sunday evening and re organized the Senior Society. They resolved, it being the first of the year, to make it a great success. H. W. Kelly, Pastor.

LOVE'S GIFTS.

E. G. L.

"Gold, frankincense, and myrrh. The Wise Men must have been very rich to bring such gifts! I wish I could give Christ something costly and rare!" sighed Margaret, a few days before Christmas.

"Like attar of roses!" exclaimed Mildred. "I priced that once in a drug store, and it was ten dollars an ounce!"

"As precious as the ointment of spikenard in the alabaster box, which the woman poured on His head."

"But He is not here now, in the flesh, and we could not give it to Him if we had it. We might carry it to the altar, and leave it there."

"Perhaps He would not be pleased with such offerings now," said Margaret, doubtfully.

"Instead of giving Him gifts, we give them to each other," mused Mildred. "I suppose this is pleasing to Him if we give them in the right spirit."

"If we expect nothing in return. I think kind deeds are also gifts, and He said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me.' "

"We ought not to forget the aged, at Christmas time," said Mildred. "Aunt Sally Brown and Uncle Silas are both eighty years old."

"Aunt Hilda West and Uncle Henry, too," added Margaret, eagerly. "Think of the gingerbread dolls and the delicious seed cakes that Aunt Sally and Aunt Hilda used to make for us!"

"And the rides Uncle Silas and Uncle Henry have given us with old Nancy and Judy!"

"Let's invite the four to our house for Christmas," suggested Margaret. "I'm sure father and mother will approve and will help us to give them a good time."

"That's a fine idea!" agreed Mildred.

Christmas was on Thursday. During Tuesday night several inches of snow fell. Wednesday dawned bright and clear.

"There's just enough snow to make good sleighing!" cried Mildred, jubilantly.

"Yes, and we'll go for your guests, this afternoon," promised father.

Directly after dinner he harnessed Darkey and Joan into the "pung," and he and Mildred drove away, while mother and Margaret were still busy with preparations for the festivities.

Aunt Hilda had just finished "doing the dishes" when the little black horses trotted into the yard. Uncle Henry was filling up the wood-box.

"You both are to put on your things and come to my Christmas party," announced Mildred after the greetings.

"I've asked Sam Dunn to look out for things here," added father, "and we will bring you home."

Mildred rushed into the "spare" bedroom, and brought out Aunt Hilda's hood and cape, while father hurried Uncle Henry into his overcoat. Before the two old people had recovered from their surprise they were being whisked away toward the Brown house.

Aunt Sally and Uncle Silas were taking their after dinner nap in the high-backed chairs before the fire.

Mildred gave each of them a loving shake. "Come to our house and dream of Santa Claus tonight," she said gaily.

They stared at her incredulously, but she only laughed and told them that she and father had kidnaped them, and they must come right along. Father filled up the kitchen stove and said Sam Dunn would look after the fire and feed the hens. Then the astonished couple were wrapped up and helped into the pung.

"This is going some!" chuckled Uncle Silas as the blacks trotted briskly along. "'Most as fast as an auto."

"Fifteen miles an hour. That's safe driving, and they don't 'skid' a bit!" laughed father.

In half an hour the nimble feet had traveled the seven miles. Margaret heard the sleigh bells and flung the door wide open. The guests were given a warm welcome, and soon felt the festive air that filled the house.

"Seems's if I was a young'ter again, and going to hang up my stocking!" declared Uncle Silas as they sat in the living-room around the fire, after supper.

"You are! We're all going to hang up our stockings!" announced Margaret.

"Hurrah!" exclaimed father. "Let's get right about it."

"But we have no stockings here except those we are wearing," demurred Aunt Sally.

"Yes, you have," replied Mildred, "for I took one for each of you from the line behind the stove. I nabbed Aunt Hilda's too. Here they are!" she continued, fishing them out and handed them to their owners. "And here are needles and thread and lots of ribbon to tie them up!"

"Women's stockings are so much longer than men's they hold twice as much things," playfully grumbled father as he approached the fireplace. "Well, I see one must be in front, so Santa will know to whom it belongs."

"Oh, Father!" laughed mother, "I'm ashamed of you."

"Well, I don't really expect anything but a lump in it from a flying reindeer," remarked father, mildly.

Aunt Hilda mentioned the stockings were all hung from the shelf above the fireplace.

"Now we must go to bed," said Aunt Hilda. For she suspected that the girls wished to prepare some little surprises.

"I don't feel a mite sleepy," objected Uncle Henry. "I never do."

"Aren't you tired from your ride?" asked Mildred politely, with mock seriousness.

"Not much, but I guess I'll go to bed soon," replied Uncle Henry as he noted Aunt Hilda's warning glance. "Suppose you get up quite early," he added with assumed indifference.

"You may get up as early as you want to," smiled Margaret, "and the rest of us will try and be on hand for breakfast."

The girls lighted two bayberry candles and escorted their guests upstairs to adjoining rooms where everything was cozily comfortable. Then, after loving good-nights, they hurried back.

As the clock struck twelve Uncle Silas rose to a sitting posture, got out of bed, and stealthily tiptoed downstairs to the living-room. The coals were still bright in the fireplace and revealed another night-clad figure near it.

"What are you doing here?" asked Uncle Silas in a hoarse whisper.

"Same as you are," giggled back the other, sheepishly. "They're chock-full, and I smell peppermints," he added happily. Then they both tiptoed back to bed.

The next morning Father remarked as he viewed the bulging stockings, "It looks as if Santa had been here!"

"I know—(bang!)—he came!" observed Uncle Silas as he glanced at Uncle Henry.

"Well, I never could eat till I'd looked [illegible] stockings, and I guess you youngsters feel the same," grinned father. "So [illegible]."

"There's something hard in the toe of mine!" announced Uncle Silas.

"It begin at the toe," suggested Aunt Sally as she drew out some shining knitting-needles from hers.

"Land!" exclaimed Uncle Silas, bringing forth and unwrapping a soft package. "For [illegible]," he read.

Uncle Henry and father had similar gifts; [illegible] Hilda and mother, needles. "A good [illegible], girls," remarked mother, "to give us something with which to make other presents!"

"We thought so," replied Mildred, complacently.

"The man whose wife is the fastest knitter will wear his mittens first, and Sally's husband will be the last!" observed Sally's husband, slyly.

"Don't brag, Silas," she warned him, "or you won't try to learn."

"I'll lend them," promised Silas, magnanimously, and they all laughed.

[illegible] read "Dan'an-[illegible]" [illegible] for everyday use, and white [illegible] for [illegible]. The women and [illegible] had [illegible] ones. There were [illegible] with pockets for [illegible] and there were peppermints for [illegible]. Uncle Silas discovered that the [illegible] hard article in the toe of his hose was a jack-knife. Similar ones appeared from the other men's stockings.

"Now we can whittle and talk!" remarked [illegible] with satisfaction.

"We'll have breakfast first," replied mother, "or [illegible] must be cold!"

After breakfast was over and the dishes washed, the "boys" held the yarn for the "girls" to wind.

"We'll get dinner while you knit," said Mildred.

Together with all the "fixin's," and a huge plum pudding, made a beautiful Christmas feast.

A small tree, gay with greeting cards, popped corn and bags of candy, was enjoyed in the afternoon. In the evening the women knitted and sewed while the men whittled and told stories. Then they all went to bed to dream of the happy day.

The next morning, after breakfast, father harnessed the little black horse and drove them around to the door. Grateful tears shone in dim, old eyes as good-bys were said.

"We'll never forget the wonderful time you have given us, lassies!" declared Uncle Silas with emotion.

"God bless you all!" said Aunt Hilda, fervently. "For it's Christ's own spirit that dwells in you."

In the evening mother and the girls had a twilight talk. Margaret spoke again of the Wise Men and of their rich gifts to the new-born Babe.

"Yet we have been happy in giving little, inexpensive things," mused Mildred.

"'And when they had opened their treasures,'" mother quoted. "When you open the treasure-chest of love," she added softly, "the smallest and humblest gift is precious to the dear Christ."—Zion's Herald.

ROSELLA'S GOLD MINE.

"No, Rosella, there's not a single thing you can do to help; until we get the attic cleaned you can't possibly settle your playroom. Run outdoors and play in the yard; you ought to be glad to have such a nice yard to play in after that tiny paved courtyard you had in the city."

"But, motherrr," wailed Rosella pitifully, "I have no one to play with me."

"Well," sighed her mother, "you'll just have to do the best you can. As soon as school starts you'll make some friends; at least I hope so. Now, Martha, I'll help you with that mattress."

Rosella, standing forlornly in the doorway, watched her mother and the stalwart maid, Martha, carry the mattress up the curving stairway. Housecleaning and settling weren't much fun, but they were better than nothing. Oh, any amount better! Closing the door behind her, the discontented little girl made her way to the swing which hung from the branch of a huge oak tree in the back yard. What good anyhow was a back yard full of trees all your own unless you had some one to play in it with you? Back and forth, back and forth, swung Rosella disconsolately, growing lonesome and more lonesome every instant. To move into a new place and not to know a soul, spring vacation time, too, with no chance to make friends even till school starts. If Rodney were only a girl now instead of a boy, he'd do—until she could get some one else. But gracious! he made friends as fast as rolling off a log. Picked up with the boy next door, and they'd gone fishing early in the morning. There wasn't any little girl next door, of course there wouldn't be; even if there had been, she couldn't get to know her so quick, girls just didn't get acquainted as quickly as boys do.

"Good night, I just can't stand it another minute!" cried the little girl jumping down from the swing. "I'll just die of lonesomeness, if I don't at least see some one good and quick."

So out on the front walk flounced Miss Rosella Lance Wheaton. Not a person in sight on the quiet village street—so different, so very different from the city where Rosella had always lived.

"I'll walk till I meet some one," decided the small person. "And I'll speak to 'em, too," she boasted to herself. "I declare I'll grow dumb as dumb if I don't talk to somebody."

Walking along under the trees which were fast filling with leaves, she thought timidly: "But what'll I say to 'em?" The sunshine, falling in splashes over her dress and shoes, seemed to furnish her with an answer. "I'll just say: 'It's a lovely day,' and then I'll say: 'Isn't it?' so so they'll have to answer."

Scarcely had she decided upon this before a man came in sight, a man with a wheelbarrow. When he came closer she saw it was full of black earth. Nearer still he came, till he was only a few feet away. Rosella moistened her dry lips: precious, what was it she intended to say! Oh, go—but the man had passed. No, it would never do to run after him and say: "It's a lovely day, isn't it," Besides there was a little girl less than a block away; she'd just say it to her and see how it worked.

The little girl had a pink gingham dress with a black sailor tie, also very dark hair and blue eyes. And when the blue eyes were very close they suddenly turned and looked straight into Rosella's. And Rosella's dropped, not exactly with a bang, but something very much like it—so embarrassing it proved to look straight into those eyes of a little girl she didn't even know. Not a word could she say, but walked stiffly on. A boy passed, two men and another little girl, but she didn't even raise her eyes: she knew now that she wasn't going to be brave enough to speak to any one.

Her eyelashes filled drippingly with tears, and she wicked them away impatiently. "No use crying, 'cause I don't know how to make friends; nobody likes cry-babies," she sobbed. "But it's just dreadful not to have any friends. A poor, friendless, little girl, that's what I am. Friendless, friend-less," keeping time with her dragging step, poor Rosella chanted the hateful word. No wonder her eyelashes filled blurringly, and spilled tears all down her cheeks.

"I'll get drowned, I will, if I don't watch out," whimpered Rosella, producing a handkerchief and mopping away at the deluge. "I—I d-don't see where all the tears come from."

But on the instant almost, the two salty little fountains ceased running. Surprise did it, unbelieving, questioning amazement. On a terrace of green grass a straggling row of bright red tulips wound and curved itself into a sign "Home of the Friendless." Funny, but that's what it spelled. Twice Rosella read it wonderingly, three times; she was not dreaming, that sign was really there. And back of it, beyond a stretch of green grass, stood a big red brick building, and again over the door in regular school-book letters, not flower ones at all, was that strange impossible to believe sign.

Orphans' Home, old ladies' homes, and old men's homes, Rosella, of course, had heard about. But a home for the friendless; how lovely for anybody to think of that! And here also was one of that very sort of people had walked straight to it; it seemed like a fairy tale. In wonder Rosella started to walk around the block which held this strange building and its big grounds, and before she had taken many steps she heard children's voices. Quickening her pace, she came upon a playground with see-saws and swings, slides and merry-go-rounds, every one overflowing with children laughing, squealing, filling the air with their shouts.

So these were all friendless children like—like herself: she wasn't the only one who couldn't make friends. A warm, comforting feeling crept into Rosella's heart. Oh, so many times her mother had said: "Dear, dear, I never saw a child like you!"

Surely her mother didn't know that there were whole homes for just such people. Inside they must teach them to make friends with each other.

Pressing her face against the high wire netting that shut off the playground from the street, she watched the gay antics of the children, frankly envying them. How could any one get into such a place?

"Hey there, helle, little girl," called out a red-headed boy, "what d'you think you're looking at?"

"Oh!" gasped Rosella, taking her courage in both hands. "I just was wondering how folks get into such a place. I'm one of 'em, you see, and how can I get in?"

"One of 'em?"

"Friendless I mean," explained Rosella eagerly.

"Oh," said the boy, "that! Why—why you walk around to the front door and tell 'em so. Un huh, and if they do let you in, I'll toss you up in the swing, honest I will."

Rosella's heart almost failed her at the thought of ringing the front door bell, but the knowledge that there were so many others in the world like herself lent her courage.

"Please," she said timidly to the tall woman in a nurse's white dress who answered her ring, "I'm friendless just like all the rest, and we jus moved to town, and—and school won't—won't start for most a week, and—and I never could make friends easy, and—and a boy says he'll swing me if I get in. Please, oh, please can I?"

A few questions offered by the lady in white and earnestly answered by the eager Rosella, then the child found herself admitted to the joyous excitement of the playground. True to his word, the red-headed boy swung her high in one of the big swings, found a place for her, too, with a dozen other boys and girls in the merry-go-round and piloted her from one joy to another. Wasn't this far and away better than an empty back yard? Well, it just was, "And best of all," thought Rosella in high excitement, "any time at all I can come here. Wasn't I lucky, lucky, to walk right to it?" With such pleasant thoughts hopping about inside her small head, she romped with the others until—well, until the afternoon suddenly was gone, and the kind lady in white was reminding her that it was time to go home for dinner.

"Andrew, our houseman, is taking the bus down your way," she remarked pleasantly; "he'll drop you at your door. And remember whenever you feel friendless, dear, come visit us again."

"Oh, I will," cried Rosella. "I never knew there was such a lovely, kind place as this. I thought, and mother thought I guess, too, that I was just about the only person in the world who couldn't make friends. She sure will be surprised when I tell her."

And when a few minutes later Rosella, deposited at her door by the jolly old Andrew did tell her mother, the good woman was even more surprised than the little girl had expected.

"Rosella, Rosella," she sighed impatiently "I don't believe there's another child like you in creation; there you went up to that matron and told her you were friendless when you have a good home and parents, to say nothing of a healthy young brother thrown in. Didn't you know the home of the friendless is just another name for orphans' home?"

"No, ma'am," said Rosella slowly. "I thought it was a new kind of place for queer folks like me that couldn't make friends. But anyhow I liked it, and they asked me to come again. I can go, oh, I can, can't I?"

"I declare," Mrs. Wheaton eyed her young daughter's face quizzically. "I do declare it's the very first time I knew a child to beg to actually beg to go an orphan asylum. But seeing you've set your funny little heart on it, I don't see any reason why you shouldn't."

And that night when Mr. Wheaton came home and heard of Rosella's thrilling discovery, he laughed uproariously and then said: "Well, well, did our timid little girl find a whole gold mine of friends already? Rosy my dear, your old dad's proud of you."

Rosella glowed happily under his praise and deep down in her heart she was proud of herself, too. Her after lunch stroll had taken all the lonesomeness out of the new town, and when school should start—well somehow she felt confident now that she'd make a whole lot of friends there, too.—Myra A. Wonn, in The Continent.

Friendship, Stanly Station.—Due to the extreme cold, we were deprived of our usual service December 31. We have started this year 1926 with a stronger determination to do a better work this year than we did last.

Yesterday, Mr. Ridge delivered a striking sermon; he did not preach very long as some of his preaching hour was used in electing officers and teachers for the year. Most all the teachers were re-elected for another year.

Secretary, Hugh Hankey; Reporter, Grace Hatley; Pianist, Miss Minnie Sue Sides; choir leader, D. W. Sides.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, both in attendance and collection. Sunday school now at 9:45 instead of 10.00.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Hankins Chapel, Litteleton Charge.—We are still working. Our Sunday school is growing; we are doing splendid work. We can only express our thankfulness to the conference for sending us our new preacher, Mr. J. F. O'Briant, of whom we are all very proud. December 21, 1925, 7:30 P. M., with the help of the public school teachers, a Christmas program and a Christmas tree were given at the church. On Christmas day Mr. O'Briant rendered one of his splendid sermons to a number of people, which they all enjoyed very much.

With best wishes to the Herald and best for a happy New Year. M. A. H., Reporter.

Johnsville Charge.—The good people of this charge were very thoughtful of pastor and family during the Christmas season. At Tabernacle we received sausage, canned fruit, $10.00 in cash, and other tokens of kindness. The good people of Myriah gave us an old fashion pounding. When we had taken inventory of our stock we found we had a good supply of flour, sausage, honey, canned fruit, pickles, oranges, soup, and many other useful articles. For fear we might omit some we will not attempt to give names. The Lord knows each one who took part in this and he will reward them. We appreciate these tokens of kindness more than we can express in words. But what we appreciate most is the fine spirit back of each gift. We were assured before we took up our duties as pastor of this charge, that we had good people to serve. The more we mingle with them the more we are convinced that we are serving a good people. There seems to be a dein carrying out the purpose of the annual conference. Pray for the boards and agencies that they may be led to put the money where it is the best place, and we hope it will be carried out.

Bethel, Mocksville Charge.—A Christmas program was given by the children December 24th, which was enjoyed very much by all present. The children did their part well. Santa Claus also came for the children at Bethel. Candies are filled with nice presents for each one. Following this Santa Claus came in with a large sack on his back, and passed out the candies which made them very happy indeed.

We have Sunday reorganized our Sunday school for the coming year. Officers, J. W. Gartner, Supt.; C. S. Sammons, Assistant; Greg Foster, Sec'y., and Lillie Howard, Assistant.

We are looking forward to have the best Sunday school this year we have ever had.

Our young people who have been spending the holidays at home have all returned back to school at different colleges. We wish each one much success in their work.

Brother Sink will hold communion service at Bethel next Sunday. Wishing everyone a happy and prosperous new year Pleasant Grove.—Superintendent Teague has installed an electric bell in the hall of the Sunday school rooms to aid in handling the classes. This is a splendid addition. A few more chairs and tables added will give a splendidly equipped Sunday school rooms.

The attendance at Sunday school last Sunday was 112, which is considered a large attendance for the Grove. The people in this community are not very thickly settled, and of course there are some who do not attend church regularly.

Brother A. C. Cecil does not improve as his friends would like to see. His wife is president of the Ladies' Aid Society and because of his sickness the regular monthly meeting, which was to have been held in the home of Mrs. Walter Burton, has been postponed.

It was decided Sunday to call in all Sunday night services for the winter months. This due to the muddy roads many of our people have to travel over to get to the church. Our prayer meeting and the meeting of our Senior and Junior C. E. Societies, will be held regularly each Friday night at 7 P. M.

Since our last report Brother Hubert Payne has again given us 10 gals. oil, five gals. motor oil and five gals. kerosene. We certainly thank him for this act of kindness which is only a repetition of what he has done before. We also thank Brother I. A. Teague, Brother B. E. Kennedy, and Brother B. E. Payne and family for a fine pair wool blankets presented to us at the Christmas entertainment. We appreciate these for their value but most of all the good spirit that prompted the gift. For all other gifts received the donors have our sincere thanks.

THE WRONG NUMBER.

A certain lady called her grocer up on the telephone the other morning. After she had sufficiently scolded the man who responded, she said:

"And what's more, the next order you get from me will be the last I'll ever give you."

"It probably will, madam," said the voice at the other end of the wire. "You're talking to the undertaker."—Everybody's Magazine.

PROHIBITION AND AUTOMOBILES.

The significance of prohibition as an essential to the auto industry is emphasized by the highway accident rate. In one year, 22,600 were killed and 685,000 injured in this country. Of these accidents, 80 percent were attributed to motor vehicles. The number of drivers' licenses revoked for intoxication suggests where the blame of these accidents must be placed. With open saloons, selling intoxicants to all comers, we should have to multiply this terrific total to an unbelievable figure. The drinker, whether driver or pedestrian, is a menace to the public as well as for the continuance of the prosperity of the auto trade, with which is bound up the prosperity of the nation. Prohibition must continue and must be enforced. Nothing but prohibition enforced can make the automobile safe for America.

THE SQUIRREL'S LESSON.

Alice Sumner Varney.

It was a beautiful sunny day early in October.

A little squirrel was sitting on the branch of an oak tree. Not far from him sat an older squirrel.

"Little squirrel," said the older squirrel, "it is time you had an arithmetic lesson. All the boys and girls are in school. They are learning to count."

"What for?" asked the little squirrel.

"So they can go to the store and buy fruit and groceries for their mothers," answered the older squirrel.

"But I don't have to go to the store, so why should I learn to count?" asked the little squirrel.

"You should go to the nut store this very day," the older squirrel replied. "Winter will soon be here. Then there will be no nice green things to eat. We squirrel's must start now and gather all the nuts we can for winter days when nuts cannot be found."

"Oh, winter will not come for a long, long time, I am sure," the little squirrel said. "I will gather plenty of nuts by and by."

He gave his bushy tail a toss and scampered to the ground to play among the fallen leaves.

The older squirrel ran down to the ground. She began to gather nuts and carried them to her winter home in a tree close by.

Day after day she worked until she knew she had nuts enough for all winter. She would not go hungry after Jack Frost came.

Almost every day the two squirrels would meet. The little squirrel would play and would often say: "I told you winter was far, far away. I'll get my nuts soon enough."

One night the squirrels went to bed. All night they slept. They dreamed of happy times in the woods.

In the morning they awoke. What did they see? The grass was gone. The ground was all white. The snow had come and covered the earth while they were sleeping.

No one lacked for food in the older squirrel's home.

The little squirrel wished now that he had spent less time at play. He felt very sad as he looked down at the snow.

"Why didn't I take Mrs. Squirrel's advice?" he asked himself. "God gave me nuts enough for all winter, but I would not gather them. Now I will be hungry many times this winter."

But the older squirrel proved to be very kind. She gave generously of her nuts to the little squirrel.

"Next year," she said, "remember God sends us nuts, but we must gather them ourselves."

HOW SAUCY MOUSE ESCAPED.

Pussy Mow found his mother on the back porch one morning, drinking the loveliest bowl of milk you ever saw. My! it made him feel hungry.

But Mrs. Mow wasn't the least bit selfish, and, licking her chops, she said, "Come on, Pussy, and have a bite. It's good."

It must have been good, just as she said: because when the milk was gone they didn't stop, but went right on licking and licking until the bowl was as shiny as if it had been wiped on a brand-new dish-towel. And, even as Mrs. Mow ran through and went away, Pussy Mow kept on licking the bowl just the same.

And then, once he saw two bright eyes peeping at him from under the porch, and there as sure as could be, was Saucy Mouse—the one that laughed at him in the kitchen not long since.

Before Pussy Mow could say anything more than "Ptiss!" it bounded from the little hole and danced the sailor's horn-pipe right before his eyes.

"Fraidy-cat! Fraidy-cat!" it teased "you are just a fraidy-cat."

Pussy Mow had never been called a fraidy-cat before, and he didn't like it the least bit.

"I'll teach you not to call naughty names like that," he said, his eyes as big as an evening star. "It's bad-manners—my mamma told me so." With that he gave a leap and would have landed right on top of Saucy Mouse had not the mouse jumped back lickety-split into its hole.

Pussy Mow was about to put his paws through the hole so as to pull the little mouse out, when he happened to think of what Mrs. Mow told him just the night before.

"If ever Saucy Mouse is naughty again," she said, "just look for its hole and watch it. Be quiet as can be, and pretend to be asleep. It will come out; and then jump at it plump—that's the way to catch it."

Therefore Pussy Mow sat down near Saucy Mouse's hole and watched and watched. And pretty soon the mouse stuck its head through.

"Fraidy-cat! Fraidy-cat!" it laughed, but Pussy Mow pretended not to hear.

"Fraidy-cat!" it squeaked again, but Pussy Mow pretended to be fast asleep.

And then Saucy Mouse jumped clear out from its hole and danced all around Pussy Mow, calling him naughty names.

Pretty soon Pussy Mow opened a corner of one eye and found Saucy Mouse wiggling its nose at him.

"Now," he cried, "I have you!" With that he bounded upon Saucy Mouse quick as a wink and caught it.

"Oh, help! help!" squealed Saucy Mouse. "Your paws prick me. They are full of pins."

Pussy Mow had never thought about his soft velvety paws being full of pins. So now, forgetting Saucy Mouse for a second, he lifted a forepaw and looked at it. Yes, sure as fate, he counted five sharp nails. And then something happened. While he was looking at one paw, Saucy Mouse slipped from under the other and dived into his hole.

"Tee-hee! Tee-hee!" it laughed. "Next time you want to catch mice, Pussy Mow, don't try to do two things at one time."—Genevieve D. O'Neill, in Our Little Ones.

MARRIED.

Lee Pearson And Carrie Preslar

Were united in the bonds of matrimony in the home of the groom's brother, T. J. Pearson. Mr. Pearson is the son of B. G. Pearson, a life long staunch Methodist Protestant. It can be plainly seen, the son's liking for his church, in that he drove from Hickory, N. C., to be married by his pastor. Miss Preslar is a school teacher and is held in high esteem by all who know her. Her former home was Hickory, N. C. Mr. Pearson is employed by the Government at Glen Falls, S. C. After the wedding ceremony the party proceeded to the father's home where a sumptuous dinner awaited us. After all wished the happy couple a joyous journey on the sea of matrimony we left for our various homes.

COLONEL MITCHELL FOUND GUILTY.

The court-martial trial of Colonel William Mitchell, which began October 28, came to an end December 17. The Army court found the Colonel guilty of insubordination, for his charges that the Shenandoah and PN-9 No. 1 disasters were "the direct result of incompetency, criminal negligence and almost treasonable administration of the national defense by the Army and Navy Departments."

As punishment the court-martial ordered that Colonel Mitchell be suspended from rank, command and duty in the Army for a period of five years, and that he receive no pay during that time. The maximum penalty is dishonorable discharge from the Army. The court explained that it was "lenient" to Colonel Mitchell because of his fine World War record and his service of twenty-seven years as a soldier of the United States.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sides.

[illegible] Strand Sides, born August 6, 1855, died October 5, 1925. June 5, 1878, he was united in marriage to [illegible] Shue. To this union six children were born, three sons and three daughters, all surviving him.

He joined Mt. Zion Church in early manhood and remained a member until death. I have been his pastor for several years of this time, and always found a hearty welcome in his home, and it seemed to be a pleasure to him to divide anything with me that he had that I was in need of; he has indeed been a friend to me.

He was a true and loving husband, a kind father, a good neighbor, and loved by those who knew him. He leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

Funeral services were held in Mt. Zion Church, where a large number of relatives and friends were assembled, after which the remains were interred in the Mt. Zion cemetery to await the resurrection.

We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.

Bowman.

Ila Bowman was born May 5, 1898, and died October 25, 1925. She was the youngest daughter of George W. Bowman.

She professed faith in christ in early childhood and joined the M. P. Church at Pinnacle, and lived a consecrated christian life, until death.

She was sick for about two weeks, and for several days was in a very critical condition at the City Memorial Hospital at Winston-Salem, suffering a great deal but bearing it with truly christian patience, saying at different times that she was a child of God, and was ready to go, was prepared to meet God and was going home.

With such consoling words as these, we shouldn't grieve as those who have no hope of their departed loved ones.

She is survived by six sisters and two brothers. She leaves a large circle of friends in Winston-Salem where she had lived for several years.

Funeral services were held by the writer at Pinnacle Church in the presence of a large congregation assembled to pay the last respects to the deceased, after which the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery.

The bereaved have our sympathy.

Lesson Text: John 1:35-51.

Golden Text: John 1:50.

The Central Truth: The Chief Shepherd and His undershepherds were busy seeking and finding the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Scriptural Points.

1. "Behold the Lamb of God." This title shows that Jesus was sinless and that He was the all-sufficient Sacrifice for the sins of mankind. He was the great Antetype to which all other sacrifices pointed. He became a sin-offering for us.

2. The two disciples of John the Baptist, John and Andrew, acted at once upon this testimony of their leader. "They followed Jesus." As John the forerunner's ministry was about over, he was anxious for his followers now to follow Jesus.

3. "What seek ye?" Are you moved by curiosity, or are you seeking worldly honors? or are you seeking salvation and eternal life? What is the motive in following Jesus?

4. "Where dwellest thou?" These disciples wished to pay Jesus a visit in order to learn more about Him and His mission.

5. "Come and see." No one can ever become really acquainted with Jesus until they come to Him and get a vision of His humility, His compassion, and His power to save. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

6. "He first findeth his own brother Simon." The first thing Andrew did after his own conversion was to win his own brother to Jesus. He bore glad testimony that Jesus was the promised Messiah. He did more than this. He persuaded Simon to come to Jesus and see for himself.

7. "Thou shalt be called Cephas." Cephas means a stone, the same as Peter. Jesus gave this new name to Simon to represent the strong, rock-like character that he would develop in contact with Himself, the Rock of Ages.

8. "Jesus.....findeth Philip." It is recorded that "Jesus would go forth into Galilee" for this very purpose to win another disciple, and to add another to His list of apostles.

9. "Follow me." This meant more social fellowship. It meant more being a scholar in the school of Christ. It meant that Philip must become like Jesus, live like Jesus, and serve mankind like Jesus.

10. "Philip findeth Nathaniel." He felt impelled by the love of Jesus that filled his soul to share this joy and love with others. He therefore at once sought a friend of his and told him about the new-found Savior.

11. "Can there any good thing come out of Nazereth?" This was such a small village and notoriously wicked. Could the Messiah of the race come from such a cesspool of iniquity? Come and see, and be convinced.

12. "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guide." Jesus saw into this man's soul and saw that he was a sincere seeker after truth. He was not like the scribes and pharisees, blinded by traditions and age-long prejudice. Jesus displayed His omniscience not only in setting forth Nathaniel's inner life but also that He saw him under the figtree before Philip spoke to him.

13. "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." This confession was made solely upon the manifestation of omniscience from the lips of Jesus, an attribute that beblonged to God alone.

14. This lesson sets forth four great titles of Jesus. "The Lamb of God," sacrificed upon the cross; "The Messiah," Teacher and Redeemer; "The Son of God," the second Person in the Godhead; and "The King of Israel," "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords."

Practical Points.

1. To look to Jesus is to become like Him in spirit, conduct and service. "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Heb. 12:2.

2. Worldly seekers will find those apples of Sodom that crumble into dust at the touch of avarice. Those who seek Jesus will find life everlasting. "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6:33.

3. Jesus and His co-workers are the real seekers and finders. The lost are blind and dead and completely incapable of taking the initiative in their own salvation. Unless they are sought out by lovers of souls they will become eternally lost. Jesus said, "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

4. The world-wide field of lost souls is white unto the harvest. Millions perish every hour. Reach in the sickle of the gospel and reap golden sheaves for the last day of rejoicing. "And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal; that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together. John 4:36.

5. Jesus in the Rock-foundation upon which He is building His church. Believers are the living stones with which the ecclesiastical temple is being constructed. "Ye also, as lively stones, are built upon a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 2:5.

—The Italian parliament has adopted a bill giving to Mussolini power to govern by decree in emergencies instead of waiting for laws to be enacted. The Senate has also passed a government bill restricting the liberty of the press.

—Crowds of civilians are leaving Damascus, fearing more fighting in the city. The Druses are making occasional night attacks on the French garrison. In 1920 there was an uprising in Syria which cost the French 6,960 men. Since last July 861 French soldiers have been killed.

English St. Church.—We are getting along fine both in Sunday school and church work. I notice our attendance is larger than during last year and offerings much larger which is partly due to our contest with offering and attendance banners. If your classes are not moving as they should send to the M. P. Book concern, Baltimore, and get you some banners. And put on a contest. It has helped our school and I feel sure it will help yours. We have had our first quarterly conference. Had good Christmas exercises. Those of us that went over the obstacles of last year feel that we are getting along fine. We feel a great deal of our success is due to our faithful consecrated pastor. Almost any minister can preach a good sermon once in a while, but our pastor preaches two good sermons every Sunday. We had a good lecture from Mrs. Dr. A. G. Dixon third Sunday afternoon of last month to Missionary Society. We are always glad to have Dr. and Mrs. Dixon with us. Reporter.

Bethel, Alamance Ct.—We have not reported for some time. Reporter has been busy, but we are still alive and working. Brother J. A. Burgess has filled two appointments at Bethel since conference, giving us interesting and instructive sermons. We are glad to welcome him to Bethel as pastor of church, and extend to him our hearty cooperation.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. Brother Lon. McPherson has been reelected for the year. He has been our Supt. for a long time. We couldn't think of giving him up. We had a Christmas tree Christmas eve. A nice program was rendered, after which Brother Burgess gave us an excellent talk on Christmas. Santa Claus came then and treated the children while the presents from the tree were being distributed. His presence, his treat, and funny actions were much enjoyed by the children.

Mrs. Lon. McPherson, teacher of the philathea class, entertained her class and a few other invited guests at her home Wednesday eve, after Christmas. A Christmas program was rendered; after which delicious refreshments were served. The young ladies present assisted our host in serving. The house was beautiful decorated for Christmas and the Christmas spirit every where apparent. Every one present expressed their enjoyment of Mrs. McPherson's hospitality. The class presented their teacher with a nice Christmas present at the church Christmas eve. Before leaving for our homes, we sang, Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love, and we felt anew, "Peace on earth, good will toward men," sang by the angels so long ago.

Our Wednesday night prayer meetings are being well attended for winter time. For this we are thankful. Our Home and Foreign Missionary Societies met with Mrs. Lon. McPherson in Nov. Subject, What is Life? We had a good meeting.

First Sunday in January, last Sunday, we met with Mrs. Gray McPherson. Subject—Our resolves. We enjoyed talks on resolutions for the coming year. Miss Bessie Holmes gave the lesson from study book, which was much enjoyed by all. We also enjoyed the singing, but best of all, we enjoyed being with Mrs. McPherson, who is one of our charter members, and has been so faithful. For a long time she has been sick, and confined to her home. She enjoyed being in our meeting again. May the Lord bless and help her, and may we all do our best year's work for Christ this year. We are all one year nearer home. Next meeting first Sunday in February at 2:30 P. M. with Mrs. W. R. Foust. Subject—God's Plan.

Mrs. W. R. Foust and Mrs. Otis Cooke are sick. Hope for them a speedy recovery.

West Forsyth Circuit.—Have nearly completed the second round, congregations have been very good as to numbers, and attentive to the word.

We moved into the parsonage on Christmas eve. Bros. J. H. Spease, W. H. Spear, J. F. Hunter, and Clinton Sprinkle contributing to that end. Mrs. Jasper Long had a good hot supper for us.

We found that others had been here with supplies for the larder, and have continued to come ever since. To enumerate would require the calling of a large part of the stock of a grocery store and market. I do not know the names of all but there were Andersons, Hunters, Longs, Speases, Sprinkles.

The parsonage family were also remembered by two of the Sunday schools in their Christmas treat.

Our thanks to all, and gratitude to Him who puts it into the hearts of His children to do such things. May his blessings reward them, and help me to help them.

LIFE

To the preacher life's a sermon,
To the joker it's a jest.
To the miser life is money,
To the loafer life is rest,
To the lawyer life's a trial,
To the poet life's a song,
To the doctor life's a patient
Who needs treatment right along.
To the soldier life's a battle,
To the teacher life's a school.
Life's a good thing to the grafter,
It's a failure to the fool.
To the man upon the engine
Life's the making of a grade,
Life's a gamble to the gambler,
To the merchant life is trade.
Life is but a long vacation
To the man who loves his work.
Life's an everlasting effort
To shun duty to the shirk.
To the earnest Christian worker
Life's a story ever new.
Life's just what we try to make it.
Brother, what is life to you?

A GENTLE SPIRIT FLOWN.

ast Sunday morning members of Calvary urch were painfully shocked to hear that s. Walter J. Williams was at the point of ath. Report of her illness had gone out, no one seemed to realize that she was ngerously sick, perhaps not even the doctor. t pneumonia developed and quickly ran its al course. Sunday night about nine o'clock s. Williams passed from this life to the triumphant. Hers was a spirit of rare genness. Her worth was known in the church well as in the home, and we all will sadly ss her, though we have assurance that all happiness with her. OLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

There seems to be a growing sentiment ainst capital punishment. Not only does me feeling rebel against the thought of ing human life. even by the state through orderly processes of law, but men are iously questioning the right of the sate to e human life.

The question is bound up with that of the thority of the Mosaic law. Many people ve been taught to think of that law as de for all time and for all nations, while ers think of it as having local and temrary application. To the former class the olition of capital punishment would be in ntravention of the express will of God and therefore in itself criminal. To the other class, the abolition of capital punishment would be in harmony with the will of God as revealed in Christian consciousness.

A similar situation exists with regard to the ministry of women in our churches. Some take Paul's "I suffer not a woman to teach" as absolutely prohibitive of the practices of preaching by women. while others feel that Paul's practice was founded simply in his own sense of propriety and is not to be taken as a rule by others whose sense of propriety differs from Paul's.

When men reach the conviction that they have a right to abolish capital punishment, then the question will be. Is it better to do so? That is the phase of the question that is most discussed now.

As a part of this discussion we quote the following paragraphs giving the views of the warden of Sing Sing, New York:

What Justification?

What justification can be made of execution by order of the state he asks.

Punishment of the offender? Death is not a punishment. Not many men fear it. There are few who violently shrink from the arms of the death chair. Compared with life imprisonment the death in the electric chair is far less impressive.

Deterrency of crime by others? It is there the advocate of capital punishment has his most coveted point. It was there he was met by Warden Lawes with his chief battery of facts, facts which went in every case to prove there is no relationship between unrelenting punishment and the frequency of crime commission. Records in states and in other countries were cited as proof.

Retribution by the state? Such a motive is beneath the dignity of a commonwealth and is no longer held even in argument.

Reformation of the individual? There is no reformation in death.

Confinement Necessary.

Warden Lawes was frank to say that to abolish capital punishment and meet the requirements of society it would be necessary to provide life confinement for those convicted of cold-blooded murder. The pardoning power could not then be left in the hands of an individual, even a governor. It would have to be invested in a trained board which would act to mitigate a sentence only when justification was had beyond a doubt.

—It is a good idea in writing a letter to insert the address of the person for whom the letter is intended. The editor finds in his mail this morning a letter written by a young lady to her sweetheart and inclosed by mistake with a remittance for the Herald. Had it borne his address we could have forwarded it to him, but "dearest Tom" was not sufficient for identification, and the best we could do was to return it to the young lady and give her a dreadful shock to discover that she sent such a letter to such a person. She won't do it again, and you would better be careful. too.

Bess Chapel.—Sunday, December 27, was a good day for us. We enjoyed a good sermon by our pastor, Rev. E. A. Bingham, but most of all we enjoyed his discussion of Goals for the New Year which we all heartily endorsed and are resolved to support. They are as follows:

1. New Church.
2. Bigger and better Sunday school and Bible vacation school.
3. A great revival of religion.
4. C. E. Society and Woman's Home Missionary Society growing in numbers and activity.
5. Organization of Junior C. E. Society.
6. Every family taking Church Paper.
7. High Point College heartly supported.
8. Budgets raised in full.

THINK! WORK! PRAY!

Our motto: Phillipians 4:13 "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

With these eight outstanding goals always before us it seems that we should have a great incentive to work throughout the whole year.

On Christmas Eve we enjoyed a Christmas Pageant given by members of the Sunday school who were trained by Miss Edna Dellinger. The older people as well as the young and small children enter heartily into these special services and this gives all of us an added zest to work. The big beautiful Christmas tree was a source of pleasure to old and young too and we all felt like we were very much benefited by this Christmas service.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

(A lecture delivered more than 40 years ago by Dr. Nereus Mendenhall. It was sent to the Greensboro Daily News by his daughter, Mrs. Mary Hobbs, of Guilford College.)

Probably more deep and far reaching changes are going on now in religious views than at any other time since the introduction of Christianity.

None of you has struggled to maintain the beliefs of his boyhood more than myself. My present task is to speak of science and the Bible. They have repeatedly been said to be in conflict. To understand how these conflicts arise, let us look first at the way in which the Bible has been regarded.

(a) Inspiration:

Many views have been held varying from that taught by Calovius and Quenstedt who held that everything in Scripture comes from the infallible divine assistance and direction, that it is of infallible truth and free from every error—contains no lie, no falsehood, not the very slightest error either in fact or in word—everything in it of the highest truth whether ethical or historical, chronical, topographical or verbal.

The Formula Consensus Helvetica went further and declared that the Old Testament was "tum quoad vocalia, sive puncta ipsa, sive punctorum saltem potestatem et tum quoad res, tum quoad verba inerrant" (in every consonant, in every vowel, in every point in everything and in every word infallible). On the other hand, Capellius, after investigating the antiquity of the Hebrew points, maintained that the inspiration of the Scriptures did not demand perfect accuracy in details, that such accuracy not only did not exist in such editions as we have now, but never did exist, for manuscripts show discrepancies which cannot be explained on the theory of wilful or involuntary mistakes of copyists. These opinions have not been held by the church at large, as I believe, neither by the Romish nor the Greek nor the Protestant.

Even Augustine said, "I give only that honor to those books which are called canonical as to believe that the author thereof in writing did not err, and if I meet with anything in these writings that seemeth repugant to the truth, I shall not doubt to say that either the volume is faulty or erroneous, that the expounder hath not reached what was said, or that I have in no wise understood it."

While trying to hold my former views, and seeing the great difficuty, impossibility, indeed of so doing when engaged as a civil engineer, on the Western North Carolina railroad I sent for Neander's Life of Christ. It was some relief to me therein to read these words:

(b) "It must be regarded as one of the greatest boons which the purifying process of the Protestant theology (in Germany) has conferred upon faith as well as science, that the old mechanical view of inspiration has been so generally abandoned. That doctrine, and the forced harmonies to which it led, demanded a clerk-like accuracy in the evangelical accounts, and could not admit even the slightest contradictions in them; but we are now no more compelled to have recourse to subtilties against which our sense of truth rebels. In studying the historical connexion of our Savior's life and actions by the application of an unfettered criticism, we reach a deeper sense in many of his sayings than the bonds of the old dogmatism would have allowed. The inquiring reason need no longer find its free sense of truth opposed to faith; nor is reason bound to subjugate herself, not to faith, but to arbitrary dogmas and artificial hypotheses. The chasms in the Gospel history were unavoidable in the transmission of divine truth through such lowly human means. The precious treasure has come to us in earthen vessels. But this only affords room for the exercise of our faith—a faith whose root is to be found, not in science, not in demonstration, but in the humble and self-denying submission of our spirits. Our scientific views may be defective in many points; our knowledge itself may be but fragmentary; but our religious interests will find all that is necessary to attach them to Christ as the ground of salvation and the archetype of holiness."

(c) Says an eminent Scotch divine, "If we find even in the Bible any thing that confuses our sense of right and wrong, that seems to us less exalted and pure than the character of God should be, if after the most patient thought and prayerful pondering it still maintains this aspect, then we are not to bow down to it as God's revelation to us, since it does not meet the needs of the earlier and more sacred revelation He has give us in our own spirit and conscience which testify of Him."

Similar quotations might be largely multiplied. The whole day might be taken up in illustrating the different views which have been taken of the question of inspiration the inspiration of the Bible. But with confidence I think it may be said that it is the first view—that view which held that in every consonant, in every vowel, in every point as the force of every point— in every thing and in every word the Bible is literally true. and that there was assumed the authority to so teach and hold even to the extent of taking life—I say it was this extreme view that lighted the fires of persecution within the church. and kept running a stream of martyrs' blood from the days of Stephen, to go no further back. down to the days when Huss and Jerome and Tyndale and Savonarola and Cranmer were burnt at the stake.

Science has been of slow growth. Anaxagoras, 500 before Christ. may be regarded as the father of modern science. In the investigation of nature and her laws. he first combined close reasoning with observation and experiment. He showed that air was a substance, since if confined in bladders it offered resistance and displaced other bodies. He taught that there is no such thing as chance, but defined it "a cause unperceived by the human intellect," also that there is no such thing as the destruction of matter, but merely a separation and transfer elsewhere of the particles, thus anticipating one of the most important discoveries of modern chemistry. He taught that the earth was cylindrical; the moon inhabited and receiving its light from the sun. and though he had no spectroscope—that the sun is a hot glowing mass of stone. not very far from the truth as just learned by our astronomers. But if science began with him persecution was there also. He was charged with impiety, and fled from Athens to escape death.

Socrates. Though the studies and teaching of Socrates, the grandest figure of ancient history. were ethical and not in the realm of physics or natural history. yet he was persecuted by the professed guardians of religion even unto death.

Aristotle, who wrote on all branches of knowledge and science up to his day like Anaxagoras fled from Athens on account of religious persecution, saying that he would not give the Athenians the opportunity of sinning a second time against philosophy. It may just be added. for the time would fail to run even a small part of the list, that it was the very religious Jews. those who. after the straitest sect, set more value upon the letter of a creed than upon love of God and love of man. who put Christ to death.

But says someone, what have these cases to do with the Bible? These men had nothing to do with the Bible; but the principle is the same and they are used only to illustrate the principle.

Bacon 1561—1626. Among the causes of the sad condition of the sciences Bacon reckons superstition and blind religious zeal, the most irreconcilable opposer of natural philosophy. Since his day, and especially during the present century, the advancement of science has been most rapid. The principal fields in which it has encountered opposition on religious grounds have been in astronomy and geology. and later in what is known as the doctrine of evolution.

The Ptolemaic system of astronomy, A. D. 140. placed the earth as a sphere in the center and the moon. planets, sun and stars, in a crystalline sphere daily revolving around it. This system was adapted to the manner in which the heavenly bodies appear to move.

Copernicus, born at Thom. Prussia, dissatisfied with the condition of astronomy. spent years in working out and proving what is now known as the Copernican system. This, like that of the Pythagoreans of old. placed the sun in the center—the earth revolving on its axis and also going around the sun, as did the other planets. He finished his work "De Orbium Celestrum Revolutionibus" in 1530, and although he knew that he had solved the grandest problem in astronomy, from a presentiment of the persecutors. he waited 13 years before he published it. The printed copy was placed in his hands just as he expired. But Giordano Bruno, an Italian philosopher who adopted and defended his views, was sentenced. with the customary mocking formula, "that he should be punished as mildly as possible and without effusion of blood." He replied to his judges, "I suspect that you pronounce my sentence with greater fear than I receive it," and on March 5, 1600 he was burned at the stake; the Copernican system being described in the Index Expurgatorius as "falsa illa doctrinea Pythaorica Divinae Scriptae adver—.'' They were onvinced by arguments like those lately em-loyed by John Jasper. ''that the sun it do ove, for the Bible speak ob de risen ob de un and de goin down ob de same. and how an de sun rise and go down if it don't ove? And if de sun wasn't movin how could oshua stop it?'' The truth is that the astron-ny of the Bible is that of the people among hom is was wrtten, and scarcely any one xcept John Jasper and those like him are roubled on this subject.

Again as to geology, take the chronology given by the genealogies and the age of he earth and of the time of man's existence as been put down century after century at 000 years. The want of time alone prevents e from going more minutely into this ques-on, and I sum up by saying that no one ith the least pretension to scientific knowl-lge now believes that this globe is less than 0,000 years old. and that man has been on it at least 10,000 or more years.

When I was a boy, or even a grown man, ny one who said that the flood did not ver the whole earth would have been either premanded or avoided as a dangerous per-n. I know of no one now, even among Bibli-l scholars, who believes this, and even ladstone in his recent work on the ''Impreg-able Rock of Scripture'' seems to be sat-fied if science will allow of a local flood. verflowing to a great depth the valleys of the uphrates and Tigris rivers.

The latest wolf that has appeared, and deed in every way the most formidable. reatening to overturn everything, eat up ankind and to transform us into an im-oved stock of monkeys, is evolution. As fore said. we need not go back very many ars ago from our homes to find people no would look upon us as dangerous persons. we express a belief that the earth is more an 6,000 years old. So we would be regarded still more dangerous, if we do not believe at every sort or species, four-footed beast, rd, fish and creeping things, was made and shioned just as we see it today, at the me time or within a few days thereof, and of all plants from the cedars of Lebanon the great trees of California to the hyssop the wall or the tiniest moss, all formed d fashioned just as we have them—6,000 ars ago.

Now the Evolutionist does not believe this. e believes that there was animal life and getable life on the globe more than 10,000 100,000 years ago, and the form in which at life has been manifested, both vegetable d animal, has undergone a succession of anges, in other words, that not only in ants and animals, but in all the realm of ture there has been continuous progressive anges, according to certain laws by means resident or inherent forces. The minutiae this matter cannot be even touched here. t it has been established by such an array observations. facts and arguments as are solutely overwhelming. This doctrine has en assailed by argument, by instances of fficulties in the way, by ridicule, by appeals the Bible. I think the great objections to are, first, that it appears to contradict the Bible as to the time of man's appearance on earth and second that it would make man the offspring of a lower form of animal life. When Laplace, in his great work ''La Mecanique celeste'' explained. by means of gravitation, all movements of the heavenly bodies, it seems as though the power of God was not recognized, and when his attention was called to this he said he had no need of that hypothesis, the force of gravitation being sufficient. So when instead of the direct creation of man in a few minutes out of the dust of the earth, the evolutionist tells us of the great line of prevish preparatory life. throwing the germ from which he sprang back and undergoing change after change for 100,000 years may seem impressed with the belief that it moves the power and action of God so far off that prectically it becomes atheism. They look at the matter very much as Topsy did when she was asked who made her and she replied she was not made at all, she ''thest growed,'' just as if it derogated from the power or wisdom or goodness of God, to suppose that the human being was gradually evolved from antecedent forms of life, themselves created of God than to suppose that man was formed in a few minutes out of dirt.

What then in regard to Evolution? I only say do not be uneasy about it. If true, it cannot be overthrown by a text of Scripture. Its truth or falsehood is not to be worked out from the Bible, but again, what about the Bible in reference to matters of science. I here give my own belief, not hastily arrived at, for I say again that I held on to the beliefs of my boyhood as tenaciously. as anxiously, as any one here—but that belief. much as I would like to go into some detail, must be given in a very summary way. I believe then that nine times out of ten the conflicts between the Bible and science have been brought on, not by the men engaged in studying the great book of nature but by the theologians. They have wrested from the Bible in effect the only passage, so far as I know, which tells us the purpose and use of the Bible, and attempted to hold it responsible for explaining everything in the heavens above and in the earth beneath and in the regions below. They have attempted to make it authorily in astronomy, in geology, in cosmogony, in biology. Paul did not say that the Bible was profitable in these things, but that all Scripture given by inspiration of God (not all Scripture is given, but that all given, or all which is given) is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction, in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work, instruction in righteousness that we may go on to perfeection. But instead of this, theologians have made many difficulties for themselves and for all of us by building theories, making assumptions often erroneous in the first place, and so from false premises going on to many false. often terrible conclusions. They have often read as literal what was figurative, they have read as real what was metaphorical, they have read as rigid facts what was given as oriental hyperbole, they have read mathematical demonstration and solid logic what was the mobile, flexible, plastic speech of poetry, they have read objective for all times and places what was really only subjective to one or few individuals. In short, they have regarded the Bible as a finished revelation, fixed and complete and so handed down and of equal authority in all its parts instead of what it is, the record of an evolution, a revelation progressive in its nature unfolding from stage to stage, passing on as rapidly as the human family could apprehend it from, we might say a heathenish anthropomorphism through more and more spiritual views of the Divine Being till the highest summit is reached in that declaration of Christ—that God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. So well assured am I that the view now given is the only one which will meet the case, that to prevent all misapprehension of my meaning, a few other sentences are added merely bringing out the same thought in other words. Perhaps no reading and thinking grown person has the same idea or conception of God, as that which he had when a child. The conception of God then changes from time to time, from age to age. One people or tribe or individual has one conception of God, another another. And even in the same people that conception changes; so with the Jews, it passed from a crude anthropomorphism at first, up to the high spiritual views of the prophets. ''Neither individuals nor communities can know more of God than their moral condition and character permit them to know.'' All history is a process, an evolution, and the central principle in it is a seeking and a finding of God on the part of man; and a revelation by God of himself to man as fully and as perfectly and as really as he is capable of receiving that revelation. One who reads in his Bible that God is love, and holds that he has predestinated a large part of the human race to eternal torture, simply shows that he is incapable of apprehending the meaning of the world love in reference to his fellow men. We are called to go on to perfection. not to go back to the law which is but a pedagogue as if Christ were not here a living teacher among us, struggling to find entrance into the hearts of the people that all things may be moulded according to his blessed will.

Christianity is yet waiting for its real principles to be discovered and reduced to practice by its professed disciples.

In Greece, General Pangalos, who has been Premier of Greece since last June, has announced a military dictatorship for that nation. He has the support of the Greek army and navy. He says: ''Our fleet in a few months will be mistress of the eastern Mediterranean and our army one of the strongest in the Balkans.''

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Sinfulness Of Sin.

Text: "That sin by the commandment might becoue exceeding sinful." Rom. 7:13.

There is a modern tendency to make light of sin, to ignore it, to excuse it, to explain it away, and even to deny that it is at all sinful. "Fools make a mock at sin," and their tribe is not yet extinct.

Sin is the most terrible and terrifying of all realities. It is by far the most malignant curse that has fallen upon the human race. It is the mother of all other evils. No human being escapes its pulluting touch. It is the bedfellow of every rational being. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

The awful sinfulness of sin is set forth in the light of God's holiness, in the light of His moral law, in the light of the atonement, and in the light of its everlasting punishment.

Let us consider first the sinfulness of sin as seen in the light of

The Holiness of God.

In the creation God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." And in keeping with this proposal, man was made in the image of the intelligence, holiness, and eternity of God. The Creator breathed into the first man the spirit of His own holiness. From this holiness the first man fell completely, and his posterity has gone still deeper into moral impurity. The race has gone far away from God. God's holiness is still the exalted standard of human character and conduct. He is still saying to fallen mankind, "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

The sinner always stands abashed, ashamed, and most miserable in the presence of God. The first sinners hid themselves in shame from the presence of their loving and anxious Creator. The Israelites were so impressed with the manifestions of the holy God upon Mount Sinai, and in the light thereof became so conscious of their own sinfulness and unworthiness that they appealed to Moses, "Speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us, lest we die."

Simon Peter on one occasion had such a vision of his own sinfulness in the light of the holiness of Jesus that he exclaimed from the depths of his own unworthiness, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man, O Lord."

The nearer any one comes to comprehend the infinite holiness of the Most High the darker and more revolting looms up his own sins and sinfulness. The whiter God's holiness the blacker man's sin.

In the second place let us regard the sinfulness of sin in the light of

The Moral Law.

The moral law is a transcript of the mind of God, a revelation of the will of God, a visible pulsation of the heart of God. Sin is therefore a grave offense against the thought of God, a defiant rebellion against the authority of God, a fearful trampling upon the love of God, and a shameless repudiation of the holiness of God.

The commandment is the correct standard of conduct. It is also the test and revealer of character. The moral law is the mirror, in which the sinner sees his own shortcomings, and his own inability to correct them. He discovers an overpowering proneness to break the law and a total helplessness to atone for its violation or to escape its penalty. He therefore finds the law to be a stern schoolmaster to bring him to Christ as his only hope of salvation.

The moral law sets forth the sinfulness of sin in the exercise of the individual ,conscience. Conscience is the moral sense enlightened, regulated, refined, and reinforced by the moral law. God speaks through the written commandments. The enlightened conscience echoes, emphasizes and insists upon the "Thou shalts" and the "Thou shalt nots" of the moral law.

The penalty of violation of the moral law is death, death spiritual and eternal. "The soul that sinneth, it shalt die." "The wages of sin is death." In the light of this dread consequence of sin, it stands forth exceedingly sinful. Paul describes this sinfulness of sin in the seventh chapter of Romans as it affected his own heart and life. He says, "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good. Was there that which is good made death in me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceedingly sinful."

In the third place let us look upon the sinl fulness of sin in the light of

The Atonement.

Jesus Christ "died for our sins, according to the Scriptures;" that is, in fulfimen: of the purpose, or plan, formulated in eternity and revealed in type and prophecy. His death on the cross was substitutional, expiatory, and provisional.

He actually died in our stand. that we might not die eternally. "He suffered the just for the unjust." "He laid on him the iniquity of us all." "He bore our sins in his own body on the tree." He bore the awful weight of our sins. He bore their awful guilt. And He bore their awful penalty.

By means of His unspeakable and most shameful sufferings in the garden and on the cross Jesus Christ completely appeased the wrath of outraged justice. It is recorded in prophecy, "He shall see the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." The believer can exclaim with Isaiah, "O Lord, I will praise thee: though thou wast angry with me. thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortest me."

And the atonement has made abundant provision to meet every need of the fallen race. "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastizement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed..... By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities."

The inexpressible cost of the atonement sets forth the deep sinfulness of sin. The blood of Jesus was such a dreadful price to pay for man's redemption.

"Jesus paid it all,
All to Him I owe;
Sin hath left a crimson stain,
He washed it white as snow."

In the last place let us take a glimpse of the sinfulness of sin in the light of its Eternal Punishment.

It is agreed that retribution must follow unpardoned transgression, that the Giver of law has the right to fix the penalty for its violation. And sin is more than a violation of law. It is unrighteousness. It is unbelief. It is rejections of salvation through Jesus Christ. It is grieving and quenching the Spirit.

The Judge of all the earth has said of the finally impenitent, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment."

This punishment will consist of everlasting separation from God and all that is good. "Depart from me, I know you not." It will consist of a tormenting contrast. The wicked will contrast their misery with the visible glories of the redeemed. It will consist of anguish in unquenchable fire, for the rich man said, "I am tormented in this flame." It will consist of a thirst that can never be satisfied. It will consist of a tormenting recollection of a misspent life. And it will consist of a remorse of conscience,—"where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."

Sin is therefore a most serious reality to require such adequate punishment. For we are sure that the punishment is not greater than its desert, perhaps not so great. For a wise and merciful Judge cannot, and will not, impose a punishment greater than the offense deserves to be imposed.

Since sin is so great and sinful, why not start a holy crusade against its very existence? Let us rescue its unhappy and helpless victims. Let us drive sin entirely out of our own hearts and lives. Let us join hands with Jesus Christ to make a "world wherein dwelleth righteousness."

—From the Word of Life.

Bethany. Flat Rock.—Our good pastor was not at all well yesterday. Yet he came some ten miles to preach to half a dozen folks. That seems such a pity, when there are scores of people near the church who should want to be present. They are the losers, surely.

Our Sunday school is closed for the first quarter.

Little Garrett Wheeler, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Wheeler, was buried here December 23. Mrs. Wheeler is a member of our church.

Mrs. James Harris, of Greensboro, who was one of our members years ago, was buried here December 26.

Pray for us, that God may help us to walk close to him. Reporter.

Liberty Church, Siler City Charge.—Yesterday was a good day for us at Liberty. The communion service was observed. A good number both old and young participated in its observance. Mr. G. P. Crymes, of Elon College, N. C., rendered a beautiful solo, "I came to Thee," and played for the service. At the close of this service we were glad to receive into our fellowship Mr. and Mrs. T.

L. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Smith came to us sometime ago from High Point. Since that time they have been very active in our church.

The Sunday school showed an increase regardless of the snow. The C. E.'s enjoyed a unique program at their evening service. Mrs. T. L. Smith was the leader. It was a "Peanut meeting." The peanuts were not eatable, however, for each contained a reading for those present. Mrs. Jno. W. Curtis and Mr. Crymes sang a duet which added to the well planned program.

The evening service was featured by good singing and special music. A goodly number of visitors were with us. F. L. Gibbs.

Bessemer City, Lincolnton.—Regardless of the cold weather there were in the Lincolnton Sunday school 104 and reported 1500 chapters read the previous week.

A letter from Dr. Dixon was read by the Sunday school superintendent, R. G. Wood, on the matter of Rev. E. G. Cowan's physical and financial condition and the matter was deferred for the purpose of raising a liberal contribution. Brother Cowan, our sympathy goes out for you and we mean to do our best.

$152 was subscribed for the repairing of the church.

The Ladies' Aid and C. E. Societies are taking on new life but what we need is an old-time sky-blue, heaven-born, Holy-Spirit filled, devil moving, church-edifying, sin-killing revival,—pray for us.

A cradle roll department has been established and Mrs. Nora Lingerfelt has been elected as the superintendent of this department.

Thanks to Brother E. E. Eurey for taking the pastor to Bessemer City Church Sunday night where a good audience assembled to hear the pastor on the theme of the "New Birth."

After the sermon a number of people came up and asked us to remember them at a throne of grace.

We are expecting our revival to break out any time.

A committee has been appointed to raise funds to repair the church or make a change.

W. L. Carson.

Greenville Ct.—Our 1rst quarterly conference convened at Matt. Chapel on December 19. The pastor preached at 11 o'clock. The ladies sent out a nice dinner: You notice I said sent—truly they did, for there was not a lady present. They said it was so near Christmas they couldn't spare the time and some forgot that it was quarterly conference day. We had a good time. All did not forget it, for there was dinner enough for as many more.

Quarterly conference was called at 1 o'clock P. M. All the churches represented—except Wesleys Chapel. Brother A. W. Moore was elected secretary for conference year. The usual officers were elected and all business transacted in a fine spirit of brotherly love. There was a fine Christian fellowship among the brethren. A forward looking programme adopted—looking for better things this year. I am looking to the stewards to carry out the better financial system. We are urging that every man go at his job courageously. The conference adjourned and as we were just getting out a little way from church we met Brother Ellis and Brother John Phillip from Wesleys coming in. They had a very fine financial report for pastor so we count them present. The next quarterly conference goes to Ebenezer.

Christmas came and all had a good time. Wesleys Chapel was the only church that had a Christmas tree. A large crowd and a fine programme rendered by Sunday school. Good music. Old Santa did not forget the pastor and some of the members of family.

Pastor had his turkey dinner. Part of turkey was given by Mrs. T. J. Pearson of Triplet.

Cupid also made his round and took the pastor quite a distance on a bitter cold day to unite in matrimony Brother Grady Rallings to Miss Laffoon. This is a promising couple and we wish them much joy and happiness through life. Bro. Rallings is of Valentines and Miss Laffoon is from the extreme north western part of Brunswick Co. They went on their honey-moon to Richmond.

There came on Saturday night, Edward Shelton and Miss Kates to be made one. This was done in the presence of pastor and family. Mr. Shelton is the son of our Dr. Shelton, of Valentine and Miss Kates of Ebony. This was a fine young couple, though rather young. We wish for them a long and happy married life, filled with joy and prosperity.

The blind tigers are on the run. There has been much good work by officers of Emporia and Gassburg. Two were taken near Philadelphia Church last Sabbath morning.

There has also sadness to come into our community. Brother Ben Weaver has been called from time to eternity. Brother Weaver died at his son's and was buried at Ebenezer where he held his membership. He rests beside his wife who preceeded him to the glory world just about two years ago.

Miss Bettie High, an old lady a member of the M. E. Church and a resident of this community.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Clark's home was saddened by the death of their little daughter about two years old. The child was scalded to death. We extend heart felt sympathy to all the bereaved ones.

The snow, mud, and bitter cold weather many things to report. Our reporters have not properly heated, and cared for. How much might be added to the comfort and worship if the membership of country churches would just get together and spend a little money to make their churches more comfortable. I must not say more now as my article is growing a little lengthy. There are so many things to report. Our reporters have either died or gone into winter quarters.

I wish or all our Herald family a happy and a prosperous new year. Rev. H. L. Powell.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Please allow me to introduce to you Mt. Pleasant Church, Mt. Pleasant Circuit after a year's absence of a reporter from this place. We have not been asleep all the time even if you haven't heard from us; for some reason our church didn't elect a reporter last year and therefore the old one didn't feel like it was her duty to serve.

We are glad to have Brother Millaway and family with us another year. Brother Millaway can still preach; he gave us a good sermon Sunday, warning us, lest we forget, and let our axes get loose on their handles. After he had finished his sermon, he pronounced the benediction, but requested that every one remain for a surprise. W. L. Spoon then made a very interesting talk expressing his own personal appreciation, and that of the church as a whole for the good work rendered by the choir and its leader, L. L. Bowman, to whom he presented a nice gift (in the shape of an overcoat) which had been purchased by some members of the church.

S. A. Alexander presented to the Philathea class a beautiful motto to be hung on the wall in their room where it can be read each Sunday by the members of that class.

The Junior class gave their teacher, Mrs. Shoffner, a nice set of silver teaspoons, also a sugar shell, which she highly appreciates. Thank you, children.

The Philathea class presented to their teacher, Mrs. H. F. Amick, a beautiful tray. We know by her looks she was delighted with it.

The Sunday school gave our faithful superintendent, H. F. Amick, the gift of a hat, also the Baraca class presented their good teacher, W. L. Spoon, with one.

Attendance at Sunday school, January 3, 232; offering, $5.32; attendance, January 10, 93; offering, $2.69.

The first quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Pleasant Church Saturday before the third Sunday in January at two o'clock. There will be some oil stoves, and other little things sold at three o'clock. Communion services Sunday.

The Federation that was organized at this place last August still hold prayer meetings at the church each Sunday evening and in homes on Wednesday evenings, when the weather is favorable.

Our hearts have been made sad recently by the death angel coming into our church membership and taking from it three of the good women to the great beyond; they are, Mrs. Mary Kime Amick, Mrs. Harriet Euliss Smith, Mrs. Margaret Thompson Amick. They will be greatly missed in the homes in the church and in the communities in which they lived.

The Christian Endeavor Societies still hold their regular meetings.

There has been a new flue built in the Sunday school rooms, five new heaters put in, therefore we are much more comfortable than we were.

May this be a happy and prosperous year for everyone. Reporter.

Washing, ironing and mending for eighty or more people at the Home is no small job, but the girls decided to show us on yesterday, Monday, that all this could be done in one day. and proved it to us by accompanying us up to the sewing room and showing the neatly finished labeled packs of clothing arranged in order ready to be delivered to each of those who wore them. A right good start, we think, for the new year.

A number of the older children of the Home were much delighted to be entertained in the beautiful new home of Brother and Sister Garrett on the last evening of the old year. Miss Louzena Pressnell, of Asheboro, whose church membership is at New Hope, deserves special mention, we think, since she gave to each member of the Home a nice handkerchief.

Many thanks to all who have cooperated with me during the past year in providing for the Home. Such cooperation is to be very much appreciated.

Mrs. Lowdermilk and myself also thank our friends for the nice cards and letters containing good wishes during the holidays.

FOR OTHER "SHUT-INS."

It was just a song that did it. and this was the way of it. Sitting alone in the living-room, I was feeling depressed and rebellious, because I was deprived of companionship and active work, when my life heretofore had been so full of friends and service for others. I did not realize that the many friends who had left me had been called to the higher life; nor did I recall Milton's helpful words, "They also serve who only stand and wait." I could only think that I was lonely and that it was irksome to sit and wait.

Then through the open door a sweet, clear voice was singing. The words of an old song floated in:

"Are your windows open toward Jerusalem,
While as captives here a little while we stay:
For the coming of the King in His beauty,
Are you watching day by day?"

The song went on, but I had new cause for thought. If I was a captive physically and could not go to Jerusalem, I could have the window of my soul open and take in the sunshine of love. peace and watchfulness. If I was hindered in my work for the King. He was still my greatest Friend, and I must watch for His coming.

Other words of the song came to me—

"Children of the Heavenly King. take courage."

Surely that was meant for me.

Later I spoke to the singer. and said: "Your song heartened me up this morning!"

She looked surprised and said. "Oh! Do you mean that chorus? I don't know the hymn and don't know why it came into my mind. I think some one else was singing in my voice."

I replied: "I know why you sang it. I needed to be reminded that in quietness there is strength and courage and that the King comes to those who wait and watch."—S. L. B.

SIX TEST QUESTIONS FOR ANY SUNDAY SCHOOL.

1. Do we have a regular workers' meeting?
2. Do we maintain a regular teacher training class?
3. Do we have a definite, different program every Sunday?
4. Are we looking after all absentees promptly?
5. Do we have separate rooms or curtained off spaces for all our classes?
6. Are we working a workable plan for getting new pupils?

DARE HOMES BE CARELESS IN THIS

A passing word needs to be said about our religious and denominational papers. Who can estimate their meaning to the home? The home may be ever so humble and far removed from the maddening crowd's ignoble strife but the weekly visit of a noble religious paper, supplemented by the occasional visit of a good book, shapes the life and determines the destiny of that home. The picture of such a home passes before me now. Its inmates were poor and lived in a section where they must toil, from the oldest to the youngest, and though the home in which they lived was exceedingly humble, yet they held converse with the men and movements of the great wide world. The parents turned every extra dollar into good literature for their children. They believed with Erasmus when he said: "I buy books first; after that, if I have any money, I buy clothes." They believed with a great theological teacher who said to his class, "Young gentlemen, shirts are necessary, but books are indispensable. And so into that home a choice book came as often as it could be afforded, and several of the great religious papers came every week. Those papers and books silently wrought their destiny shaping power upon all that large family of children, and though far removed from the scenes of the world's great movements, yet they thus became vitally real to all those children and entered into their lives. And when they went forth to the work and warfare of the world, all of them had been won to Christ and do joyfully walk in his blessed service to this day. Is this a mean or ordinary result? Nay, it is the sublimest result possible in the history of an earthly home. And more than all things else, the literature provided out of a scant purse for those children, during the plastic years of their childhood and youth, shaped their characters and determined their destiny. Oh, how can parents and teachers and preachers be oblivious to this transcendently important matter of right literature? Carelessness here is worse than being foolish; it is wicked.—Rev. George W. Truett, D. D., in "God's Call to America and Other Addresses."

HIS MISTAKE.

He longed to find the road to fame,
But not a highway bore that name.
He thought to glory there must be
A level path that he should see;
But every road to which he came
Possessed a terrifying name.
He never thought that fame might lurk
Along the dreary path called Work.
He never thought to go and see
What marked the road called Industry.
Because it seemed so rough and high,
He passed the road to Service by.
Yet had he taken either way,
He might have come to fame some day.

THE NEED OF THE WORLD.

The world is needing you and me
In places where we ought to be;
Somewhere today it's needing you
To stand for what you know is true
And needing me somewhere today
To keep the faith, let come what may.
The world is needing me and you
To share the tasks it has to do;
It needs high-minded men to stand
Against the thoughtless of the land;
Men who will scorn to stoop to wrong
To win the favor of the throng.
The world needs humble men to toil,
Men who will till a patch of soil,
Men who behind their work can see
More than its gold and silver fee
And choose to serve where best they can
Their country and their fellow man.
The world needs honest men today
To lead its youth along the way,
Men who will write in all their deeds
The beauty of their spoken creeds
And spurn advantage here or gain
On which deceit must leave its stain.
The world needs men who will not brag.
Men who will honor Freedom's Flag;
Men. who, although the way is hard,.
Against the lure of shame will guard.
The world needs gentle men and true
And calls aloud to me and you.
The world needs men of lofty aim,
Not merely men of skill and fame,
Not merely leaders wise and grave,
Or learned men or soldiers brave,
But men whose lives are fair to see.
Such men as you and I can be.

WORLDLINESS.

The prevalence and aggressiveness of false doctrine is calculated to lead the custodians of the sacred ark of God to lose sight of the greater evil of worldliness. While error has slain its thousands worldliness has slain its tens of thousands. It is a fact that Christains leaders are slow to admit that the conformity to the world on the part of church-members is mainly responsible for that system of error that is today striking at the very foundations of Christendom. The amazing lack of a supernatural christian experience on the part of so many who name the name of Christ is the shameful cause of this diabolical propagonda of denying the exercise of the supernatural in creation, in the Holy Scriptures, in the Personality of Jesus Christ and of the Holy Spirit, and in the entire plan of salvation. Since the worldlyminded know nothing but nature and natural causes they seem to think that they are doing God service in seeking to put Christianity in the strait jacket of naturalism. And if this ever becomes the prevailing belief, then our holy religion will be like Samson shorn of his locks and entirely helpless to save a lost world.

Worldliness is spiritual adultery of the most deceptive and damnable type. Listen to the testimony of James the apostle of Jesus Christ: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore who will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." And hear what the apostle John says about this love of the world: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." And the apostle Paul insists upon an entire separation from the world as the Christian's only safety: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean things: and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

And give especial attention to what Jesus says in regard to the Christian's proper attitude toward the world. "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." An uncompromising separation and opposition should be the attitude of the child of God toward the godless world.

A FATAL SLEEP.

Ps. 13:3; Rom. 13:11; Eph. 5.14.

A judge from Atlanta, Georgia, came to his death in a mysterious way some years ago. He sailed on the steamer Kansas City to New York on a business trip. With him were several friends with whom he had passed the hot evening on deck. When they retired he said that he would spend the night in his steamer-chair. Next morning he could not be found on board. He had been in the habit of sitting on the rail, holding on to a stanchion and the supposition was that he did so that night, and had fallen asleep and losing his hold on the stanchion fell into the sea. His loss was mourned by a wide circle of friends. The wonder is that such an intelligent man should have done a thing so risky, but thousands are asleep despite much greater danger. "Awake, thou that sleepest."—Expositor.

A CHRISTIANITY WITHOUT A HOPE.

Miss Ruby Burgess.

Bishop Brown confesses to lack of faith in any but a God who is merely materialistic motion, matter, energy or force. Along with his belief in a personal God, he at the same moment threw overboard his belief in immortality. So he tells us. Yet he says he is a Christian. Contrast him with Paul who in his five defenses before ecclesiastical and civil courts reiterated the fact that he is being tried for "the hope of the resurrection." Thus Paul summed up the Christian hope—based on eye-witnessess of Him who in His resurrection "brought life and immortality to light."

It is a pitiable sight and a pitiable plight—an old man on the western shore of life, disclaiming belief in immortality, "without God and without hope in the world."—Selected.

A STOLEN DAUGHTER RECOVERED.

Luke 15.17 18; 19:10.

At Kingston, N. Y., a man disputed with a gipsy chief the possession of a fifteen-year-old girl. The chief insisted that she was his daughter, but the other man had evidence, confirmed by the girl herself, that she was his daughter. It appears that she had suddenly disappeared from her home in St. Louis. Her heartbroken father sought the aid of the police, having heard from the girl's playmates that an old woman had enticed the girl away. After many months, police in an Eastern city sent word that a gipsy band there had a girl in it answering the description of his daughter. He hastened to that town, joined the gipsy band and after some time saw the girl and recognized her. He appealed to the police, proved his claim and the girl was turned over to him. Her restoration to her home was due to her father's perseverance and patience. So Christ seeks until He finds the lost. How full of meaning is that word "until!"—Rev. Benj. Schlipf.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for January 24th. "Why and How should we send Christianity to Latin Amerira?" (Missionary Meeting).

(Scripture Reading: Jer. 31:31-34).

Suggested Plan for the Meeting.

Draw a large outline map of Latin America (Mexico, Central America, Sohth America, and the West Indies) on a big sheet of paper and place it before the society. Be sure to have the divisions plainly marked. A week in advance, assign one country of Latin America to each Endeavorer and ask him to report to this meeting such items of information as, population, wealth, education, government, and religion, of each country. As each country is called, have someone point to its location on the map. Secure as many pictures of this region as possible. Place these, assorted by countries, in different parts of the room. or in different rooms of the church building. Then after the general participation, as suggested above, conduct a "missionary tour" as outlined in The Christian Endeavor World to these different countries as represented by the pictures. After this "tour," reassemble in your meeting place, sing a missionary hymn and then pray for missions in Latin America.

Will You Debate?

Suggested topic for debate: "Resolved, that Brazil needs our missionaries more than does Central America."

A Suggested Poster.

On a large cardboard print in capitals at the top, "Take a trip to South America with us." State that the tour will start from your church at the Christian Endeavor hour, with your leader as conductor of the trip. Add an invitation to all to attend your meeting.

Appropriate Hymns.

No. 479, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains"; No. 482, "The Morning Light is Breaking"; No. 397, "Christ for the World we Sing"; No. 319, "Savior. Thy dying Love." (All in The Methodist Protestant Hymnal).

Item For The Information Committee.

The Baptist Society at White Plains, N. Y., conducts a half-hour period of mission study on Latin America before the midweek prayer meeting of the church on Wednesday evening. They not only are learning much about this great undeveloped region, but the prayer meeting, as well as increasing are largely increasing the attendance and interest in Christian Endeavor work by this definite service.

Why Not?

Why not conclude your meeting with a special offering for missions and turn over to your church treasurer to be applied on your local church apportionment for the General Conference Budget, 37 percent of which goes to Foreign Missions?

Christian Endeavor Doings.

Whitaker's Chapel Christian Endeavor Society, Enfield Charge, of which Rev. R. C. Stubbins is the energetic and interested pastor, holds its weekly meetings around from home to home of the Endeavorers on Friday nights. After the meeting. a social hour is planned with light refreshments served. This feature has made everybody better acquainted and has increased the attendance of the young people at the preaching services of the church at least a third since the plan was started.

A new society has been organized in Hebron Church, Orange Charge, with Mr. A. K. McAdams as the interested leader. Brother B M. Williams. a Christian Endeavor enthusiast, is pastor of this charge.

A study course in the "Christian Endeavor Text-book" has been recently completed at High Point College. The class met Sunday afternoon for an hour and was taught by the Dean of Women, Miss Mary Young. Thirteen of the students completed the course and received the Christian Endeavor Expert certificate.

A Christian Endeavor Society in Georgia took for its slogan: "Our best to induce every church member to play on the gridiron against war. drink, and child labor, and not sit in the grand-stand."

The Senior Society of our church in Delta, Pennsylvania, recently painted the outside of their church building white, trimmed in green. The money was all paid in by members of the society and the work arranged for by them.

THE POWER OF THE EARLY CHURCH.

By T. A. Wigginton, D. D.

The Acts of the Apostles will always be one of the most valuable books of the New Testament, because it gives the evidence of the continued power of the risen Christ in and through his disciples. There seems no real reason to doubt that Luke, the author of the third gospel, is also the author of this book which he regards as a continuation of the first. It is addressed to the same person, and begins with a reference to the former treatise which he made, "concerning all the things that Jesus began both to do and to teach," the inference being that this was the record of the things which he continued to do and to teach through the power of the Spirit working in and through his disciples. We have here the record of the fulfillment of his promise to be with them and abide in them.

From this time forward, we have to do with a new power in the world, or with the same power manifesting itself through a new agency—the power of the risen Christ manifesting itself in and through his disciples. It is of the greatest evidential value that we find here a manifestation of that which began to be manifested in the person of Jesus Christ. There is not only the power of Jesus Christ manifest in their work; it also bears the same characteristic marks. The disciples recognized it as the unmistakable fellowship of their risen Lord. When the spirit came upon them, it was the assurance of his risen power in them, and the assurance that God had made him both Lord and Christ Acts 2:36.

The Power of Unity.

In seeking the sources of the power of the early church, one of the first things to impress us is the remarkable unity which they exibited. Even in those tragic hours when hope lay dead, there was still a strong sense of fellowship among them. About the only indication of straggling of which we have any account is that of the two unknown on the way to Emmaus, and they were soon brought back by a vision of the risen Christ. After his ascension their fellowship appears to have been much closer and more continuous. They were frequently together and much engaged in prayer. It was while they were thus together that the Spirit came upon them and their tongues were loosed. From that time, fear and doubt were gone and they were aflame with a glorious certainty.

The story of the day of Pentecost brings to mind the saying of Jesus that they should do greater works than he, because he went to the Father; for on that day, through the testimony of the united church, voiced in the sermon of Peter, probably more people were converted than had been through the entire ministry of Jesus. The gospel of the living Christ had triumphed over death and the grave. Nor was their fellowship less close after this. The believers all kept together, sharing what they had with one another. They met daily for worship at the temple and broke bread together in their homes. Meantime the Lord added the saved daily to their number. Such was the power of a united church.

The Power Of The Holy Spirit.

Of course it may be said, and truly, that this remarkable power was that of the Holy Spirit; but if they had not continued together in the fellowship of prayer would the Holy Spirit have been poured out upon them? Are we not in some measure indebted to a united body of disciples for this manifestation of the Holy Spirit? There has to be a witnessing church if the Holy Spirit would have the fullest expression. Should we not have a greater manifestation of the Spirit if we were all drawn together by our common love for Jesus Christ and fellowship with him, instead of driven apart by our discussions of things about him? Of course, the greatest power in the Christian church is that of the Holy Spirit, but the condition favorable to the fullest manifestation of that power is a united church.

Indeed, it may be questioned whether the church of today realizes more than a tithe of the power of the Spirit which it might enjoy because of the lack of that essential unity which is necessary to its fullest manifestation. Admitting all this, none of us is justified in not seeking the power of the Spirit is his own life because of a lack of unity It is true that we are stronger for the association with likeminded men and women, but our Lord Jesus Christ is ready to bestow the fulness of his spirit upon any fully consecrated life. If we have not the inspiring fellowship which would assist us to full consecration, we should seek it nevertheless.

The Power of a High Conviction.

We shall never cease to marvel at the wonderful change which came over the disciples with the pouring out of the Holy Spirit upon them. All their timidity was gone. This is made all the more manifest as we allow our attention directed by the story to the apostles especially Peter and John. We recall how they all "forsook him and fled" at the time of the betrayal and arrest, though John made a quick recovery and Peter a laggard one; and how Peter, taken at a disadvantage by his position, was betrayed into a three fold denial of discipleship We recall, also, how they were so overwhelmed by the crucifixion of Jesus that they appeared to have no expectation of his resurrection, and how, when assured of that, they still lacked full assurance of the continuation of his power.

All this is changed by the coming of the Spirit. This was the final touch of assurance of continued fellowship with their risen and ascended Lord Peter is the leader, as he had usually been. While the people were wondering, or mocking, Peter stood up without a trace of timidity and boldly told them that the risen Jesus, having ascended to his place with God, "and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath poured forth this which ye see and hear." "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly, that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified." Assured of contact with his living Lord Peter's conviction swept everything before it.

The Power Of Unshaken Courage.

Later, Peter and John, after the great interest created by the healing of the lame man at the gate of the temple Beautiful, when called to account because of their bold preaching of Jesus Christ as Lord, displayed great courage in maintaining their purpose to continue to preach Jesus Christ, no matter what they said or did about it. The rulers were greatly amazed at this boldness of the disciples of one whom they had put to a humiliating death. It was the boldness of the unshaken courage which came from the unalterable conviction that Jesus Christ was risen and ruling, and that he was with them in the power of his Spirit. They had been the instruments of his power in carrying on the work which he had begun.

The rulers were to learn later that the menace of death had no power over men of this new courage. They were to learn that they were able, not only, to carry forward the work of their Lord whom these rulers had crucified, but that they also had the courage to die as he died. When Stephen was arraigned, he preached Christ with the greatest fearlessness to those who accused him, and when he was dying prayed for those who put him to death as did his great Master before him. The rulers of the world were confronted with a new kind of courage; the courage—not to die in the heat of battle, but to die joyfully with no weapons in their hands, as their witness to the truth. Against such, the world is powerless.—The Presbyterian Advance.

A SICK BABY AND A CAT.

One day last autumn, when chilly days first came on, Baby Winifred, awakened with a hoarse cry. The young mother's heart was filled with fear. The dreaded croup had come, and she was alone; there was no one to send for the doctor.

Just then sober old Sally, the tortoise shell cat, came slowly up the garden path from the barn. The mother remembered that Sally had been trained to carry notes to the store—grandpa's store at the foot of the lane—she had never been known to fail in carrying them.

Calling old puss, she hastily wrote:

"Send the doctor at once; baby has croup." She tied it about the soft, plump neck and said: "Run, Sally, as fast as ever you can! Run on the fence; hurry and give it to grandpa!"

Off went Sally, never minding the barks of impertinent dogs or friendly calls of her relations; and the doctor was in the house in ten minutes.

"I was on the street," he said, "at the store door, when old Sally came running on the fence as fast as her four feet would carry her. I feared there was trouble, but waited till she could reach us. I think Sally has never forgotten how I took fish bones out of her throat with pinchers. She always seems so glad to see me."

The very next day Sally had a new collar, on which was engraved, "From baby to his faithful postman."—Selected.

THE LINNET'S HOSPITAL.

One morning, ten years ago, Dr. Emma Reed, a dentist with offices on the eighth floor of a building in the heart of the business district of San Diego, California, heard a fluttering against her office window. She looked out and saw a little brown bird on the sill. Every few minutes it would flutter against the glass, utter a plaintive cry, and drop back to the ledge.

Dr. Reed opened the window slowly, put out her hand and picked the bird up. It was a linnet with a mangled foot. The doctor immediately set about the work of amputation. With scissors she clipped away the torn toes, washed the wound, put on a healing lotion, bound up the stub of leg, and the bird flew away.

The next morning he came back hopping on one foot and acting very friendly and chipper.

That day Dr. Reed fastened a feeding-pan on her window ledge, and in a few weeks Mr. Lame Linnet became a regular boarder and a frequent visitor inside the dental rooms whenever he found the window open.

He never acted the least bit afraid; he liked to play on the desk among the pencils and pens, and sometimes he indulged in tearing the letters and bits of paper that he found there. He would sit very still for several minutes at a time, watching the doctor at work, and seemed quite pleased when she would stroke his feathers.

One day, when he came for his breakfast, he brought a friend with a broken leg. Dr. Reed set the leg in splints and dressed it each day until it was well.

Nine times Mr. Lame Linnet brought sick and ailing feathered friends to Dr. Reed for treatment, and not in any single case did the doctor plead stress of business. Every bird received her immediate attention.

The demands upon her hospitality have become so great that Dr. Reed has branched out from one window sill equipment to three, and every morning in the year from two to three hundred little birds eat in her open-air dining room.

If she is late in serving their breakfast of hemp and other seed, they scold, peck at the glass and act like impatient harvest hands waiting for a meal. But as soon as the pans are filled with food, their tones change from complaints into songs of thanks and joy.

Dr. Reed says she knows when a bird is sick; when frightened; when hungry; when they are in love; when they are expecting babies, and when one mourns for a mate. She affirms that they speak as plainly as humans, if one only understands their language.

While the linnets thank Dr. Reed in song and chirps for her kindness, she, in turn, tells of the lessons they have taught her of patience, of trust, of unselfishness and of brotherly love.—D. C. Petsloff, in Banner.

KEEPING SPORT OUT OF MISCHIEF.

"We're going to have a splendid fire," said Jack with enthusiasm.

"The pile will be 'most high as the house," cried Jim.

"Oh, won't it be fun?" echoed Mary.

The children were alone that afternoon. And they were as busy as little beavers, raking up the yard. It was a good deal of work, but they didn't mind for they would have such fun afterward watching the bonfire. Besides, mother had promised them marshmallows to toast!

So Jack and Mary and Jim worked away diligently. Only Sport would not work!

Now Sport was always with the children. Every morning he trotted along the country road with them on their way to school. Sometimes he carried a lunch basket or a mitten, for it made him very proud to help. And every afternoon he was waiting to see them safely home. You would have thought that Jack and Mary and Jim couldn't be trusted to go alone. At any rate, Sport was convinced that without him they would surely be lost.

But when it came to raking leaves, Sport wasn't a bit of help. He would crouch beside the pile and bark. Then he would make a plunge and send the leaves flying in every direction. How he chased them! But they whirled so gaily in the breeze that no wonder he took them for butterflies!

At first the children thought this amusing. They were so fond of Sport that whatever he did made them happy. But after their pile had been scattered several times, it didn't seem such fun.

"Stop it, Sport; get away," said Jack.

But it wasn't any use to drive Sport away. He took that for part of the game. And as soon as the children returned to their raking, back he came more like a whirlwind than ever.

"We've got to tie him up," said Jack.

"You won't hurt him?" cried Mary.

"'Course not, said Jack. "Where's some rope?"

"We can take the rope off the sled," Jim suggested.

Sport was delighted when they brought out the sled. There wasn't any snow, but he was quite willing to drag his friends about over the leaves, if they wished. He caught the rope in his teeth, ready to pull. But why were they putting the rope around his neck? Sport's delight changed to perplexity. And when they tied him to a tree and left him, he expressed his hurt feelings in howls.

With no Sport to hinder the work went on rapidly. The wind was rising, and an occasional gust caught the leaves. In spite of this the raking was soon finished and the pile ready to light. Jack struck a match and started the blaze. Fanned by the wind, the whole pile broke into flame.

And then Jack discovered that the bonfire was too close to the house. The wind was carrying the flames in that direction!

Jack began beating at the bonfire with his rake.

"Get some water," he shouted to Jim.

Jim rushed away. But in his confusion he couldn't find a pail. The flames were spreading. Mary caught up another rake to help Jack. Their efforts served only to make the fire burn more fiercely. The wind lifted bunches of the burning leaves and hurled them across the yard.

"Hold them down with your rake, Mary," Jack cried.

He ran to the woodpile and began dragging boards to keep the bonfire from blowing away. Jim had found the pails and was pumping furiously. Mary was doing her best to hold the pile against the wind, when an extra gust tugged at the mass beneath her rake. And half the pile rose into the air to fall blazing upon the porch!

A scream from Mary, and answering bark, a flash of tawny fur—and Sport had hurled himself upon the porch and was stamping and scattering the burning leaves. He had gnawed through the rope and freed himself just in time.

In a few moments the fire was checked, and the children hung over Sport, petting and praising him and binding up his scorched paws.

"If he hadn't got loose," said Jack soberly, "the house might have burned down."

"We won't ever tie him up again," declared Jim.

"And we thought," laughed Mary, with her arms about the shaggy neck, "that we were keeping Sport out of mischief. But he kept us out of mischief instead!"—Abigail Burton, in S. S. Times.

THE MAN OF THE HOUSE.

"But mother," argued Jean, "Frankie is not a man. He's only eight years old and I'm eleven."

"Well, he's going to be a man," replied her mother quietly, as she opened the oven door and a delicious odor of spices floated over the hot kitchen.

"All right," sniffed Jean, slamming the cookie cutter down very crossly on the rolled out cookie dough (just as if the dough were to blame). "I bet Frankie will spoil the party."

"I hope nobody else will spoil the party," answered her mother, meaningly.

Jean bit her lip to keep from saying more.

She was mad! Her father was away on a business trip and tomorrow was Thanksgiving Day and a lot of people had been invited to come for Thanksgiving dinner. Of course, Dad always sat at the head of the table and served the others. That was as it should be. But what was mother planning to do, but to let little Frankie sit in his father's place? Jean thought it was awful! She felt she ought to be the one to sit there, or at least at the foot of the table with her mother at the head.

"I don't know when I've felt so cross at mother," she told herself.

Frankie felt just the other way about the arrangement. He thought his mother was quite right. When Dad was away he was the man of the house. So, of course, his place was at the head of the table.

"If you don't behave I'll give you nothing but the neck," he threatened, when his sister began to protest.

The dinner party was a family affair. There were three uncles and two aunties and several cousins.

"I'll cut the turkey and you can watch me so next time you'll know how," mother told Frankie.

"Gee!" cried Frankie. "I bet I could do it. You just stab the turkey down with the fork and cut her with long sharp whangs. Blip! Off with her legs and arms! Blip! off with her neck! Jean gets the neck."

"No, don't give anybody the neck," mother said.

Jean decided to be sweet about it after all because there is never any excuse to be ugly over something you can't help. Frankie thought she was afraid of getting the neck.

My! How delicious the air was. You could smell that dinner outside the house even. Mother was a famous cook in the town. The company began coming right after church. Jean met the guests in the front hall and took the ladies upstairs to leave their wraps. Frankie and one of the cousins went out to the garage to see Frankie's white rats.

"I'm going to sit in Dad's place and deal out the eats," said Frankie.

"Well, don't gip me out of anything coming my way," warned Harry, his cousin.

"I'll give you the biggest helping," promised Frankie.

But after all, his mother trusted him and he was bound to do the right thing by everybody. There wasn't any turkey left for hash next day.

The guests all admired Frankie's way of filling his father's place.

"He's a chip off the old block," cried one uncle. "I can just see his Dad sitting there!"

"Isn't he just too cute and neat with his serving!" exclaimed one of the aunties.

Even Jean began to feel quite happy.

All went well and the pies and ice cream and cake were brought on. Mother didn't believe in doing anything by halves on such an occasion, so they had pies AND ice cream And cake. The cake had double frosting, white soft frosting, with a thick hard chocolate frosting on top. It was a wonderful cake. Mother only attempted it a few times each year, at birthdays and Christmas. Frankie was crazy about it.

"I'll stand up and cut this up," he said, his eyes gleaming.

He took the cake knife and made a neat cut. Yum! Such a wonderful chocolatey smell rose out of the cake! The guests all waited. Mother was serving ice cream.

Frankie began cutting up the cake. First he cut quite large pieces, then he suddenly realized that the cake wouldn't go around at that rate, so he cut smaller, but try as he might, the last piece was a mere sliver and the plate went around the table, the ladies taking little pieces and the boys the big ones, but alas! and alack! when the plate came back to Frankie there were only a few crumbs where once the beautiful cake had stood.

Frankie had been watching anxiously, and when he saw his cousin Harriet take the last piece, he felt so badly, he forgot that he was sitting in his father's place, and that he was the man of the house and all that. Tears rushed into his eyes. He could not swallow, and then to hide his sorrow, he jumped up and ran upstairs to his room.

It seemed to him (of course, it was after dinner), that he wouldn't have cared if he hadn't had any turkey or cranberry sauce or any of the other eats, if only he had had a piece of that wonderful cake.

He was just locking his door, when he heard footsteps racing down the hall and Jean burst into the room. Her eyes were dancing.

"Oh, Frankie!" she cried. "I was so sorry. I saw there wasn't going to be enough, so I took a piece for you!" And there it was in her napkin.

"Did you take two pieces?" inquired Frankie, blinking back his tears and feeling very much ashamed of himself.

"No, just one big one, that can be cut in two, see?" replied Jean.

It sure was a big slice.

Frankie took out his penknife and cut the slice in two. They ate the cake and then went down stairs.

"Well, well, Frankie!" cied the uncles in one voice. "We all saved some cake for you."

"Thank you, but just keep it," smiled Frankie. "You see, I-I-er went and—and that is, I had to bring one of my rats." And he showed it sticking its head out of his pocket.

The ladies all screamed, and mother said. "Sit down in your place, dear, and don't let that thing get loose."

Frankie walked over to Jean and pulled her up from her place and sat in it himself.

"Why, Frankie!" she cried. "Where shall I sit?"

"Guess you're older and ought to sit opposite mother," mumbled Frankie. "Guess when you cut cake you cut cake."

"You can't cut your cake and eat it too," said one of the uncles, but Frankie was sure he was mistaken. Maybe he hadn't quoted the old saying right.

"Well, I got something to be thankful for," said Frankie. "I got some cake, even if I did cut it!"—Selected.

THE SCARLET DRAGON.

Margaret Homer Clyde, in Christian Union Herald

It was Saturday before commencement in the Meadow school, and at the door of Doctor Greyson's office were gathered the girls who were coming back, waiting to reserve their rooms for the coming year.

Foremost among them was Nan Beechem, her fluffy head as conspicuous as her personality. "You know, 'Doctor Greyson," she said, "my cousin from the West enters in the fall, and we're going to room together in No. 21."

Doctor Greyson consulted the chart at his elbow. "No. 21 is already taken," he replied pleasantly. "How would No. 23 do?"

"Taken?" inquired Nan briefly.

"Yes. Lucile Morton, your present roommate, came in yesterday to ask for it."

"Lucile? Yesterday? Lucile had no right to ask ahead of time. I've been here three years and I have a right to the room."

Doctor Greyson smiled. "Then you two haven't talked it over?"

"There is nothing to talk over. Lucile knows that my cousin is coming. She will have to find another room."

Somebody in the group gave a gasp. Who but Nan would dare talk back?

"Suppose you tell me," the cool, gray eyes twinkled behind their glasses, "suppose you tell me why you prefer No. 21 to No 23? Is the view from the window better?"

"No."

"Are the closets larger?"

"No!"

"It might be gracious, but not right."

"Why not?"

"Because I've been here longer, and the old girls always have first choice."

Doctor Greyson was obviously enjoying himself. "And you feel it your duty to uphold the tradition of the school?"

"Well, it is the tradition of the school."

"Yes," he agreed; "though there is nothing in the charter, I believe, which requires it."

Somebody in the crowd giggled. But Doctor Greyson was serious.

"It isn't the room I want," burst out Nan. "It's my rights."

"That sounds strangely familiar," mused Doctor Greyson.

"Then must I give up my room?"

"Not unless you choose. Only let me know what you decide about it— you and Lucile."

Nan crossed the lawn accompanied by an admiring retinue. "Don't give in," said one.

"The old girls have first choice," contributed another.

"I didn't think," added a third, "she'd do such a thing."

"We were always the best of friends," explained Nan, "until I told her about Cousin Jean. That made a difference right away."

The girls looked respectful—as always when Cousin Jean's name was mentioned. Cousin Jean's father was a cattle king; Cousin Jean's clothes alone cost more than the tuition at the Meadow school; Cousin Jean's last birthday present had been a car which she drove herself. And Cousin Jean was coming in the fall to room with Nan in No. 21.

"By the way," inquired someone, "where is Lucile today?"

"Sick," announced Nan briefly. "Sore throat. I must say it seems careless of her to catch cold in June.'

Lucile was in bed when she entered. She stirred a little on her pillow, but did not open her eyes. She was probably ashamed to, Nan thought, after that underhanded trick.

Nan was never underhanded. Anybody in the school could have told you that, from Doctor Greyson down. He told Mrs. Greyson that she reminded him of a crimson-rambler, little thorny to the touch, but always climbing up and away toward the free air of heaven. And Mrs. Greyson told him he was a soft-headed old idiot. And he admitted that he was.

He was still a soft-headed old idiot, he told himself, as he walked among his roses some hours later, too absorbed in speculating upon Nan's pending decision to pay proper attention to the blossoming of a new rose, brought to him with great care by a missionary friend from Persia.

Roses were a queer hobby, perhaps, for an able-bodied man of sixty-five. But then so were girls. And if there was one thing Doctor Greyson loved more than the rare and exquisite blooms in his garden, it was the equally rare and exquisite blooms which he cultivated in his other garden, known as the Meadow School for Girls.

"Well," he inquired, "how about the room?"

"Oh, I mean to keep it, of course; but that isn't what brought me. Lucile is sick and the matron's away, so I came to you."

Doctor Greyson looked grave. "I'll telephone the doctor at once," he said.

An hour later the third floor was quarantined, for Lucile was pronounced ill with scarlet fever.

"Doctor Greyson," it was a rather white-faced Nan who approached him, "my little brother had scarlet fever and I helped to nurse him. I'll take care of Lucile, if you say so, until you get a nurse. I've been exposed now anyhow, so I might as well."

Doctor Greyson whirled about and looked at her sharply. There was a queer gleam behind his glasses. But he only said, "Very well, Nan; if you're willing to brave it."

It was a strange night to Nan as she sat between the bed and the table, with its clock and its medicines. Now and again the June breeze, busy among the roses, paused to catch the curtain at the window and fling into the hot room a handful of perfume. But no sound broke the stillness except the ticking of the clock and the breathing of the sick girl.

Then Lucile stirred and began talking in a queer voice that made speech more uncanny than silience. "There were ten of them," she said, "and they everyone looked me over. I might have been a—a monkey from Africa."

Nan stared and laughed. What was this babble of monkeys from Africa?

"And I was so tired. I hadn't slept much on the train. And when the matron took me to my room, I was almost crying. I could not help it, mother."

Nan jumped and did not laugh. Lucile was talking to her mother. And Lucile's mother was a thousand miles away.

"But when I got to my room, she helped me take my things off. And she gave me her kimona till my trunk came. And she told me to lie down."

Nan listened intently. "That was me," she whispered ungrammatically.

"And the next day she introduced me to the girls, and took me to classes with her. If it hadn't been for her I just couldn't have stood it. And I couldn't come home. It was too far."

Nan found it necessary to dissolve a powder vigorously.

"And I thought, mother, she really cared about me. But she didn't. All she cares about is her Cousin Jean. And now she wants to get rid of me."

Nan set the glass down with a bang. But throughout the night she did much thinking.

Sabbath morning dawned flawless. Across the green of the campus flattered a white procession on its way to the baccalaureate service. Nan watched it disappear within the chapel door. Then she turned away from the window, feeling remote and lonely.

The entire third floor had been hastily deserted. There were sheets hung, drenched with disinfectants, at the stairways leading to it. No foot-fall broke the stillness until the doctor's step sounded at the door. And when he had gone the silence settled deeper than before.

At noon a tray of food arrived at the stairway, to which point Nan returned the empty dishes, plunging them into the bucket of antiseptic solution placed there for that purpose.

Returning to the room, she was greeted by a low whistle from without, and on hurrying to the window she found awaiting her, like a lover bold in a castle garden, an elderly gentleman in spectacles, his gray hair rumpled by the breeze as he elevated his chin to peer up at her prison.

"Well, lady of the enchanted tower," inquired Doctor Greyson, "how goes the day?"

"Right merrily, most noble baron of the castle," she returned promptly, "for the knight of pills and powders doth declare that the scarlet dragon who hath laid a spell upon the princess will shortly be slain."

"And further news hath this moment arrived," was the reply, "namely, a demand that the drawbridge be lowered to admit the entrance of Miss Invary, from the Frameton Hospital."After which the good doctor descended with a bump to the most prosaic of twentieth-century speech. For the language of romance is difficult to sustain in middle age.

Life in No. 21 became more cheerful after the arrival of Miss Invary. The three of them, as the patient improved, had famous times. They even came to joke about their prison and the dragon that had shut them in.

"You two won't want to see this room soon again, I'm sure," contended Miss Invary.

"Poor old room," commiserated Nan. "It wasn't to blame. It was only the scarlet dragon."

The last dress had fluttered from the campus long before Nan and Lucile and Miss Invary emerged from their seclusion. But there was still an afternoon and night left before they could start upon their journey home. Nan seized her first unwatched moment and made her way to Doctor Greyson's office.

"I came to tell you," she announced abruptly, "that Lucile can have the room—any room next year."

"Then you've talked it over?"

"Not at all. But I'd be ashamed to ask for anything she wants."

"But what about your rights? And the tradition of the school?"

"I'm having my rights. The right to offer her what she wants."

"And she wants the room?"

Nan stared.

"Lucile was here not ten minutes ago." said Doctor Greyson, "to say that she would not think of taking your room from you if you wanted it. Indeed, she intimated that the best room in the whole building was not quite good enough for you."

Nan still stared, then laughed. "We both wanted it," she said, "and now we both don't want it."

Just then a shadow darkened the doorway. "Come in, Lucile," called Doctor Greyson. See if you two girls can settle a controversy."

Both girls flushed. Then Doctor Greyson, drawing a letter from the pile at his elbow, said to Nan: "Perhaps you'd like to read this. It came this morning from your uncle."

She took the letter and briskly unfolded it. "Why, the mean thing!" she exclaimed. "She isn't coming at all."

"Who isn't?" asked Lucile.

"Cousin Jean. And to think of all the trouble she's made us."

Then catching Lucile's hand, she turned to the desk and said with a little bow, "Doctor Greyson, will you let us both have No. 21 next year?"

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

The Postal Card. W. F. Kennett, Editor.

A Debt Of Gratitude.

Recently The Postal Card said—TheM. P. rald has been unsually rich since the close our last Annual Conference. Since then have been trying to get new subscribers the Herald and to get old subscribers to new.

In thinking of the Herald and of what it s accomplished for the North Carolina Con-ence we have decided that the N. C. Con-ence owes to Dr. McCulloch, Editor of Herald, a great debt of gratitude and at we should not wait until he is dead to y so. Dr. McCulloch came back to North rolina, his native State, after spending sev-al years in Michigan and other States, for express purpose of helping to establish ollege in N. C. The Herald was established, as a necessary adjunct to the establishing of a college. The Publishing House, in Greensboro was the second step and it was a long step. Through the Herald Dr. McCulloch kept the Publishing House before the Conference until finally it was completed at a cost of from ten to fifteen thousand dollars. Now it is worth not less than sixty thousand dollars. And now the splendid college building stands at High Point and nearly 200 students go in and out of those buildings daily. and new homes are springing up in the adjacent territory.

In some twenty to twenty-five years from now the Triangle—that territory inside of a line from High Point to Winston-Salem and from Winston-Salem to Greensboro and from Greensboro back to High Point, will be thickly settled and finally these three cities will touch each other. For a few years to come our High Point College may have to continue to struggle; but if we stand by it and continue to sacrifice for it the High Point College will be the pride of the N. C. Conference and for its existence and success we will owe to Dr. Joseph Flavius McCulloch a great debt of gratitude.

(We thank Brother Kennett for this generous expression of his esteem. In the matter referred to, the editor has been only one of a number who have wrought together for our noble church.)

Shiloh Charge.—We are glad to send in our report for our Lord and Master the past year. Though it be little, we have done what we could.

Largest number present, 73; smallest number present, 28; average number 40; number of chapters read past year, 22,954; Collection for the year, $42.00.

We are facing a new year with the same resolution.

Report for January 3, 1926: Sunday school at 11 o'clock. Number present, 42; collection, $1.22; number of chapters read past week, 355.

We have our same pastor and gladly welcome him, Rev. J. R. Gurtner.

Reporter, Ethel Sunlin.

Shiloh Church, N. Davidson Circuit.—Probably the largest crowd that has convened at Shiloh in many years gathered there on Sunday afternoon, January 2, to be at the burial service which was held for Mr. D. C. Cope and his son, Edward, who were killed in the deplorable accident which occurred at Lexington on New Year's night when the fire truck was wrecked and three men instantly killed The funeral was held in the theatre at Lexington, and concluded at the graves in Shiloh cemetery. The other victim, J. Howard Michael, was buried at Reeds immediately after the burial at Shiloh.

We had a very nice Christmas exercise on Christmas night. The music by the boys and girls and also the male chorus was greatly enjoyed. A very nice offering was received.

The Sunday school elected officers and teachers last Sunday. We are planning for a very active and we hope a useful year's work.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies are growing in numbers and interest all the time. Our pastor stands by and gives enthusiasm to the young people and they greatly appreciate it. The church is justly proud of her young people.

The Sunday school gave a rising vote of thanks to the Berrier boys for their generosity in making it possible for our church to be dressed up in a new coat of paint both outside and inside. John, Richard Floyd, and Carl, all sons of our class leader, Brother W. J. Berrier, still hold their membership in their home church, even though they live in Jacksonville, Fla. Even though they could go to more beautiful and fashionable churches in their adopted city, yet, we are glad they choose to stay with us, and come to worship with us every time they pass this way. We don't forget you, boys, neither does He who seeth in secret and rewardeth openly.

Shiloh wishes for one and all a prosperous and fruitful new year in the Master's work. Let's pray more, love more, and work more to bring the Heavenly Kingdom to earth.

Mrs. Wiley Shoaf, Reporter.

High Point.—The New Year was begun in a very appropriate manner by observing the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, and a large number of the members joined in the sweet and impressive communion.

A special collection was taken for Rev. D. A. Braswell, of Concord, who has been very unfortunate. The choir with Prof. Dan. W. Smith at the organ, rendered a beautiful anthem, "For all the saints."

The Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies held their monthly business session, on Monday afternoon with Mrs. L. J. Diffee, 305 Johnson St. In the absence of Mrs. W. P. Pickett, in Florida, Mrs. H. A. Garrett will serve as Treasurer of the Foreign Society. We are glad to welcome one new addition to the Home Society, Mrs. J. H. Jennings.

High Point College closed its doors on Tuesday, December 22, for the Christmas holidays, and the faculty and students dispersed to their homes to enjoy a rest of two weeks, only a few boys remaining in McCulloch Hall. Classes resumed work this Tuesday morning at 8:30 o'clock. Miss Vera Idol, of the English Department, spent the holidays in Florida, Miss Young went home to Henderson, and Miss Williams to Reidsville.

The Young People's Missionary Society will meet this evening at the home of Mrs. Jones Burns on English St., and the officers and teachers of the Sunday school will hold a meeting at the church at the same time.

Mrs. H. A. Moffitt has been elected President of the Aunt Lizzie Welch Class of the Sabbath school in place of Mrs. C. C. Robbins, who resigned.

We were pleased to have Mrs. Margaret Hhrley, a nurse in Guilford General Hospital, unite with our membership on last Sunday morning.

We regret to note the illness of Mrs. R. M. Andrews, and her many friends are hoping to see her out again very soon. She is greatly missed from the choir.

We are delighted to learn that Miss Millie Bowman, of the Children's Home, who has been seriously ill, is greatly improved.

Caroleen.—A goodly number attended class meeting last night. Brother Helmes is proving him self a good shepherd, our people are liking him just fine, he is handling things well. ..Some time ago the good people of Shelby and Caroleen met at the Caroleen Church and stormed the parsonage and rushed in on our pastor and family and the dining table was heavily laden.

I heard the pastor say that we stopped him from going to the grocery store for some time. J. B. Sink, Reporter.

Hollister, Halifax Charge.—Everything seems to be moving on nicely. Owing to bad weather our Sunday school was a little small yesterday and small congregation for church service last night, but I tell you folks we have got a preacher worth having. When he gets to church and finds no fire he makes his own fire and does his own preaching. He preached a good sermon last night, we're glad conference sent Brother Spencer back to us.

A Christmas program was given by the Sunday school children December 26th, which was enjoyed by all. After the program the children were delighted by seeing Santa Claus come in; they knew something was in store for them. We are about to lose all our young people. Six couples have been married the past few weeks. We wish each of them a long happy life together.

If this escapes the waste basket, will write again.

Wishing the Editor and every body a happy and prosperous new year. Reporter.

Concord.—The congregation was very large Sunday morning considering the bad weather. There were 192 present at Sunday school, and about the usual attendance at church. Bro. Fogleman discussed "Appropiating the Christmas Ideal" which was very interesting and helpful. Before the sermon the church subscribed its full quota of subscriptions to the Methodist Protestant. These were secured in a very short time.

At the regular evening service this evening Rev. W. A. Murray, of Charlotte, was with us and talked in the interest of the Near East Relief work. He delivered an interesting message, pointing out the reason why we should help support these orphan boys and girls. At the close of the service an offering was taken for the Near East Relief work.

Last Sunday our regular communion service was held, many of the people entered into this service. Before the communion the pastor talked on "The Lord's Supper—Its Significence." Sunday night he discussed "The Race of Life," Using Hebrews 12:1-2 as the text.

On Sunday before Christmas the Senior Christian Endeavor visited the County Home and rendered a Christmas program. Fruits and other presents were carried to the inmates of the home.

Our Christmas exercise was held on Christmas Eve night. At the close of the service an offering was taken for Brother Cowan. Mr. Cowan entered the ministry from this church and we are praying that he will soon recover and again enter into the work which we know he loves.

The first quarterly conference was held Monday night, January 4. A large number was present and the reports show that the first quarter's work has been very fine.

Brother Clark, one of our faithful members, is seriously ill at his home on Depot Street. Mr. Clark has been in ill health for some time. We are praying that the Lord may see fit to restore him to his health again, so that he may be back with us.

The Sunday School Band, which is progressing nicely under the leadership of Mr. Fisher, rendered music at the community Watch Night Service at the Y. M. C. A.

Bernice Nash, Reporter.

Mebane.—It was just after conference it started, the pounding, I mean, and reached one climax in the form of a Thanksgiving turkey from a family not members of our church, also a Thanksgiving cake and other forms of prepared food from families of our church.

But the sure enough pounding came later on a Wednesday night about the prayer meeting hour. all sorts of edibles and wood to cook it and kindling to light the fire.

Then came hog killing and the pastor of Mebane church with his eyes shut can always tell when that comes. And four splendid cakes coming in from as many families indicated Christmas as something of the kind even without looking at the calanders.

Ladies Aid Active.

Another thoughtful kindness very much appreciated was the renovating of the parsonage by the Ladies' Aid, the providing of curtains and draperies also a beautiful drugget.

Church Attendance.

Church attendance has been good, also prayer meeting attendance at times. Sunday school attendance has been reaching high water mark, but some of the workers say it must go still higher. A contest for atendance and new scholars beween the Junior Philathea and Junior Baraca is proving interesting and helpful. We are greatly in need of more class rooms.

Life of Christ Study.

A feature it is hoped will add a touch of interest to the mid-week prayer meeting is a study of the life of Christ. Since the Sunday school lessons for the quarter are incidents in the life of Christ, it is proposed to study each Wednesday night that part of this life lying between the lesson of the preceding Sunday and that of the following Sunday, thus during the three months covering as best we may the entire period of His recorded life.

Radio In Church.

The Christian Endeavor Societies announced a watch night service from 11 to 12 P. M. to celebrate religiously the going of the old and the coming of the new year. Through the kindness of friends a radio set was installed in the church. So that in addition to the program of readings, Scripture, songs, and devotion arranged by the young people, we enjoyed the program given by radio from the old Trinity Church in New York city. The most interesting feature was the chime music, which was clear and most beautiful. Announcement was made that the chimes by which this music was produced were brought over from England in 17 hundred and something. We were not surprised at ourselves that we lingered long after the mid-night hour to hear to the finish the New York city church program. T. M. Johnson.

Haw River Ct.—Snowed out last Saturday. So we moved up one week with our quarterly conference and will hold it at Fairgrove on Saturday before the third Sunday in January, at 1 o'clock P. M.

In spite of the snow we had a good congregation at Midway Sunday. P. M.

We moved into new quarters (the school house) to give the old church, whose body has grown too feeble by reason of its long years of faithful service rendered to Methodist Protestants, to be a comfortable and safe place for the good people to worship in.

We hope that with this much needed rest she may soon recuperate.

Mrs. Dr. Shreve, one of our most faithful members at Brown Summit and one who out of her great heart of love and sympathy, has almost given her life to relieve the sick and suffering of our community, is in St. Luke's Hospital, Richmond, Va. Her many friends are anxiously hoping. and praying for her speedy recovery. W. D. Reed.

Mizpah Church, Haw River Charge.—On Wednesday night. January 6, the Mizpih Philathea class held its last meeting of the year, at the church. After the reports of the year were read and discussed, the new officers for the year were elected as follows.

President—Miss Katherine Stanley; Vice president,Mrs. M. L. Wagoner; Treasurer, Mrs. H. G. Jones; Assistant teacher, Miss Katherine Stanley; Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Ruth Hill; Assistant Secretary and Treasurer. Miss Wava Diamond, Reporter, Miss Pauline Crowder.

With these new officers we feel sure of a successful year.

We are hoping to do much better work this year than we did the past one. We feel that we will.

It was decided at this meeting to have a business meeting of the class on Wednesday night after the first Sunday of each month.

With best wishes to the Herald and all its readers.

Tennessee Conference.

—WHY DO YOU GO TO CHURCH?

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 17.

Jesus And Nicodemus.

Lesson Text: John 3:5-17.

Golden Text. John 3:16.

The Central Truth: "Jesus said,.....I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John 11:25,26.

Scriptural Points.

1. A curious but earnest seeker after truth came to Jesus at night to have a talk together over the great verities of life and destiny. Nicodemus was a prominent leader among the Jews. He was always friendly to Jesus. He defended Jesus against those who plotted his death. He pled that He be given a square trial. He said: "Doth our law judge any man before it hear him, and know what he doeth. John 7:52. He also assisted Joseph of Arimathea in fitting the body of Jesus for burial. He furnished "a mixture of myrrh and olives, about a hundred pound weight."

2. Like the rich young ruler he was concerned about the life to come. Jesus replied to the inquiry of his heart rather than to the compliments of his lips. "If a man die, shall he live again?" is a question as old as the race. To this question Jesus gives the only answer, "Ye must be born again."

3. Jesus gives a new definition of the kingdom of God. It is not a worldly kingdom, with earthly pomp and power and glory. It is an inward work and rule of the Spirit. "Behold the kingdom of God is within you." It is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

4. "Born of water and of the Spirit." This statement does not teach baptismal regeneration. Since Jesus is speaking of the spiritual birth, it must be spiritual water that is mentioned here. It is the same kind of water that Jesus spoke of to the woman of Sychar, when he said: "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." John 4.14. This water of life is the means of the new birth, and the Holy Spirit is the Agent who applies this means.

5. "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." It is spiritual life, the life of the Spirit, the life hid with Christ in God.

6. The fact of the new birth is plain enough, the evidence is abundant. But the method is not understandable. It is as mysterious as the movement of the winds.

7. Nicodemus was unable to understand even the fact of this spiritual change. He lacked the spiritual vision of those who live the life of the Spirit. Paul took note of this inability of the natural man in 1 Cor. 2:14: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

8. "We speak that we do know." God's words are truth because God spoke them. And because God is true and His truth is beyond human comprehension, it must be accepted by faith, rather than at the bar of uncertain human reason. "By faith we understand that the words were formed by the word of God."

9. Jesus claims undisputed authority to speak the truth of God, because He has both ascended into and decended from heaven as a place, and still lives in heaven as a state.

10. Jesus speaks of His crucifixion as the power of God to save from sin and impart the new life. It is faith in the crucified One that brings salvation.

11. And He speaks further of the wonderful motive of the atonement. The plan of salvation was fathered in the great heart of God. God is love in all the essence of being. "God so love the world that he gave his only begotten son" that all who will might receive everlasting life.

Practical Points.

I. High-sounding compliments often reveal a sincere purpose. Genuine praise comes from a sincere and devoted heart. God rightly claims a monopoly of worship. "Thine is the Kingdom, the power, and the glory."

1. There is no salvation by resolution, reformation, ritualism, or good works. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

3. The new birth is the impartation of life to the dead soul. The natural man is dead in trespasses and sins. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ."

4. The Holy Ghost is the Agent who imparts the new birth. "Not by works of righteousness that we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3:5.

5. Regeneration is the beginning of a development or transformation into the complete image of Christ. "Till we all come in unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. 4.13.

6. The chief ambition of any life is to become like Jesus Christ, the Model of character and conduct for every age. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18.

THE CHRISTIAN AND THE WORD.

It may be safely said that the growth of a Christian is, in the great majority of cases, quite exactly proportioned to the real, applied knowledge of the Word of God. "Is it not for this cause that ye err, that ye know not the Scriptures nor the power of God," And so the Word becomes the greatest and most rational means to personal acquaintance with God. We may as certainly and truly come to know Him through His word as we may come to know a correspondent whom we have never seen through his letters.—Selected.

"Without Him, not one step over the threshold; with Him anywhere!"

WHAT LOVE CAN DO.

Little Robert had been visiting a family of cousins; and though he had been away from home some weeks, he was not anxious to leave the spot where he had been so happy. "I like to stay there," he told Alice, "they have such a beautiful home."

Alice was five years older than Robert, and she did not always pay much attention to what he said, but this remark seemed so odd that she closed the book and stared at him. "Did you say aunt Emma had a beautiful home, Bob Reyson? What a funny idea. It's just a plain little cottage."

Bob looked puzzled and did not reply.

But his sister replied: "And their furniture is really old, and some of the carpets worn out, and they have not nice pictures like ours. What makes you think her house is so beautiful?"

Bob thought for a moment before he answered: "I guess it must be because everybody is so nice to everybody else, and nobody scolds or teases."

At first the older sister smiled, and then the color rose in her cheeks. She saw that her brother was nearer right than herself. A fine house and expensive furniture and pictures on the walls are not the things most beautiful. Love and courtesy and kindness can make the plainest, poorest home beautiful, and the lack of them will spoil a palace.—Afton Free Press.

THE ONE WHO WENT.

Somebody went away last night, when all was dim and dark,
The hall clock slow, the lamplight low, the fire but a spark,
The chamber chill, the nursery still, a ghostly moon agleam,
In every bed a sleepyhead, in every heart a dream.
Somebody tiptoed softly out, his bundle on his back,
And good and glad and queer and sad the contents of that pack.
The things you did, the things I did, the things we hoped and thought,
The things we oughtn't to have said, the other things we ought;
The smiles we smiled, the sighs we sighed, the little schemes we schemed,
The laughs we laughed, the tears we cried, the little dreams we dreamed,
And all the rest a gaunt, gray guest had gathered in his sack—
The Old Year, the bent year, and he never will come back!

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

A New Start.

Text: "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God." Hosea 14:1.

Israel had gone back from God. "For thou hast fallen by thine iniquity" is the just indictment of the Most High. Idolatry had become the national sin. Swift punishment had come upon the people. The Assyrian army was threatening them from the north. Their very existence as a nation was trembling in the balance. They were reaping the consequences of their own iniquity. But God was still merciful. He gave Israel another chance. He pledged His mercy to forgive, and His power to uphold His chosen people. "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God."

We are living in a similar age. Many have backslidden from God. Young people especially have forgotten the Rock from whence they were hewn. They have set at naught the religion of their fathers and mothers. They are going after the so-called good things of this world. Carnal entertainment has led them astray. The pleasure of religion does not appeal to them any more. While a few are true to God, the larger number have sold their birthrights for a mess of pottage.

But the Father of mercies is still smiling anxiously and hopefully upon the young peopleof our land. He offers them another chance. The gift of a New Year is God's appeal for a new and better life. The Master of souls and destinies "is come and calleth for thee." Hear and heed this gentle, earnest voice. "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God."

Let the dawn of the new year be the signal for a new start in prayer to God, in right living, and in well-doing.

First, let us consider

A New Start In Prayer.

Every real start to a better life is born in the atmosphere and exercise of prayer. The reason so many good New Year's resolutions come to naught is because God does not get behind them in answer to earnest supplication. No man can lift himself heavenward by tugging at his bootstraps, so to speak. The best of good intentions are entirely unavailing without the power of God in the heart and in the life.

Prayer is the only means of securing this power. "Ask, and ye shall receive." "Ye have not, because ye ask not." Asking is a simple and certain method of getting things from God. It is a privilege within the reach of everyone. God is most willing to grant the petitions of the soul. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good gifts to them that ask them." Since our God is so willing and anxious to give, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

Let it be prayer of penitence. The Ninevites "cried mightly unto God" in their effort to get right with God and live better lives. The publican made a new start by praying "God be merciful to me, a sinner."

Let it be prayer of faith, "Whatsoever ye ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." Without faith it is impossible to please the Giver of every good and perfect girt. "What things soever you desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

Let it be unceasing prayer. Let there be no let-up in supplication. Every day and every hour we need the help that comes from God alone. "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks."

In the next place let us consider

A New Start In Right-living.

Right living consists in purpose, direction, and progress. A fixed determination is half the battle. The Psalmist said, "My heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." Joshua expressed a holy and unshakable purpose when he vowed, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

The new life must be directed Godward and heavenward. The way to glory is a straight line of straight living. "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

And there must be progress. We are urged to lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us and....run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

And the goal of immortality is well worth the heaviest sacrifice and the most strenuous effort. It is the paramount objective of life. "This one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto the things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

In the last place let us consider

A New Start In Well-doing.

Every one has a mission in the world to fill. The Creator has assigned a task to every one. To find out what this life-work is a matter of first importance. So many miss their life calling and become miserable failures. So many fall down on their jobs of divine appointment. And so many shirk the plain path of duty, and reap failure, shame, and remorse. It is a grievous sin to reject the call of God to service. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

It is the command of the Master, "Go, work today in my vineyard." But we don't have to do this work alone. We are workers together with Christ. He has said, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

There must first of all be an entire consecration to God in order to meet the obligations of life acceptably. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

It must be a faithful service. Faithfulness is more indispensable than success. Rewards are rendered according to faithfulness. This is a most precious promise, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." And on the last great day of judgment the Lord of glory will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Make a new start and keep at it, and this will be a happy New Year. "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God."

—The editor was permitted to visit Asheboro last Sunday and attend service in our church at the morning hour. We were impressed with the size and interest shown by the Sunday school. There were 190 present. The congregation at the preaching service almost filled the auditorium. Brother Pritchard's sermon was especially good and appropriate. Interest in the church is growing constantly as gauged by the attendance.

NOT UNDERSTOOD.

Not understood. We move along asunder,
Our paths grow wider as the seasons creep
Along the years; we marvel and we wonder
Why life is life. And then we fall asleep,
Not understood.

Not understood. We gather false impressions,
And hug them closer as the years go by,
'Till virtue often seems to us transgressions;
And thus men rise and fall, and live and die, Not understood.

Not understood. Poor souls with stunted vision
Oft measure giants by their narrow gauge;
The poisoned shafts of falsehood and derision
Are oft impelled 'gainst those who mould the age, Not understood.

Not understood. The secret springs of action,
Which lie beneath the surface and the show,
Are disregarded; with self-satisfaction
We judge our neighbors, and they often go
Not understood.

Not understood. How trifles often change us!
The thoughtless sentences or the fancied slight
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange us,
And on our souls there falls a freezing blight, Not understood.

Not understood. How many breasts are aching
For lack of sympathy? Ah, day by day,
How many cheerless, lonely hearts are breaking?
Now many noble spirits pass away, Not understood.

Oh, God! that men would see a little clearer,
Or judge less harshly where they can not see;
Oh, God! that men would draw a little nearer
To one another, they'd be nearer Thee,
And understand. —Thomas Bracken.

THE LORD'S DAY.

Our Heavenly Father has reserved for his own use but one day out of the week. It is the Lord's day. Being the Lord's own day it can not be our day, therefore we have no right to use it for our own financial advantage or physical pleasure. If we do, we are appropriating to ourselves that which belongs to another.—Selected.

TWO CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Editor:

We have the minutes of the One Hundredth session of the N. C. Conference of our church. It is well gotten up and full of interest. There is quite a difference in the size and appearance of this, and one of those published fifty years or more ago. In those days we were wrought up, as to whether a preacher was a democrat or radical. It was a serious question in the Gilbreathan era whether a preacher was from the east or from the west. I presume that all these now living, are ashamed of both sides of the controversy.

Perhaps fifty years from now I shall be ashamed of having called attention to Resolution three on page 92 of the Journal for 1925. It follows: "Resolved, that this conference place itself on record as being in opposition to any theory being taught in any of the schools of our state, which are supported by taxation, that unites man by blood to the lower animals." I would like to know what we oppose? A theory, or the teaching of it? I would like to know what taxation, unites man by blood to the lower animals. How can it improve any theory to be taught in church schools rather than schools supported by taxation. I wonder if the resolution means anything and if so what is it, I think we had enough vague expressions of belief in our books without that.

While I am at it, I will call attention to Resoltion 1 page 58 of that Journal of the Nity third session. "That this conference goes on record as believing in the inerrancy of the teachings of the Bible and that it condemns the publications in our church papers of any of those things which conflict with the same."

What are teachingse of the bible? "Total depravity?" "Finalperservance ofthesaints!" "Jesus was the son of man?" Is "the immaculate conception" a teaching of the bible or a bull issued by the pope in 1853 or 1854? What can be the purpose of either of these resolutions? There are many things said to be "teachings of the bible" which I do not believe. Some of the "teachings" are diametrically opposite to the bible itself as I read it. I believe in the bible and I believe the bible, but there is a lot of tommy rot "teachings," that I am ashamed of. I am also ashamed of both resolutions and cannot believe they had proper consideration by the conference.

THE DENOMINATIONAL OUTLOOK.

Eastern. Rev. R. F. Day, pastor of the Inwood Church, reports that every class in Western Maryland College has a representative in it from his church. He asked his congregation for $1,200 to take care of improvements made on the property. They gave more than $1,500.—The church at Stamford, Connecticut, had a mortgage burning recently, thus clearing the property.—Improvements have been made at Scullville, N. J., at a cost of $1,600.—The church at Pittston, Pa., has been reopened after improvements costing $15,000. Dr. T. H. Lewis, preached the reopening sermon.—Eleven new members have been added to the membership of Trinity church, Atlantic City.

Georgia (Col.) At the recent session of conference a church with 127 members and a mission with 39 members were received.

Illinois. Rev. Lee Anna Starr, D. D., is the author of a book, "The Bible Status of Women," which has just come from the press of Revell. Dr. Starr is one of the outstanding women preachers of America.—Seventeen members have been received at Cuba.

Indiana. The church at Anderson has been enlarged and rebuilt at a cost of several thousand dollars.—A new church has been organized at Marion.

Maryland. The auditorium of Linthicum Heights church, Baltimore; has been beautified with handsome lamps, the gift of one of the members "in honor of his daughters." St. Luke's, Philadelphia, has been celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. More than $6,000 has been secured toward cancelling the debt on the property.—As a result of the revival services 20 members have been received into the Harper's Ferry Church.—A fine meeting at Lynchburg resulted in thirty additions to the membership.—Grace church, Baltimore had fourteen acessions on a recent Sunday, among them were two Roman Catholics. The Mayor of Baltimore is a member of this church.

Pittsburg. The people of the Connellsvile District have voted to pay for the education of a native young woman in India who is studying medicine. She is to be employed in our hospital there.—At the last communion service five members were received into the Mt. Washington Church.—A farewell reception was given to Rev. C. D. Payne by the members of the Squirrel Hill church on his departure to become Chaplain at Mooseheart.

West Virginia. On a recent Sunday there were 720 people present in the Sunday school at Morganton. The offering was $715.00.—A new church is being erected at Hur.—A basement is being placed under the Mt. Morris church to provide Sunday school rooms. The improvement will cost $3,000.—This is the season of revivals in this conference. Several have reported good results, among them the following: Neal Chapel, Renick circuit, nine accessions; Springhill church, McKim charge, eleven accessions: Pleasant Ridge Church, Tyler charge, thirty-one accessions.

THE EXTRA STITCHES.

Stitching flannel for the poor of the parish engaged the attention of two young girls. "Now we have completed our garments, our work is finished for this season, at least," one of the two girls said with a sigh of relief.

"No, no, wait a moment; just a few moments more," replied the other; and, going into an inner room, she returned with some skeins of crimson silk, and few knots of ribbon and lace.

"Why, what are you doing?" asked her companion with surprise, as the deft fingers swiftly fashioned a dainty edging of crimson silk, frilled in the soft lace at neck and sleeves, and fastened on the bright ribbons here and there.

"These extra stitches take just a moment," was the answer, given with a blush, "and I want to make the dress pretty for some mother's baby."

As the great pile of dresses was ditributed to the needy, that cold winter, one hard-visaged woman burst into tears, and hid her face in the folds of a little dress trimmed with lace and ribbons. "Oh, to think of someone doing this for my baby! I didn't think anybody cared." she sobbed.

"God cares for you and your baby," said the reverent voice of the pastor, who had long sought an opportunity to reach this hardened heart. And for the first time the woman was willing to listen to the sweet, old story. Does this not teach us that there is something more for us to perform beyond the rigid call of simple duty? The extra stitches are surely the threads of gold that beautify and enrich the dull, dark fabric of our too often careless and indifferent charity. —The New York Observer.

TILL HE COME.

By Bishop Edward H. Bickersteth, 1862.

Till He come! O let the words
Linger on the trembling chords;
Let the little while between
In their golden light be seen;
Let us think how heaven and home
Lie beyond that "Till He Come."
When the weary ones we love
Enter on their rest above,
Seems the earth so poor and vast,
All our life-joy overcast?
Hush, be every murmur dumb:
It is only till He come.
Clouds and conflicts round us press.
Would we have one sorrow less?
All the sharpness of the cross,
All that tells the world is loss,
Death and darkness, and the tomb,
Only whisper "Till He Come."
See, the feast of love is spread,
Drink the wine, and break the bread:
Sweet memorials,—till the Lord
Call us round His heavenly board;
Some from earth, from glory some,
Severed only till He come.

O members of the Church of Christ, I salute you as soldiers of the Army of the Prince of Peace! You are followers of a leader who says, "Put up your sword, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." You have enlisted in a great campaign which is not to end until war has been banished from our world. When men and women unite with the Tabernacle, the first thing they are asked to do is to partake of the communion. In this they swear allegiance to their Commander, the Prince of Peace. The bread and wine are memorials of a Man who gave Himself a ransom for many, who surrendered His life at the hands of force, that reason might rule the world.—Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, in Zion's Herald.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Since my last report I have spent one Sunday in Winston, preaching and studying the condition there. Have also held the first quarterly conference in Winston. After having worked on the proposition there, endeavoring to make some shift among our own conference men without debtriment to any other charge, and having failed in this, I am now endeavoring to secure a pastor from elsewhere to supply the Winston Church. This must be done to save the situation for us there. In this way we hope to have a pastor there at an early date.

This last Sunday was spent with our people in Kernersville. We enjoyed preaching to them. After preaching a Church Conferesce was held which resulted in the appointment of Rev. William Porter as pastor of the Kernersville Church. This is perfectly agreeable with Rev. F. R. Love who was appointed pastor of the Kernersville charge by the last annual conference, and who will serve the other three churches on this charge. Bro. Love will thus have as much work as he ought to be expected to do in connection with his studies as a student in High Point College. So we trust it will prove a blessing to him, and to Bro. Porter, and to every church on the charge. We believe it will.

The Intensity of the Work.

With pastors' salaries to be paid, and budgets to raise, college funds to collect, and local church enterprises to keep up the work seems to grow more and more intense each week we live. This should be the case with any growing denominations. Just remember, brethren, the pressure of the work simply indicates that God our Father is offering to us Greater, and GREATER OPPORTUNITIES. So then think of the work and plan the work, not as a burden but as an opportunity.

February for Stewardship and Church Extension.

Please see page 70 Conference Journal, and you will find that we ourselves in annual conference session set for ourselves a definite task for February 1926.

The following letter is being sent out to all pastors and many laymen reminding them of this task. Whether you receive a copy or not, please lend your aid in every way possible to the accomplishment of this task.

Church Extension Campaign.

Our Plan:—Annual Conference Day Observed in Every Church in the Conference During February.

Our Aim:— At Least 50 percent of the A. C. B. in the Hands of our Conference Treasurer by March 1st.

Every Member Contributing on Annual Conference Day.

My dear Brother:—The Annual Conference directed that February be made Stewardship month, that we make special effort to teach the principles of Christian Stewardship, and that we collect Church Extension funds during February. Following this order the Budget Council met on January 14th and directed that this letter be sent to all pastors and to many laymen with its request for the most hearty co-operation on the part of pastors and people. Please help us put this over with banor to ourselves and to our Lord.

On page 70 of the Conference Journal you will find that our Board of Church Extension was in such financial condition last Fall that Conference ordered that no appropriations be made to any charge until after the February Campaign; and that even then appropriations are to be made upon the basis of receipts during February. So you see our Church Extension work for the year depends upon the response of the churches to this appeal.

Several of our pastors are partly dependent upon this fund for their salaries; and the future of points like Lexington, West Burlington, and others are partly dependent upon these funds for their buildings. Our Church Extension work has meant much to our conference, let us stand by it to the last man in this emergency.

The Budget Council is asking that Annual Conference Day be observed in every church in the conference on some Sunday during February, that the Annual Conference Budget be fully explained, that the laymen be asked to take part in the discussion, that an offering be taken for the A. C. B. which will at least cover your apportionment for Church Extension, and that this offering be forwarded to V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C. by March 1st. Your allotment for Church Extension is about 33 percent of the A. C. B., or 33 cents on the dollar.

Whatever your plans be for collecting the church finances for the year, one fourth of the A. C. B. will be due by the first of March, so every charge will that is working the monthly payment plan will surely be ready to send in at least that much by March 1st.

Rev. B. M. Williams, who suggested the "Annual Conference Day" proposes to undertake to raise the A. C. B. in full when the day is observed at each church. We are hoping that many others will do the same thing.

Please undertake to get fifty per centum of the A. C. B. into the hands of Mr. Idol by March 1st. In this undertaking do your very best to enlist the most hearty support of your Stewards and other workers.

The Presbyterians are observing the second week in February as "Loyalty Week" in raising large funds for Kingdom purposes. Let us make February our Loyalty Month for the furtherance of Christ's Kingdom among us through our own Annual Conference Work.

We are depending upon every church in the conference to help us make a perfect record in this undertaking. If any church fails then the plan fails just that much. We are depending on your church to be 100 percent in this.

You have doubtless received a request ere this to raise your assessment for the College maintenance fund at an early date. This is but a small amount for your church, and if not already raised we trust you will send it in to Mr. V. W. Idol at an early date, marked College fund.

Remember, Our Plan:—Annual Conference Day Observed in Every Church in the Conference During February.

Our Aim:—At least 50 percent of the A. C. B. in the hands of our Conference Treasurer, Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., by March 1st.

Our Slogan:— Every Member Contributing on Annual Conference Day.

Rev. E. G. Cowan.

Brother Cowan seemed much better for some days, but now the doctors are directing that he go to the hospital Tuesday, January 19th for an operation for appendicitis. He and his wife appreciate very much the offerings that have come from several of our Sunday schools. They need your help and they need your prayers.

Many Sunday schools have not responded. We are hoping you will soon.

We will also be glad to receive any contributions from indivilual's who may have a mind to help. Send checks to A. G. Dixon, 126 Tate Street, Greensboro, N. C.

Yours in His service, A. G. Dixon.

Seven new names added to the A. C. B. One to the College Assessment and eight to the G. C. B. That is a fine increase. But why not an increase of 72 & 74. Each charge doing something each Sunday would carry the Lord's business as done by the Methodist Protestant Church forward each week. We heartily welcome these new names to the list. This list forms an interesting study. Some of the charges who were in the lead last year are right there this year; others who led all year have not been heard from yet. Come on people, we miss you. Another interesting thing is that some charges that were at the foot most of the year and heard from late in the year are right up toward the top already. This is fine and shows that God's Kingdom is in the minds of His people. This is something the whole conference co operates in. Pastors, lead your people out in this work and help them to abound also in this grace. They will like you better and heed your sermons better if you do lead them to contribute to the needs of the church at large. One pastor said to me not so long ago, "My people want money sent in on the budgets early in the year so that they will not be at the bottom of the list all the year." I believe this is the prevailing spirit of our people. I believe that one way for a pastor to endear himself to his people is to lead them to do their best for the kingdom. No commander of an army will long hold the love and esteem of his army if he is constantly letting them fail in any particular. I believe that we are just as eager for the Lord's cause as we are for our country's cause.

Addendum.

Take note:—After these notes were ready for the Herald a letter came from Rev. N. G. Bethea on the eve of his going away on a trip to the Holy Land. In this letter he reports State Street, Lexington, paid out in full on A. C. B., on G. C. B., and on College Assessment. These people had just raised $1650 on parsonage debt, and right on the heels of that they paid up all conference claims in full. What this, one of our baby churches, is doing all others could do if they would. Hurrah for State Street! A. G. Dixon.

REPORT OF TREASURER OF COLLEGE BUILDING FUND.

I have ready for the printer the material for the pamphlet which I was requested to prepare, giving information regarding the present status of High Point College. I have found this a much greater undertaking than I had anticipated, especially in view of the fact that I have wished to give all necessary information in attractive form. I find also that it will require several days in which to print and circulate this pamphlet, and in view of the urgency of the case, I have decided to give the following information through the Herald:

Our Property.

College Buildings and Grounds:

College Site	$61.506.08

Value of College Property	$517,197.49

Other Property.

Early in the life of "Our Church Record," it was seen clearly by its Editor that the paper could not be maintained on its income from subscriptions. It was proposed that an endowment fund be created, and invested in a building that would yield an income. The Church contributed about $5,000. A very desirable lot was purchased in Greensboro, on the principal business street, 30 x 150 feet, for $3,209, and a building erected, at a cost of about $4,500. Later additions to the building brought the total investment up to $11,781. So greatly has this property advanced in value that it is now regarded as worth at least $75,000. It yields a good income, which with the exception of $1,200 a year which is still used for the support of the "Herald," is applied toward meeting the needs of the College. The Board of Education also holds the title to a dwelling in Greensboro, erected at a cost of $7,778.26, the income from which is also used for the benefit of the College.

Our Imperative Needs.

Our imperative needs are as follows:

Over due Payment on Mortgage	13,000.00
Interest due January 23, 1926	4,460.17
For Special Notes—now over-due	8,000.00
Insurance Premium	986.50
To bank, for note to contractors	45,000.00
	$71,446.67

The total obligations, including the above, are as follows:

Mortgage	$148,000.00
Special Notes—Due	8,000.00
Special Notes—New Plan	13,950.00
Due Bank	24,000.00
Due Bank (paid Contractor)	45,000.00
Interest due January 23, 1926	4,460.17
Life Insurance Premium	986.50
Due Contractor	29,000.00
Other Liabilities	5,398.33
	$278,795.00

A New Financial Plan.

We have at this time uncollected pledges of about $80,000. Of course, in five years there must be some shrinkage, but it is to be assumed that these pledges were made in good faith, and that those who have not encountered unseal misfortune will pay them eventually. Poor crops have made it impossible for some to pay yet, and others have frankly ackrowledged that if they had realized how badly the money was needed they would have in some way arranged to meet their obligations. If we had this money we could pay the debts which are pressing us, and the situation would be greatly relieved.

Since our meeting in High Point quite a number have paid their subscriptions, and we have had some additional contributions, notable those from Whitakers, N. C.

The following plan has been proposed, and has been operated to a degree successfully:

The Board of Education has authorized the Treasurer to issue notes for such amounts as can be handled conveniently. The friends of the college are asked to take these notes, secure a number of personal indorsements, take them to their banks, and get the money, they paying the interest, and to forward to the Treasurer a check for the amount. They will be furnished with a list of unpaid subscriptions which they will collect. The money as collected, will be deposited in the banks discounting the notes.

When the notes become due, the money thus collected will be aplied toward the payment of them. If enough has not been collected, the Treasurer of the Board of Education will issue a partial renewal, which can be carried in the bank as before.

The following have adopted this plan, and have remitted to the Treasurer:

Dr. F. R. Harris, Henderson	$1,000
Rev. H. F. Surratt, Charlotte	1,000
D. A. McLaughlin; Concord	2,000
Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., Mebane	1,000
Rev. C. W. Bates, Asheville,	1,000
Rev. J. D. Williams, Reidsville	1,000
Rev. J. F. McCulloch, Calvary,	1,000
Rev. R. C. Stubbins, Enfield	1,000
Rev. G. F. Milaway; Mt. Pleasant	450

($550 collected in in cash).

Rev. S. W. Taylor; Brlington	4,000
Rev. T. E. Pierce, Weeh.	500
Grace Church, Greensboro, to date	7,900

May we not, during the remainder of the month, hear from pastors and people? What we need is actual money, whether it be collected on outstandings pledges, or whether it be secured through the note plan. I am sure that if our people realized not only the present emergency, but the great value of the college to our Church, that no sacrifice would be thought too great to provide the necessary funds to put the institution upon a sound financial footing. J. Norman Wills.

HOME MISSIONS.

It was a great privilege to spend a few days at the North Carolina Conference held in November at High Point. It is not only a pleasure to fellowship with such warm-hearted ministers and laymen as are found in this conference, but the growth and development of the denomination are so marked that it would easily prove a tonic to any one afflicted with a pessimistic disposition as to the future of our church.

The first inspiring sight was the church in which the conference was held. This is a splendid brick structure which cost more than two hundred thousand dollars, equipped with facilities for all manner of religious work, and not exceeded by any church it has ever been the privilege of the writer to see. The magnificent buildings of the college and Children's Home located in the suburbs are calculated to thrill one with not only what has been accomplished but the possibilities of the future.

While contemplating these encouraging sights and listening to the reports from the various charges indicating progress along all lines of church activities, I thought of the late Dr. Tagg who, when Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions thirty-five years ago, made a tour of this conference in the interest of his work in which he visited many of the charges. On his return to Baltimore, he spoke strongly of the future prospects for the state of North Carolina and the Methodist Protestant Church within its borders. He said that in his travels he noted the establishment of high schools in almost every community, and other evidences of progress which would give the coming generation a wider vision and stronger incentive toward advancement in education, business and all which brings prosperity to any section of the country.

His vision has now become a reality. The great achievements wrought by our church have called for faith, heroism and sacrifice on the part of many, and the end is not yet. We are confident that our loyal people there will be true to the trust committed to them and under the leadership of Dr. Dixon, the President, will press on to complete victory.

The Board of Home Missions has for many years sustained a close relation to this conference and, as far as possible, has responded to every appeal made for the advancement of the work of our church. Assistance was given to Asheville for a number of years. A year ago the notes held by the Board against this church were cancelled. This was of great encouragement to the congregation and the church under the pastorate of Rev. C. W. Bates is reported as making commendable progress.

Charlotte, which has been receiving pastoral support for a number of years has become self-supporting and not only that, nearly paid the entire amount loaned by the Board of Home Missions. The balance will be remitted in a few months. This is one of the outstanding churches among the many being assisted by Home Missions funds. Instead of continuing to look for help there has been a determination to relieve the Board of financial aid. I wish to commend the pastor Rev. H. F. Surratt, and his church for the fine spirit shown, and commend their example to other mission churches.

West End Church, Greensboro, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, pastor, formerly of Maryland has recently been helped. I looked in upon this Sunday school and was pleased with the growth of the school and the progress this church is making. A new church should be erected here at as early a day as possible.

Calvary Church, of Greensboro, is a new and substantial brick building, and the reports conrerning the growth of the membership, Sunday school, and other departments are encouraging. Our Board is making an annual appropriation for interest to this church.

It was my privilege to preach at Grace Church, Greensboro, Dr. Spahr pastor, Sunday morning. Services are held in the tabernacle during the erection of their new edifice which is to cost perhaps one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It will be, when completed, a beautiful church and modern in all of its appointments. While in Greensboro I was entertained in the home of that prominent and loyal layman, J. Norman Wills. There is an appreciative feeling in this conference toward the Board of Home Missions and we are confident of their continued and earnest support.

Although rather early to refer to it, I am hoping for the enthusiastic co-operation of the entire Conference in the Easter Service in April. Mr. J. M. Millikan, a member of our Board, is also a member of the Greensboro church. I hope to enlist his interest and assistance in putting the Easter Program in every church and Sunday school of the Conference. J. M. Sheridan.

Greenville Ct.—I want to say that the type setter made the last paragraph of my article as appeared last week ridiculous.

My reporters have nothing to do with the heating of our churches or the mud, snow, and bitter cold weather that are hindering us in our church work here. H. L. Powell.

(We beg pardon for the mixup. It was made out by the type setter, but in correcting proof. A line seems to have been substituted accidentally.—Editor.)

—The population of New York City, at the time the New York State census was taken in 1925, was 5,873,356. This is a gain of more than 250,000 in five years.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Community Church, Thomasville.—Under the leadership for this conference year the members of Community Church are undertaking the greatest things ever in the progress of the church.

The following program of the outstanding things to be undertaken this conference year appeared in the Sunday bulletin of November 15. The completion of an up-to-date 42 room annex to the present building which will include equipment for a complete department Sunday school, a gynasium and swimming pool; a new parsonage; a 100 per cent gain in membership; a Junior Church or "Congregation" in which the Associate Pastor, Dwight L. Fouts, will preach to the Juniors in a separate room at the same time the pastor is preaching to the adults; a week-day school of Religious Education in which there will be classes five nights a week instead of two; a six weeks vacation Bible school to begin in June; an up-to-date playground; enlargement of the library; and the organization of dramatics to stimulate interest among young people and children in giving church plays and pageants.

The pastor and his associate, realizing that the failure of many pastors to accomplish what they might for the Master lies largely in their neglect to map out their year's work in advance, made a detailed program for the year as best they could at the very beginning of the conference year. Their goals were set early and their program lies before them as a daily reminder of what is to be done. One by one the items of the program are becoming realities.

The church made its debut in dramatics on Tuesday evening, December 22, when Dickens' Christmas Carol was produced under the auspices of the young people of the church and community. The recent dramatization by professor H. E. Spence, of Duke University, was used. There were about fifty people in the cast notwithstanding the number on committees and in the choir which sang Carols between scenes. The immense audience of people who saw the performance say that it was good.

There were several other Christmas programs held in the church among which were a Christmas tree and exercise by the Juniors under the leadership of Miss Pearl Perry, and kindergarten night with Mrs. O. B. Williams in charge.

The Community Church Free Public Library is growing rather rapidly. The membership and demand for books increased so rapidly during the months of October and November that it became necessary to add a paid assistant. Professor E. E. Teague, who has spent twenty years in the teaching profession, was secured to keep the library open every afternoon, except Sunday.

With a present addition of two hundred children's books, the library may boast of about 1252 books, 575 readers, a circulation of over a thousand books a month, and good magazines and newspapers on the tables in the reading room.

At a Council meeting of the Sunday school teachers, last Wednesday night, the teachers voted unanimously to read at least one book each month pertaining to given departments of work and render a written report of the book read to the superintendent. The teachers voted this in addition to the reading of religious magazines, lesson helps, current events, etc., which they are already doing. One of their mottoes is that books and other reading matter are indispensable tools in the hands of the teacher.

Last Sunday marked the beginning of the Junior Church, an attempt to give the child a real place in the worship, the government, and the life of the visible church of Christ. The Junior "Congregation," in charge of Dwight L. Fouts, pastor; Miss Pearl Perry, choir directress; and Miss Edith Myers, pianist, was successfully organized at 11 A. M. last Sunday. Nearly all of the boys and girls of the Sunday school between the ages 6 and 16 remained and enrolled as members. This movement is started in Community Church to foster among young people and children a love for church going, and for the house of God. It is the church of Christ ushered into our midst in junior form. It is the church of Christ in the lives of boys and girls. Its object is not to help the church, its object is to be the church.

The following members were added to the church at the 11 o'clock service, January 3. Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cox, Mr. Lewis Hall, and Raymond Clodfelter.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society is putting new life into its meetings this month. During December the young people expended most of their energy in producing the Christmas play. This spring more attention will be given to leadership training courses and to increasing the membership of the society. Last Sunday evening marked the beginning of a series of special programs at which time Dr. R. V. Yokeley addressed the society on the subject of forming habits. Next Sunday evening at 6:15 Dr. R. G. Jennings, eye, nose, and ear specialist, will speak on the subject of bodily hygiene.

Dwight L. Fouts, Associate Pastor.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—Despite the cold weather and the snow which covered the earth, we had a splendid attendance at Sunday school last Sunday. There were 129 recorded in Sunday school. The superintendent expressed his delight because of the good attendance and fine interest shown in the school. The offering, which amounted to $5.61, was taken for Rev. E. G. Cowan and family, in response to the call sent out by Dr. Dixon last month. The men's class was taught by Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield, our pastor, because of the absence of the teacher, Brother C. L. Hedrick. The attendance in the men's class was 21, and the offering was $3.00.

The presence of the pastor in the Sunday school last Sunday was on account of the failure of the Cid and Jerusalem people to come after him as he had requested during the previous week. He presented the claim of The Methodist Protestant during the closing exercises of the Sunday school, and as a result of the appeal for subscriptions, three subscriptions were received, thus obtaining the full quota for South Davidson Charge in the campaign in North Carolina for The Methodist Protestant.

The regular preaching service was held at 7 o'clock last Sunday night with the usual attendance.

We are glad to report that the project for new Sunday school rooms for West Lexington church is taking a more definite form as a result of a brief business meeting of the church held on Thursday night of last week. At that meeting a committee of eight men of the church was selected to make plans for raising funds for the new addition to the church. Brother H. C. Koonts, superintendent of the Sunday school, is chairman of the committee. The committee was called together after Sunday school last Sunday and two things decided. First, that the pastor announce from the pulpit that an election will be held after four weeks notice is given and our people will vote on the question of building the Sunday school annex. Second, that pledges be taken payable by April 1, 1926.

Our people are really interested in the proposition and the favorable expressions heard from many of our leading men of the church indicate the fact that the new Sunday school rooms will be built and become a reality before many more months.

We will have preaching next Sunday both morning and night. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Mount Pleasant Young People's C. E. Society Bids the Old Year Farewell.

On Thursday evening, December 31, at 7:30 o'clock the Young People's C. E. Society of Mount Pleasant Church met, with a few special friends of its members as guests, in the Sunday school rooms of the church. A very interesting program, which had been planned by the social committee, Edna Oxley, Lillian Shoffner, and W. A. Stafford, was carried out.

The social began by everyone present singing "America." Then H. Floyd Amick conducted the devotional exercises. A history of the society was read by Mrs. W. A. Stafford, followed by a duet by Joyce and Mae Smith. A prophecy of the members of the society was given by Lillian Shoffner. The president, Boone Ferguson, made a short talk, and then Mrs. H. Floyd Amick gave an interesting account of "the Society's ailments." This proved to be helpful as well as very humorous, and Mrs. Amick stated that she hoped as the old year disappeared and the new year took its place that all the ailments of the society would also disappear to be replaced by many improvements. The society then sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and the party spent the remainder of the evening in various kinds of amusements. Several games were played until eleven o'clock, when sandwiches, hot cocoa, nuts, and fruits were served.

After the new year had been ushered in, the crowd of merry young people wished each other a happy new year and the party went home.

Society members present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. Floyd Amick, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Stafford, Misses: Joyce Smith, Mae Smith, Edna Coley, Gladys Spoone, Lillian Shoffner, Hettie Lineberry; Messrs: Boone Ferguson, Ramon Coley, Condon Coley, Guy Alexander, Colin Smith, and Seymour Stafford.

Visitors present were: Misses: Blackard, Laloh Stafford, Pearl Merherson, Irene Amick; Messrs: Blackard, James Lowe, Carl Alexander, Norris Ferguson, Herman Welker, Jr., Talton Stafford, "Bill" Anderson, Clemont Lineberry, and Curtis Shoffner.

Asheville.—The communion service at our church here last Sunday was most helpful. Brother Bates preached an inspiring sermon, thus preparing the hearts of those present for the communion. His messages are the same in inspiration and helpfulness.

Saturday afternoon we children of the primary department were given a lovely party at the church. Ice cream and nabiscos were served. Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Ward were hostesses.

Our faithful Geo. M. Foster is acting Post Master in the Asheville office, while Post Master Hill is out of the city. The Monday Citizen had his picture and a complimentary write-up, as not unlike President Coolidge in serenity of spirit in performing his many duties.

Henderson.—Since coming to Henderson we have been called upon to perform almost every duty that ordinarily falls to the lot of a pastor, namely, filled all regular appointments, held one communion service, one monthly business meeting, one quarterly conference, conducted three funerals, married one couple, made talks in grades and High schools, and made a number of pastoral calls. This has helped us very greatly in getting acquainted with the people of the church and city.

We have found many encouraging signs along the way, among them, the splendid interest manifested in the business meetings of the church and the attendance upon all services, especially the Christian Endeavor and Wednesday evening prayer meetings. Since these meetings are as a rule poorly attended in most town churches, I feel that we have cause to rejoice. The attendance at the preaching services and the Sunday school has also been fine considering the extremely cold weather of the past few Sundays.

The good people have been so thoughtful in looking after our welfare that we would like to give their names and tell what they have done, but we might overlook something and then the editor has asked us to be brief; so we must content ourselves with saying that they seem determined that we shall not want for any good thing.

We regret to report that Brother T. T. Hicks, whom many of the Herald readers know and esteem very highly, has been advised by his physician to at present refrain from all work, both of his profession and the church. We ask you to unite with his friends here in praying that he may speedily be restored to his normal health.

R. A. Hunter.

Bethesda, North Davidson Charge.—Christmas and new year here were spent pleasantly and quietly. The entertainment at Bethesda by the Sunday school was a success.

Your writer will begin a new year's work as reporter of Bethesda. It seems to me when they had a good reporter they aught to have held on to her. I can't see why they put in one like me, when they already had a better one.

The people were very much pleased to get their beloved pastor, R. S. Troxler, back with them.

We had our first quarterly conference at Bethesda. The business was transacted in a Christian spirit. Our second quarterly conference will be held at Shiloh.

Our best attendants for 1925: 13 present every Sunday for 52 Sundays. Mr. E. A. Clodfelter, Gordan and Ivan Clodfelter, D. D. Brinkley, Mrs. D. D. Brinkley, Charlie, Paul, Grady and Davis Brinkley, Everette Whitlow, Willard Vaid and Ruth Whitlow.

These were present for 51 Sundays, Mrs. E. A. Clodfelter, Edd Whitlow, present for 50 Sundays,—J. B. and Curry Wagner, C. M. Yokley, Elizabeth and Willie Yokley, Maggie Brinkley, E. A. Clodfelter, Jr., Ethel and Rebecca Grubb. Four present 48 Sunlays. Ruth Yokley, Raymond, Susie, and Ward Wagner.

Last year, 1924, there were three present 52 Sundays. We are going to try and make our attendance better next year than we have in the past.

Second M. P. Church, Charlotte.—Pastor Braswell, delivered two good sermons on Sunday, January 3. The subject of the morning service was, "Christian Compassion," as portrayed in the parable of the Good Samaritan. The subject for the evening service was, "Our Help Cometh from the Lord."

On Sunday, January 10, we organized our Sunday school. The following officers were elected: Superintendent, Bro. G. W. Stegall; Secretary, Miss Myrtle Nates; Treasurer, Mrs. G. W. Stegall. Bro. J. E. Thomas was elected as Bible Class teacher, and Mrs. G. W. Stegall as teacher for the junior class. The teachers for the other classes well be elected next Sunday, when Bro. Braswell will be with us to give some advice, of which we stand in need. We ask for the prayers of the Christian people that we may make a success in our work for God.

The President of our Ladies' Aid, Mrs. H. A. Gurley, of No. 2, Linden Lane, gave a supper to their friends on the night of December 31; and to her most joyful surprise, those present made up a purse of $13.50, which they donated to the expense of the church.

A group of seven little girls and one little boy, namely Sarah Stegall, Ruby Stegall, Johnnie Black, Hazel Cannon, Madge Hatrick, Mary Davis Hatrick, Sarah Helms and Robert Stegall, pieced a quilt top and presented it to the Ladies' Aid, which was greatly appreciated. These children in spite of their tender years do good work with their needle and take a lively and active interest in the Ladies' Aid which meets every Tuesday night.

We were very sorry to hear of the misfortune which befell our beloved pastor when his home was burned in Concord, and wish to extend to him our heartfelt sympathy. We pray God's richest blessings may rest on him and his in this their hour of trouble.

Myrtle Nates.

Flat Rock Circuit.—As many things have happened since I have written I feel perhaps I should write again. Bro. Harris Pegram, and Bro. B. W. Johnson, two faithful soldiers of the cross, have been very ill for some time and do not improve much; and also Brother J. B. Ogburn. We miss these faithful ones so much at our services. Bro. Ogburn has a class of about thirty boys and girls in the Sunday school at Flat Rock, and he is so much missed there. Pray that each one may soon be well.

The bad weather has hindered some in the work but that is common to all work. But folks die in bad weather and folks marry in bad weather.

On the evening of the 24th Mr. Wayne Jones and Miss Nannie Dwiggins were united in marriage at the parsonage. These are fine young people, both members of Bethel, and their many friends wish for them a long and happy life.

December 26th at 5:30 Miss Mamie Lemons, at the home of her father, became the bride of Mr. William Neal, by the ceremony spoken by her pastor. Mrs Neal will be much missed in her community, and church as she was one of the faithful teachers. Mr. and Mrs. Neal are held in high esteem, and their many friends wish for them a long, and happy life. They are at home at Siler City, N. C.

As you have read these lines were you looking and listening for some familiar word? This is a very familiar word, "pounding:" yes, you see it in every paper and you perhaps would be surprised if I did not use it. A few days before Christmas Bro. N. T. Pegram and wife drove over to the parsonage and left us a sack of flour, a sack of meal, some canned fruit. Bro. Ode Jones, fresh meat and pumpkins. On December 24th a truck drove into our yard from Bethany Church with feed for the cow, flour, sugar, coffee, potatoes, meats, chicken, honey and other things too tedious to mention. Space will not permit me to give all the names, but W. P. Alley, J. T. McCollum and Lacy Baynes were with the truck, and we were kindly remembered at each church at the Christmas trees: Flat Rock, Bethel, Gideon's Grove. On last Sunday Bro. and Sister T. T. Humphrey gave us six cans of fruit and preserves. We have not words to express our thanks for these tokens of love, but can never forget in our prayers to pray the blessing of Heaven upon each one and ask that each one pray for us that God may make us worthy servants of his while we stay among you.

Bro. D. P. Lemons gave this writer a nice fountain pen, Archey Lemons, a nice shirt, and the ladies gave Mrs. Trogdon many nice presents.

We can but just say thank you and say God bless you all. Joel B. Trogdon.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—The work at this church is moving on nicely and seems to have taken on new life with the new year. Twenty-two new members have been received into the church since conference.

We regret that our pastor's health is not so good at present. Owing to this fact he only preached one sermon Sunday, January 10. Some members of "Our Gang," an organization of Christian young men, held a very inspiring service at the evening hour. They will hold a seriee of special services at our church, beginning next Sunday evening. These young men are doing a great work in High Point, and we are glad to have them come to our church.

On the evening of December 25 the Christmas exercises were held at the church; an interesting program, which had been prepared under the direction of Mrs. Frank Bailey, Mrs. A. J. Payne, and Mrs. J. W. Thacker, was rendered and there was a beautiful tree, which delighted the children.

Since our last report there have been two weddings of interest; Miss Mozelle Alridge to Mr. Albert Gross, and Mirs Mary Davis to Mr. Allen. Mr. and Mrs. Gross are both members of the board of stewards and are active in church and Sunday school work. Mrs. Allen is also an active member of this church and a teacher in the Sunday school.

Mr. and Mrs. Enos Blair are rejoicing over the arrival of a son on December 26.

On December 31 the church and entire community were made very sad by the death of Mrs. Luther Ring. Her death which resulted from injuries received in an automobile accident came as a shock to her many friends. As obituary will follow later.

Shiloh, Conley Spring Charge.—Owing to the weather our Sunday school was small but interest was good; 23 present, Collection, $1.08; number chapters read for the passed week, 302. After Sunday school Rev. J. R. Gurtner delivered a very interesting sermon.

Rev. J. E. Austin preached Sunday night a good sermon. Reporter.

Fairview Charge.—Although I have made no report for sometime, the work on the Fairview charge is making good progress Christmas programs were rendered at each of the churches; the pastor was remembered with valuable presents, for which we thank the givers.

The first quarterly conference was held January 9th at the Fairview church. Brother W. M. Taylor was given exhorters' license. The "Honor System" of raising church finances was adopted.

Regular preaching services at all of the churches have been good. At Fairview on the 10th, in spite of the inclement weather, the attendance was good and the congregation showed an interest in the service.

The Sunday schools are progressing nicely with a good attendance at each place. Officials for the year have been elected at both Carolina and Fairview. The prospect seems bright for a year of growth in the Sunday school on the charge. C. G. Isley, Pastor.

West End, Greensboro.—Our Christmas program this year was very interesting and helpful, a short pageant being used in addition to the White Gifts for the King service. The offering tmounted to tbout $65.00 and was distributed between home and foreign missions, High Point College, and local welfare work.

The work of the New Year is beginning with enthusiasm. We are missing, however, the help of some of our best workers. Illness is keeping a good many in, and our college girls just gave us a taste of what it means to have them with us when the time comes for them to resume their studies again. Nevertheless, we are proud of them and rejoice in the fact that they are fitting themselves for effective work in the Master's Kingdom.

On Saturday, January 2, Miss Cleta Routh became the bride of Mr. Jack McFayden. The ceremony was performed in the pastor's study by Rev. E. L. Ballard. For a few months the happy couple will make their home in Hollywood, Florida. Both of them have been good workers in our Christian Endeavor Society and Cleta a teacher in the Sunday school.

Mr. L. E. Cagle is the newly elected president of the Foust Bible Class, and Mrs. Florence Watts is the new treasurer. They were chosen at the business meeting held last Thursday night at the church.

Several of our Sunday school teachers and workers are attending the Township Sunday School convention at Park Place Methodist Episcopal Church this week.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was entertained at the house of the president, Mrs. J. R. Holden, at the January meeting. In spite of the very rough weather a goodly number were in attendance and a good meeting was held.

Our pastor, Rev. E. L. Ballard, will sail from New York on January 21st with the Christian Herald party for a seven weeks tour of Palestine. Dr. Francis E. Clark and Dr. Charles M. Sheldon will be members of the party and it will be a wonderful opportunity for Mr. Ballard and others not only to tour the Holy Land, but to associate with such men as Dr. Clark and Dr. Sheldon. The church has granted Mr. Ballard an eight weeks leave of absence and the good wishes of the entire membership go with him. Rev. P. E. Lindley, of High Point College, will have charge of the Sunday services in the pastor's absence.

"The Gang", a band of High Point boys organized for service at the Stephens meeting and led by Mr. W. W. Smith, had charge of the Sunday evening service, January 10th. Mr. Smith read the Scripture lesson and made a short talk and testimonies were made by practically every member of "The Gang", as well as some of the church members. These boys are doing a wonderful work and are accomplishing good. Reporter.

Liberty, Siler City Charge.—We are glad to welcome Brother F. L. Gibbs as pastor of this work. Everyone in the Sunday school and church work has a fine spirit of cooperation, and we have a bright out-look for the new year.

The Ladies' Aid is very faithful in the work.

Quite a number of families have sickness in their homes at this writing.

Our Christian Endeavor work is flourishing far superior to anything it has ever been before, since so many more people take part a number of grown people and very frequently. We have leaders and soloists from Elon College with the pastor. Much more reverence and worship is manifested in the services.

The Baraca Class gave a banquet in honor of the Philathea Classes, New Year's night. A large number was present to enjoy the excellent talks and appetizing food.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Curtis were very faithful indeed in this delightful entertainment. Our pastor gave a witty and humorous talk consisting of jokes on different members of the Baraca Class causing much merriment. Excellent talks were given by Prof. Holt, Mr. R. C. Palmer and Mr. Ed Moore.

A bible contest was enjoyed in which Mr. Moore, teacher of the Baraca Class, won the prize.

Miss Bertine Shepard, teacher of the Philathea, Senior Class, received at Christmas time a very beautiful present as a token of love and appreciation from her class; and has been re-elected for the coming year. She has been in Sunday school every Sunday morning the past year, and has mode a thorough study of each lesson. She has helps from Our Teachers Journal, The Christian Herald, Our Church Paper, ard frequently from Pelobet's notes.

We have purchased a large number of new Church Hymnals

Much success to all our Sunday schools and churches. Reporter.

Laurel Hill, Tolhca Circuit.—Christmas has come, and gone, and has brought joy and gladness to many, and sadness and sorrow to others.

Remember we are one year nearer our goal than we were last Christmas, and are we all living the life we would like to be living when Christ comes?

Last Sunday our pastor delivered to us a good sermon as usual. There was a large crowd present, considering the bad weather. We are always glad to welcome J. M. Morgan to Laurel Hill as pastor of the church.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely considering the zero weather, and sickness in the community. Mr. A. A. Sain has proved himself a very good superintendent, but he has been absent the last three Sundays on account of sickness. He has our prayers when he is not present.

We are hoping to have a better Sunday school this year, 1926, than last. Pray for us. Lois Willis, Reporter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for January 31: "The Call, The Claims, and the Conquests of the Church." Acts 13:1-3; Heb. 10:24,25; 1 Thess. 1:1-10. (Denominational Day).

Plan for the Meeting.

Since this is denominational day, it should be the aim of every society to place as much information concerning your church and denomination as possible in the hands of your Endeavorers. Secure for your meeting copies of the denominational papers, The Methodist Protestant Herald, The Methodist Protestant, and The Methodist Recorder, also copies of books about our church, such as "History of Methodist Reform and Methodist Protestant Church," by Drinkhouse; "Democratic Methodism," by Davis; "The Methodist Protestant Handbook," by Lewis; and The Discipline, etc. Place these on a table in the front of the room and call attention to them.

After your devotional service of hymns, prayers, Scripture, ets., suppose you divide the society into two "schools." Let each school elect a leader, or teacher. Place in the hands of each teacher a list of the appended questions. Give fifteen minutes for study and consultation and then see which group can answer the most of the questions.

Assign to three of your most interested workers the following topics for five minute talks after the above plan has been used. (These topics must be assigned a week in advance, so that the persons may have a chance to prepare.) The topics: The history of the Methodist Protestant Church in outline; The plan of organization of the Methodist Protestant Church; The principles of doctrine in the Methodist Protestant Church. Ample material for these may be found in "The Methodist Protestant Handbook," by Dr. Lewis.

After these talks, ask two of your Endeavorers to present copies of The Methodist Protestant Herald and The Methodist Protestant. Make brief talks on these papers and ask for subscriptions. WHY NOT set a goal for your society in reach in new subscriptions for each of these and try to reach it within the next week?

Ask your pastor to close the meeting with a brief talk on the work of our church.

Christian Endeavor Doings.

One of the interesting and profitable things being done by the Concord Christian Endeavor Society is their regular monthly visits to the Carbarrus County Home. On Sunday before Christmas a program was rendered and fruits and other presents were carried to the inmates, which they seemed to enjoy very much. They seem to enjoy our visits every time. They are always assembled in the chapel waiting for our program, which usually includes a large number of songs in which they always join.

We hold a monthly business meeting and social. The last one was held at the home of the President of the Society, Miss Nina Little. After the business meeting, the rest of the evening was given over to games, after which refreshments were served.

Expert Course At High Point.

Last week we had a short notice of a class in Expert Endeavor which had been completed at High Point College. Since that was written a more complete report of this class and its work has been sent in by Miss Blanche Ingram, a student of the college and a member of the class.

Miss Ingram reports that the class met each Sunday Afternoon for an hour, for ten consecutive Sunday afternoons. The class was taught by Miss Mary Young, dean of women, first Tuesday night. Fifteen societies were twenty began the course and fourteen finished. Ten made high grades in their work and were awarded the degree of "Christian Endeavor Expert."

These ten young people, with the grades attained in the examination, are as follows:

Spencer Cutchin, 98; Blanche Ingram, 97; Ptyall Bingham, 97; Vista Dixon, 95; Treva Beeson, 90; Lois Coble, 90; Louise Summers, 89; Grover Angel, 85; D. B. Broome, 89; and Swannie Thompson, 75.

This is a splendid piece of work and a splendid record made by these leading young people, and the Board congratulates them on the accomplishment.

West End Entertains.

The West End Methodist Protestant Senior Society entertained the quarterly meeting of the Greensboro Christian Endeavor Union represented, and the pastors of all four of our Greensboro churches were present, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, Rev. J. H. Moton, and Rev. Lawrence Little.

At this meeting, Rev. Lawrence Little was elected President of the City C. E. Union.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Are none of our Sunday schools doing anything? We have received no reports at all from our Sunday schools since beginnist this department. PLEASE LET US HEAR FROM YOU! "If you don't toot your own horn, the same will never be tooted." Let us have your reports. If you have no reports, ask some questions. Thank you!

On Christmas day at 12 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Miss Mary Powell and Mr. Blannie Hight were married. These young people are among our very best church workers, and it is the sincere wish of their numerous friends that they may have much happiness and success in life. They will live in Henderson. R. A. Hunter.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 24.
Jesus And The Samaritan Woman.

Lesson Text: John 4:13-26.

Golden Text: Isa. 12:3.

The Central Truth: In Jesus Christ is the fountain of living waters, sufficient to gratify the thirst of every mortal soul.

Scriptural Points.

1. Jesus "must needs go through Samaria." Samaria lay between Judea and Gallilee. There was also a great moral need that He go that way this time. There were many lost souls, ripe for the gospel, that He must seek and save.

2. "It was about the sixth hour," that is, noon. All the respectable women had come for their water before this hour. A fallen woman had come at this late hour to get water for the midday meal. She didn't dare to come along with the other women. Jesus timed His coming, not to meet the chaste women, but to meet one that was impure and lost.

3. "Give me to drink." Jesus starts the conversation upon a level of fellowship, just as one friend or neighbor would speak to another. He discovered and expressed a common interest—both wanted water from the well. Jesus made a spiritual, as well as a physical request. He asked to drink of the penitence; the faith, the love, the testimony, and the service that afterward flowed from this woman's heart and life.

4. "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst. "Jesus here declares Himself to be the Source and Dispenser of spiritual life. "In him was life: and the life was the light (or salvation) of man." John 1:4. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." John 7:37. The poor woman, blinded by sin, failed to catch this deep meaning.

5. "Go, call thy husband, and come hither." From the high level of His Own Messiahship Jesus condecends to the low level of this woman's moral life. She had become hardened by many years of shameless prostitution. She was now living illegally with her sixth man. This uncovering of her immoral conduct, on the part of Jesus, was adroit gentle, complete, convincing, and convicting.

6. "Thou hast had five husbands." Jesus here declares that her relation with these men made them her real husbands, and she was their real wife. This is so in the sight of God, but not in the sight of men. Sexual relationship establishes a lifetime obligation of husband and wife.

7. "I perceive that thou art a prophet." This correct revelation of her own bad life by a stranger she admits must be only by the exercise of a gift of prophecy. Unwilling yet to repent and believe this artful woman starts a religious controvesy as to the lawful and acceptable place of worship. Jesus asserts that henceforth the state of the heart, not the location, will be the chief prerequisite of acceptable worship.

8. "Salvation is of the Jews." Every writer of the Holy Scriptures was a Jew. The law was given to a Jew, or Hebrew. All the prophets were Jews. All the apostles were Jews. Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, was a Jew. This world can never fully pay its debt to the Jews. "Salvation is of the Jews."

9. "God is a Spirit." He is therefore "the Father of the spirits of all flesh." He is therefore the Source of all spirituality. "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering. gentleness. goodness, faith. meekness, temperance." Gal. 6:22, 23.

10. "Must worship him in spirit and in truth." Worship must be set forth in harmony with the revealed truth and in the exercise of the spiritual qualities of sincerity, penitence. trust, love, gratitude, and devotion.

11. "I that speak unto thee am he." Jesus openly declares that He is the Messiah and the Savior of the world. Upon His testimony Jesus is either God or the greatest impostor of history. Every true believer testifies,—"My Lord and my God."

Practical Points.

1. Jesus is the complete fulfilment of "the desire of all nations." "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundant." John 10:10.

2. Soul-hunger is the unfailing forerunner of soul-satisfaction. "For he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness." Ps. 107:9.

3. Selfsatisfied, selfconfident, and selfglorying worshippers, like Cain, ofier a vain and unaccepable oblation. "He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich hath he sent empty away." Luke 1:53.

4. The giver of the water of life knows from the throne of God and of the Lamb, and also from the riven side of the Rock of ages. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Isa. 55:1.

5. There is no life so low, so black, or so shamelessly corrupt, but that the blood of Jesus can wash it as white as snow. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John y:9.

6. Ours is a fallen race. The corrupt nature has become more corrupt by corrupt conduct. "The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God. They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." Ps. '4.2,3.

7. God deliver us from selfrighteousness, which is filthy rags. The Lord impart to us the wrought righteousness of Jesus.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN 31.
Jesus Feeds Five Thousand.

Lesson Text: John 6:1-14.

Golden Text: John 6:35.

The Central Truth. "For the Bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." John 6:33.

Scriptural Points.

1. The events of this lesson occurred shortly after John was beheaded and immediately after the return of the apostles from their first preaching tour. The trip across the sea was to get rest and quiet, but in vain. F the multitude ran along the shore and ca first to the place of landing. Jesus had reac ed the peak of His popularity and the peo were planning to force Him to become th king. All classes shared the idea that th Messiah would set up a temporal kingdo The passover was nigh at hand and the pe ple thought that the time was ripe for Je us to lead an army against Jerusalem a seize the reins of government from the han of the Romans.

2. But Jesus was more anxious to minist to the needs of the shepherdless multitu than he was about this or any earthly kin dom. To the request of the disciples that H send the multitude away He replied: "Th need not depart, give ye them to eat."

3. "Whence shall we buy bread that the may eat?" This question was designed test Philip's faith, not to secure informatio Philip's faith was weak. He suggested th two hundred pence (about thirty dollar would buy enough to give each one just bite.

4. Andrew told Jesus about the little bo who had five loaves and two small fishe but he also showed a very weak faith. Sai he, "But what are they among so many?

5. The men sat down in fifty rows, o hundred in a row. The women and childre composed another company. This was do for convenience of waiting upon the peopl

6. "When he had given thanks." All foo is the gift of God. We are enjoined to pra "Give us this day our daily bread."

7. "He distributed to the disciples." Th miracle of the marvellous increase of brea and fish took place, no doubt, while the foo was in the hands of Jesus. This miracle, lik many others, was wrought by the supernatu al touch of Jesus.

8. "Gather up the fragments that remain. Jesus here teaches that waste is a sin an that economy is a virtue. Jesus was mo generous in the performance of this miracl The fragments amounted to much more tha the orginal supply.

9. "This is of a truth that prophet tha should come into the world." This was th unanimus testimony of the multitude. Th term. "That prophet," refers particularly t the prophecy of the Messiah's coming give by Moses. "The Lord thy God will raise u unto thee a Prophet from the midst of the of thy brethren, like unto me: unto hi shall ye hearken."

Practical Points.

1. Jesus is the Bread of life in that th atonement accomplished by the sacrifice o Himself and the cross is the all-sufficient foo for the soul. "Lord, evermore give us th bread." John :34.

2. Any one may become a "partaker o Christ," and of all the blessings of redemp tion, by exercising faith in Him as the Savio of mankind. "For by grace are ye save through faith; and that not yourselves; is the gift of God." Eph. 2:8.

3. A full salvation is necessary to rea soul satisfaction, to complete victory ove sin, to the full measure of service for Go "Be filled with the Spirit."

4. Thanks giving is an indispensable part of worship. Praise should always precede petition. The Giver of every good and perfect gift is kindly disposed to bless the grateful ones. "Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee: Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us." Ps. 67:56.

5. Even small gifts mean much to the glory of God. To give all to God is most praiseworthy. The lad gave all he had to Jesus. The widow's two mites was all her living. Entire consecration is well-pleasing to the Lord of glory. "Yield yourselves to God." Rom. 6:13.

6. Extravagance is foolish and sinful. Don't waste the Lord's time, the Lord's substance, nor the talents that He has given you. Be a faithful steward of the household of God. And by and by the God of destinies will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

—From the Word of Life.

DOCTOR MEASLES

"It will be a great disappointment to the child, and I am very sorry, but there is no help for it," said Mother, as she folded up the dainty little invitation.

"Don't tell her anything about it," said Dad. "What she doesn't know won't worry her!"

"Why, she knows all about it already, She and Marion had talked it all over before she caught the measles and had arranged everything, even to inviting the favorite doll of each guest to be present."

"It is too bad," agreed Dad, "but measles are not to be argued with and we must make it up to her in some other way, when she is well again."

"I'll think it over," said Mother. Now when Mother said that, it usually meant that something nice was going to happen to somebody.

Ida, the only child had the measles, and, of course, was unable to see anyone or go anywhere, though the attack was but a light one. Her only companion in her solitude was her doll, Measles—a very queer name for a doll. I must explain, however, that Ida had a habit of frequently changing the doll's name, and calling her after the person, place or thing that interested her most at the time. Thus poor Dolly had been named Bathing-suit. Mary Pickford, Bronx Park, Coolidge, the latter name a result of a visit to Bronx Park and the election.

Her illness and the daily visits of the doctor had given her the idea of this very strange name—Dr. Measles.

Her Mother read out the invitation to her, "I am sorry for your disappointment, dear," she said, "but there is no help for it."

Ida gave a deep sigh, "Yes, Mother dear, I know, but I did hope I would be better before Marion's party. Of course, as her Mother says, she can't put her birthday off, can she?"

"Of coure not, dear. It's next Wednesday, isn't it?" Mother's forehead was all puckered up, as if she were thinking hard. "Yes, today a week."

"Do you hear, Measles, we can't go to the party. I had such a lovely name for her Mother for that day, I was going to call her 'Marion's Party.'"

"Well dear, I must run away now," said Mother. "Be good and take your medicine for Nurse and I will bring you a new fairy tale book, and come and read to you this afternoon."

"O, Mother, that will be lovely," cried Ida. "I have to make Measles a new necklace, so I shall be very busy indeed."

When Mother came back in the afternoon she brought with her two tiny little envelopes, really-truly letters that the postman brought. One was addressed to Miss Ida Redford, and the other to Measles.

"Oh, what is it? What is it?" cried Ida, her eyes sparkling. "Read it quickly, Mother dear."

So Mother opened one of the dainty pink envelopes and read:

"Miss Ida Redford is invited to a party to be held in her room next Wednesday afternoon from four till five. As it is not possible to have any outside company, the party will be very select. Mr. Daddy Redford will oblige with selections on the Radio."

"Oh, Mother, how lovely," cried Ida, clapping her hands. "Daddy and the Radio. Oh."

Mother was smiling too, and said, "Here is the invitation for Measles. Shall I read it out?"

"Please do come here, Dr. Measles, and hear what a lovely party we are going to have, Mother, Dad, you and I."

Mother read out as follows:

Oh Ida's little Measles, you're invited out to tea,
On Wednesday next at four, but you may come at half past three!
Our party, as you know quite well, will be but very few,
Just Daddy dear and Mother, our Ida and you, too.
We hope you've no engagement for that especial day
And that we may expect you, please answer Yea or Nay!

"What do you think of that? Isn't that splendid? Now we can look forward to Wednesday and a good time even if we are not going to Marion's party. Ours will be just as nice. And we don't have to worry about the weather either, as all our company are in the house."

"Don't you think Marion would like to have a fine day for her birthday, dear?" asked Mother softly.

"Oh, of course, I want her to have a nice day. It must be really dreadful to have a rainy day, mustn't it."

The eventful day arrived at last, and the sun was shining brightly.

"A real taste of spring," Mother said.

After dinner, and a good rest, Nurse dressed Ida in a pretty light dress, just as if she were going to Marion's and of course Measles—now called Radio Jane—had been carefully attired by her proud Mama very early in the day.

Four o'clock arrived, and so did Mother, Daddy and the Radio.

It was so hoped that there was a performance of Peter Pan, a play, specially for children, on at the afternoon, and they all decided and planned, and Ida danced 'Radio Jane' dance to Peter Pan on the gramophone.

While they were "listening in," Nurse and Mother prepared the table for the party, with all kinds of goodies, everything that Ida could eat. No annoying grown-up food, as Dad called the dainties only to be indulged in by "grown-ups." Dad made a funny speech and ended it by inviting all present to go and see Peter Pan, as soon as Father thought Ida well enough.

Then the radio was turned in again, and the strains of a very lively dance filled the room. Daddy was very fond of dancing and soon whirled Mother off. Ida followed them with Peter Pan for her partner, and they kept it up until the music stopped, and they all fell in a laughing heap on the sofa.

Just then Nurse entered saying she thought it was high time a certain little girl was taking a rest after all this excitement.

Mother and Dad quite agreed with her, and with a parting kiss, Ida was left alone to talk over the party with Peter Pan and plan for the coming theatre party.—Selected.

IF

If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on:
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer Thee.
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do.
Clothe my life the weak intent:
Let me be the thing I meant.
Let me find in Thy employ
Peace that deeper is than joy;
Out of self to love be led
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my natural habitude.—Selected.

A FATAL SLEEP.

Ps. 127:2; Rom. 13:11; Eph. 5:14.

A judge from Atlanta, Georgia, came to his death in a mysterious way some years ago. He sailed on the steamer Kansas City to New York on a business trip. With him were several friends with whom he had passed the hot evening on deck. When they retired he said that he would spend the night in his steamer-chair. Next morning he could not be found on board. He had been in the habit of sitting on the rail, holding on to a stanchion and the supposition was that he did so that night, and had fallen asleep and losing his hold on the stanchion fell into the sea. His loss was mourned by a wide circle of friends. The wonder is that such an intelligent man should have done a thing so risky, but thousands are asleep despite much greater danger. "Awake, thou that sleepest."—Expositor.

State Street, Lexington.—We have not been idle here for the past few weeks even if there has been no report from the pastor.

We paid off $1650 of our parsonage debt this month and have raised and sent check to Conference Treasurer for our entire budget both Annual and General Conference and the College claim asked by the Conference and our W. F. M. S. has also paid off their claim which is counted on the budget, so that puts us out on that line.

Yesterday was a good day for us. We had 102 present in Sunday school and received six new members in to the church. Our work is very encouraging.

One of our ministers who has had experience in both Home Mission and Church Extension work says that as he knows this town from boyhood he knew of no place where Church Extension money would bring bigger returns. We are hoping that February will be a great month with us in raising our full quota.

During that month, the Lord willing, I will be walking over some of the places where our Master walked and I shall remember you brethren and ask God that He may help you in doing your best for the extension of our beloved church.

Our people were very thoughtful of us during the holidays. The Sunday school gave us a beautiful water pitcher made of silver. Of course we appreciate this token of appreciation. Since our last report we have been remembered in a very substantial way by Mrs. J. F. Burheart, J. B. Hayworth, Mrs. A. H. Evans, Mrs. J. W. Lindsay, and Mrs. J. B. Leonard, all giving such things as are wearable, usable, eatable. Thank you, folks.

For lack of time my report must necessarily be short. By the time this is read the writer will be half way across the Atlantic on the way to ports on the Mediterranean. I want to thank quite a number of my friends who have written me their good wishes for a safe and profitable trip. Wish I had time to reply to each one. But this is certainly appreciated coming from my brethren in the misistry.

Bro. J. D. Hardy of High Point College will fill my pulpit during this absence.

With prayers and best wishes to all readers.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Rev. N. G. Bethea, pastor of State Street Methodist Protestant church for more than a year past, will sail next Tuesday from New York for a tour of the Holy Land and the country around the shores of the Mediterranean. Mr. Bethea will go with a large party of tourists, including a number of misisters, several among them being old friends.

Points in France and Italy will be touched, with a visit to Rome, while several places of great historic interest on the African coast of the Mediterranean will be visited. Athens and the historic ruins will come in for attention. The longest stop will be made on the coast of Palestine and the party will vist Jerusalem, Bethlehem and many other sacred spots of that country. Eight days will be spent in and around Jerusalem.

Mr. Bethea's congregation on last Sunday voted him a leave of absence to make the tour and with the vote expressed their hope that he would find complete fulfillment of the dream of a lifetime in this journey. The tour is expected to occupy fifty days from the date of sailing from the port of Ney York.

Special Honor on Trip.

Mr. Bethea has just been notified by telegrams from Percy Bullen, of New York, of an unusual honor that awaits him on this tour. Mr. Bullen, who is secretary of the League of Remembrance, an organization in connection with the celebration of Armistice Day, has designated Mr. Bethea as a special envoy for the presentation to the governate of Jerusalem of a life sized oil painting of Viscount Allenby, liberator of the holy city from the hands of the Turks in the World War. This painting has been done by a very distinguished artist. Mr. Bullen wires. The ceremony is expected to be a notable one. Mr. Bethea had already been notified that he would be given a letter of introduction to the governor of Jerusalem. The city is under the protection of the British government.—Lexington Dispatch.

Denton Charge.—Samuel Johnson said: "Knowledge is of two kinds: we know a subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information about it." It might be said that preaching is of two kinds: Being able to deliver a sermon, or getting a man who can deliver one. Brother T. G. Madison and I have been doing some of both, at least the latter. We were indeed fortunate to have Rev. J. L. Trollinger, of First Church Thomasville, to preach for us at Mt. Ebal on the first Sunday in January at 3:30 o'clock. Brother "Joe's" sermon was, "The Duties of a Church Member." He handled his sermon well. The singing which the male quartette rendered fitted his topic nicely. Many thanks to Rev. Trollinger and the Thomasville quartette.

Prof. P. E. Lindley preached at Denton on, "The Harvest Truly is Plenteous, but the Labourers are few," the third Sunday morning in January. The people of Denton ignored the snow and turned out in full blast to hear Prof. Lindley; however, many were kept at home on account of sickness in their family. Prof. Lindley's sermon is the talk of Denton. I heard several say it was the best sermon they ever heard in any church in Denton. Communion Service was held after the sermon, Mr. Lindley, also, conducted this.

Since this is our first report we hope you may allow us to mention the Christmas exercises and tree held at Denton on December 25, also a treat at Canaan on December 27, 1925.

Canaan has a live Sunday school and prayer meeting. The broken window glasses have been replaced. Rev. Atlas Ridge, a member of Canaan, has offered to give a suitable tract of land, located across the road from the present church, and $300.00 in money towards a new church building. Brother M. C. Cranford, of Denton, has offered some service as carpenter. Canaan will you build or will you blunder? Will you accept these offers? All we have to say is pray over t matter and let God direct you.

Piney Grove has been increasing in a tendance each time except the second Sund in January. The people there, having be inspired by Rev. C. H. Hill, have replac some window panes. A Sunday school is e pected to be organized as soon as the wint breaks.

May God be the physician to every si person and if it be His will restore each o to health again.

IIn His service,

J. Edward Carroll, Co-Pastor.

DARE HOMES BE CARELESS IN THIS

A passing word needs to be said about o religious and denominational papers. Who c estimate their meaning to the home? T home may be ever so humble and far remov from the maddening crowd's ignoble strif but the weekly visit of a noble religious pa er, supplemented by the occasional visit of good book, shapes the life and determin the destiny of that home. The picture of su a home passes before me now. Its inmat were poor and lived in a section where th must toil, from the oldest to the younges and though the home in which they lived w exceedingly humble, yet they held conver with the men and movements of the grea wide world. The parents turned every ext dollar into good literature for their childre They believed with Erasmus when he sai "I buy books first: after that, if I have a money, I buy clothes." They believed wi a great theological teacher who said to h class, "Young gentlemen, shirts are nece sary, but books are indispensable. And so i to that home a choice book came as often it could be afforded, and several of the gre religious papers came every week. Those pa ers and books silently wrought their destin shaping power upon all that large family children, and though far removed from t scenes of the world's great movements, y they thus became vitally real to all those ch dren and entered into their lives. And wh they went forth to the work and warfare the world. all of them had been won Christ and do joyfully walk in his bless service to this day. Is this a mean or ordina result? Nay, it is the sublimest result poss ble in the history of an earthly home. A more than all things else, the literature pr vided out of a scant purse for those childre during the plastic years of their childhood a youth, shaped their characters and determine their destiny. Oh, how can parents and teac ers and preachers be oblivious to this tra scendently important matter of right liter ture? Carelessness here is worse than bein foolish: it is wicked.—Rev. George W. Truet D. D., in "God's Call to America and Oth Addresses."

—Rev. Mr. Rowland, pastor of the Chris tian church, told the attendants at Calvar prayer meeting last week how he conducte a very successful evangelistic meeting i his church.

ORANGES FROM HEAVEN.

People often exclaim: "Wonders will never cease!" And they say what is quite true. How can wonders cease with such a wonderful God in heaven, with whom nothing is too hard—nothing is impossible?

Miss Endicott was on board a ship bound for America. Tossed up and down and all ways at once by the big waves of the Atlantic, the lady in her berth nearly died from seasickness. She shuddered at the thought of food; yet something she must eat to keep alive at all; and after trying various things, it was discovered that she could take oranges. So all the oranges in the ship were claimed for the kind-hearted stewardess for the benefit of this poor lady and day by day she was getting weaker for she could eat very little. At last, one stormy day, when the vessel was pitching and tossing more violently than ever the stewardess came into the cabin with a troubled face.

"I don't know what we are going to do for you now," she said, "for this is the very last orange we have left:" and she showed her the treasure—more valuable at that moment than its own weight in gold.

Miss Endicott's face, however, did not reflect the cloud on that of her kind friend. She took the fruit thankfully. "What I have to do now," she said, "is to make the most of this. If I have to die, I am not afraid; but I know God can send me some more, if it is His will."

"Send more oranges in mid-ocean!" thought the stewardess, though she would not distress the invalid by uttering her thoughts aloud. They were something like those of the great man of old when Elisha promised that the next day there should be abundance of food in Samaria in a time of terrible famine. "Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be?"

"It is stormy enough," thought the good woman, as she went on deck; "if it would rain oranges the poor dear might be supplied, but hardly otherwise. No, no, I don't see how she can get more."

She eagerly cast quick glances over the raging billows, and sighed as she thought of the sufferer.

Miss Endicott calmly ate the orange which had been peeled and sliced ready for her, and then closed her eyes again. Hour after hour she lay there, sleepless and suffering, but trusting her heart—in spite of seeming impossibilities—on the sweet word, "Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things."

Suddenly she was aroused from the dull torpor of misery by strange sounds overhead. Scurrying feet excited voices, queer sounds as of hauling up the ship's side—what could be happening?

"Here they are!" cried the stewardess, running into the cabin carrying a dish of large, juicy oranges in either hand; "here they are you see! Isn't it wonderful? I am sure it is a miracle!"

"Oh," and Miss Endicott's wan face lighted up with thankfulness at the sight. "Where did they come from?"

"Come from!" said the laughing stewardess. "I will tell you. They were just rained down from heaven on purpose for you."

And then she explained.

A vessel had been seen flying signals of distress. Their captain steamed up as near as they could, hailed the skipper, and was told they were nearly starving; all their provisions were gone.

The good man thereupon overhauled the stores on board, a boat was lowered and as much food as could be spared was sent to the crew in distress.

"And what do you think?" said the stewardess. "They were so grateful that they sent us baskets and baskets full of their cargo—because they had nothing else to give—and their cargo was oranges! Now you will have enough and to spare for the rest of the voyage."

"Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?" the murmuring, forgetful Israelites asked of old.

"Can God provide oranges in mid ocean?" the faithless stewardess had asked.

"I know God can," the faithful invalid had declared, "and I know He will, if He thinks it best," and again it had come true.

"According to your faith be it unto you." The stewardess had learned a lesson. She never forgot that day when God thus arranged that ship full of oranges should be brought into the middle of the Atlantic Ocean just to feed one single child of His who trusted Him.—Selected.

NOT CHILD'S PLAY.

Among the beautiful pieces of statuary adorning a famous church is Guido's "Archangel and Devil," symbolizing the victory of right over wrong. In his statue the artist has depicted the attitude of the victorious angel as studied and correct. Not a fold of his garment is disturbed. Not a lock of his hair is ruffled. To look upon him one would imagine that conquering the Devil was the easiest work in the world. It is to this statue that Hawthorne refers in one of his books when he has a certain character say, "The archangel—how fine he looks with his unruffled wings and unhacked sword! No, no—I could have told Guido better."

Anyone who has really had experience with sin could tell Guido better. Conquering the Devil is no child's play. We can scarcely expect to come out of the conflict with "unruffled wings and unhacked sword." The spiritual conquerors have all been hard workers, earnest prayers, unwearied fighters. No one knew this better than the great conqueror who wrote, "Let us not be weary in well-doing."

"Stretch forth thine hand!" But that is just what he was unable to do. His hand was withered. His hand had hung there for years, a rebel to all the commands of the impossible! Yes, but the man obeyed. "He stretched it forth." What he had been unable to do he did at the bidding of the King. Christ's commandments are always accompanied by adequate supplies of grace. His commandments are really inverted promises; every one is a true bond that he Lord will provide the needful power for its fulfillment. When we begin to obey we release the power, and we discover that the requisite ability has been given by the gracious Master who gave the call. Let us, therefore, not fear the decree of the Lord. If "His commandments are exceeding broad," His love is exceeding deep. He will not mock our souls. He will not make us thirst, and then hold the water beyond our reach.—J. H. Jowett.

Give us that calm certainty of truth, that nearness to Thee, that conviction of the reality of life to come, which we shall need to bear us through the troubles of this life.—H. W. Beecher.

OUR PEACE.

Christ is our Peace, our present possession. Even now in this very hour of dire distress, this dark day of misery and ruin, this time of chaos and conflict, Jesus, the Prince of Peace, can reconcile us to God, to ourselves, and to one another. Jesus only is the human soul's safe, secure, serene refuge from all the ills and evils that afflict us. Under His wide, warm, Almighty wings this whole world can find room and rest. In Him we may be quiet from the very fear of evil, for He is the grace-given home of the soul. He is the bright golden center and circle where we may abide forever in pure, perfect peace of mind and heart. He only, in His divine-human personality, is the solid Rock Foundation, on which we build the loveliest, grandest spiritual palace of Christian character, in which this Prince of Peace Himself will deign to dwell to all eternity, making us His guests, spreading the banner of His love over us—all-conquering, triumphant love. What human heart can conceive, what human tongue or pen can tell, the fathomless deeps of that holy calm, that heavenly tranquillity, that sweet and sacred peace, that is the true Christian's priceless possession and privilege, both in this and in the world to come?—V. C. Norcross.

"MOTHER."

And here's a line to Mother,
The best of all the lot,
With a simple little message,
Just a sweet forget me-not,
It's sent to her from some one,
Sealed with a kiss of love,
To wish her joy and comfort
And blessings from above.
May it find her well and happy
As the morn I went away,
May it make her burden lighter
As she works from day to day.
May it chase away the wrinkles
From her apt-to-worry brow,
And keep that smile a-smiling
Till we've finished up this row.
There's a brighter day a-coming
For us, and those back home;
There's ships of Joy and Happiness
To sail us o'er the foam
And sights will be most wonderful
As in glory we meet one another,
But what can be so glorious
As when Sonny meets his Mother.

MARRIED.

Jenkins—Harris.

At the home of Rev. and Mrs. J. B. O'Briant, Rosemary, N. C., 5 o'clock P. M. January 3, 1926, the writer officiating, Mr. S. R. Jenkins and Miss Bertha Harris were united in marriage. The bride and groom are both from Littleton, N. C., and are very popular among a wide circle of friends who are wishing for them many happy days and great success in life. J. B. O'Briant.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—We are indeed pleased with our new pastors, Bros. Carroll and Madison. Brother Madison delivered an able sermon Sunday morning, 10th.

We were very glad to have Brother Braxton, from the High Point College, with us the 10th. He made us a fine talk on the Christian Endeavor Society. We were glad to have you, Brother Braxton. Come again.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under our reelected superintendent, Mr. Gallimore. It is wonderful that we can have such a faithful leader. We all appreciate the work he is doing. We also elected other officers: Secretary, Mr. Val Bischer; Class no. 1, Mr. T. J. Ward teacher, Class no. 2, Mr. Otis Ridge, Class no. 3, Mrs. M. H. Hunt, class no. 4, Mrs. S. E. Martin; Class no. 5, Miss Emma Ridge; Class no. 6, Miss Luna Bischer, organist, Miss Emma Ridge.

Our attendance has been small for the last few Sundays, on account of cold weather.

We have Sunday school every Sunday at 10 A. M. and preaching every 2nd and 4th Sunday at 11 A. M.

We will hold our communion service next preaching day.

We are having prayer meeting every 1st and 3rd Sunday.

There will be prayer meeting next 3rd Sunday. Mr. S. E. Martin will conduct the service. We are still holding on to our prayer meeting under the management of our new class leader, Otis Ridge.

We are very sorry that Mr. W. L. Seyton's children have pneumonia; hope for them a speedy recovery.

There was a home-coming day at Mt. Ebal last Sunday. Our pastors were there and had with them Rev. J. L. Trolinger, of the Thomasville First Church, who gave us a wonderful sermon. They also had with them the Carnell quartette from the Thomasville First Church, who gave us some fine music.

We are hoping and praying for a better year. Otis Ridge, Reporter.

"No clouds those regions know,

Has never entered there."

"Friendship is the opportunity for service. He has most friends and keeps them most securely whose life most contributes to the good and happiness of others."

A CHRISTIANITY WITHOUT A HOPE.

Miss Raby Burgess.

Bishop Brown confesses to lack of faith in any but a God who is merely materialistic motion, matter, energy or force. Along with his belief in a personal God, he at the same moment threw overboard his belief in immortality. So he tells us. Yet he says he is a Christian. Contrast him with Paul who in his five defenses before ecclesiastical and civil courts reiterated the fact that he is being tried for "the hope of the resurrection." Thus Paul summed up the Christian hope—based on eye-witnesses of Him who in His resurrection "brought life and immortality to light."

It is a pitiable sight and a pitiable plight—an old man on the western shore of life, disclaiming belief in immortality, "without God and without hope in the world."—Selected.

A STOLEN DAUGHTER RECOVERED.

Luke 15.17 18; 19:10.

At Kingston, N. Y., a man disputed with a gipsy chief the possession of a fifteen-year-old girl. The chief insisted that she was his daughter, but the other man had evidence, confirmed by the girl herself, that she was his daughter. It appears that she had suddenly disappeared from her home in St. Louis. Her heartbroken father sought the aid of the police, having heard from the girl's playmates that an old woman had enticed the girl away. After many months, police in an eastern city sent word that a gipsy band there had a girl in it answering the description of his daughter. He hastened to that town, joined the gipsy band and after some time saw the girl and recognized her. He appealed to the police, proved his claim and the girl was turned over to him. Her restoration to her home was due to her father's perseverance and patience. So Christ seeks until He finds the lost. How full of meaning is that word "until!"—Rev. Benj. Schlipf.

THE ONE WHO WENT.

Somebody went away last night, when all was dim and dark,
The hall clock slow, the lamplight low, the fire but a spark,
The chamber chill, the nursery still, a ghostly moon agleam,
In every bed a sleepyhead, in every heart a dream.
Somebody tiptoed softly out, his bundle on his back,
And good and glad and queer and sad the contents of that pack.
The things you did, the things I did, the things we hoped and thought,
The things we oughtn't to have said, the other things we ought;
The smiles we smiled, the sighs we sighed, the little schemes we schemed,
The laughs we laughed, the tears we cried, the little dreams we dreamed,
And all the rest a gaunt, gray guest had gathered in his sack—
The Old Year, the bent year, and he never will come back!

WHAT LOVE CAN DO.

Little Robert had been visiting a family of cousins; and though he had been away from home some weeks, he was not anxious to leave the spot where he had been so happy. "I like to stay there," he told Alice, "they have such a beautiful home."

Alice was five years older than Robert, and she did not always pay much attention to what he said, but this remark seemed so odd that she closed the book and stared at him. "Did you say aunt Emma had a beautiful home, Bob Reyson? What a funny idea. It's just a plain little cottage."

Bob looked puzzled and did not reply.

But his sister replied: "And their furniture is really old, and some of the carpets worn out, and they have not nice pictures like ours. What makes you think her house is so beautiful?"

Bob thought for a moment before he answered: "I guess it must be because everybody is so nice to everybody else, and nobody scolds or teases."

At first the older sister smiled, and then the color rose in her cheeks. She saw that her brother was nearer right than herself. A fine house and expensive furniture and pictures on the walls are not the things most beautiful. Love and courtesy and kindness can make the plainest, poorest home beautiful, and the lack of them will spoil a palace.—Afton Free Press.

Mother dear is gone,
Mother, the sweetest name in every tongue.
Mother, we will ever cherish your sacred memory.
All we are or ever hope to be, we owe to thee.
Mother has gone,
Tho' not far away.
Adieu, dearest of mothers, adieu.

Jasper J. Sykes.

Was born about 82 years ago; died January 9, 1926. Funeral, January 10, conducted by the writer at Chestnut Ridge Church. The remains were then placed to rest in the cemetery there to await the Resurrection Morn.

Brother Sykes was one of the oldest and most faithful members of Chestnut Ridge Church.

Notwithstanding the extreme rough weather, a large congregation met to pay their respects to the memory of our deceased brother.

One of his sons said Brother Sykes had attended more services at Chestnut Ridge than any other person. He was faithful to attend Sunday school as well as church services. By so doing, he set an example which others should follow.

Our older members are rapidly passing away. May God help others to carry on the work which they so nobly began.

May God comfort the bereaved ones.

B. M. Williams.

He was taken to Shelby hospital, January 1, where he remained until death came.

He leaves a wife and eleven children and several grand children; one sister, Mrs. Lena Champion, and three brothers, Jessie, Burt, and Frank Wright.

He professed faith in Christ about twenty years ago and joined Friendship Church. Sometime after he moved some distance from the church, and could not attend regularly, but from what we can learn he was trying to live right.

Funeral services were held in his home and then the remains were brought to Fallston and laid to rest in Friendship cemetery.

A Good Man Gone.

Arville C. Cecil was born in Davidson County in September, 1865, and died at his home near High Point January 9, 1926. He lived and died in the community of his birth. He was sick for about three months, and all that physicians and nurses could do for him was done, but last Saturday about 11 A. M. his spirit went back to God who gave it.

He was twice married. The first time to a Miss Hedgecock, and this union was blessed with four children. One of these died in infancy. The living are: Harold A., Flavius R., and Mrs. G. C. Payne. In 1906 his wife died, later, he married Miss Vivian Dicks, of Randolph County. To this union one child was born: Helen Louise, who still survives. He also has three brothers and two sisters living. His brothers: J. E., D. L., and R. L., live in High Point, as does his sister, Mrs. W. T. Kennedy. His other sister, Mrs. I. W. Burton, lives near Thomsville, N. C.

The funeral services were conducted at Pleasant Grove Sunday 2 P. M. by his pastor, assisted by Rev. W. M. Pike, pastor, English St. Church, High Point. The floral offerings were carried by Misses Pope, Katherine Payne, Elda Clark, Della Cecil, Mabel Cecil, and Anetta Payne, Pall bearers were McLean Cecil, Clyde Hedgecock, Earnest Burton, Fred Cecil, Edwin Cecil, Percy Payne, Thomas Shoaf, Lawrence Cecil, and Vent Cecil.

The deceased professed religion and joined Pleasant Grove Church when a young man, and lived a consistent member to the time of his death. His church will miss him, but most of all he will be missed in his home. His good wife has lost an affectionate husband and the little girl a loving father. Our sympathy goes out to all the bereaved family and we pray the Lord's richest benedictions upon each of them. Brother Cecil lived a good Christian life, in his own quiet, unassuming way, and we fully expect to meet him, "in the sweet by and by." The attendance at the funeral was unusually large.

G. L. Reynolds, Pastor.

Ira Thomas Rice.

The oldest of a large family of children of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Rice, of Gibsonville. Ira was twenty years of age. Was born in Caswell County and moved with his parents several years ago when still a boy to Gibsonville where on August 1, 1925, he was married to Miss Lucy Farrior.

He was taken violently ill several weeks ago with typhoid fever. After a hard-fought battle the indications were that he would recover when brain fever developed and hurried him away at 5 o'clock on the evening of December 20th.

Funeral was held on the evening of the 31st and interment was in Bush Arbor cemetery in Caswell County. Rev. G. H. Hendry, pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church of Gibsonville, of which he was a member, officiated.

Ira was a fine Christian gentleman. The church and kingdom suffered a distinct loss in his death.

To his father and mother, three sisters and two brothers we extend our sympathy May they look to God as their solace and may they "sorrow not as those who have no hope."

Smith; to this union were born eight children; five boys and three girls, two boys died when small; and one daughter, Mrs. W. S. Sutton, died in 1916. The other five children together with his wife, survive him. The living children are: Mrs. G. T. Sutton, Mrs. J. B. Bateman, Mr. G. R. Bennett, Mr. B. M. Bennett, and Mr. C. F. Bennett. Resolutions of Respects.

Whereas, in the providence of our infinitely good and loving Heavenly Father who makes no mistakes, but doeth all things well, Mr. John Pender, brother of our beloved teacher, has been relieved of suffering and has been removed from our midst into the presence of our Lord and Savior, therefore be it

Resolved, that we, the members of the Men's Baraca Class of the Mebane Methodist Protestant Church of Mebane, N. HIS MISTAKE.

He longed to find the road to fame,
But not a highway bore that name.
He thought to glory there must be
A level path that he should see;
But every road to which he came
Possessed a terrifying name.
He never thought that fame might lurk
Along the dreary path called Work.
He never thought to go and see
What marked the road called Industry.
Because it seemed so rough and high,
He passed the road to Service by.
Yet had he taken either way,
He might have come to fame some day.

LET THE BIBLE SPEAK FOR ITSELF.

Sometimes the friends of the Bible seem to think that they must defend it by setting up around it the strong walls of high claims concerning its inspiration and authority. And the result often is that those who might otherwise read and study it with ready and responsive minds are repelled at the very beginning.

Is there not a better way? Why not let the Bible speak for itself and win its power over the lives of men now as it did in the beginning, by the sheer worth of its content and the beauty of its teachings? The Bible came into existence because those who read its books found in them the help they needed for the hard task of living; and it never will fully win and finally hold the allegiance of men on any other grounds. It is not because we are told that these are sacred writings that we enjoy them as we do; we rejoice and profit in the Bible because, in the classic phrase, "it finds us." There is no power in doctrines about the Bible to command us: it is the actual value of the book for daily living that gives it place and power with living men now. What we need is not new theories about the Bible but actual contact with it.

This does not mean that we have no positive doctrine about the Christian Scriptures. Quite the contrary. But this doctrine may get into the wrong place and become a menace instead of a help. The best way in which to achieve a true doctrine of inspiration is not to make it a preliminary condition to Bible study, but rather to shape it or ourselves as a result of study. The person who is working earnestly to master the Sermon on the Mount and be mastered by it will have no particular use for any definite dogma concerning its origin or authority; he will be so absorbed and so compelled by the great utterance itself that he will soon be convinced beyond all need of specific doctrines that it originated in a particular form of illumination vouchsafed to Jesus when He was teaching in the villages of Palestine The great passage is its own best warrant. No particular accounting for the authorship of the Psalms is vital to any one who is reading and using these great hymns of faith in God day by day in the business of living.

What the Christian church needs today is more actual reading and study of the Bible by its members and less worry and contention about any theory of inspiration or defense of the Bible books. When the Bible speaks for itself we know that it is for us a gift of God; that is enough.—Zion Herald.

We will read with interest his argument in this and next week's Herald.

THE ONE WHO WOULDN'T FUSS.

Mrs. Peter Marshall was running some long tucks on her machine, and every time she got to the end of a tuck she stopped to fasten off her thread. And while the machine was silent she kept hearing a little voice below her window, talking in loud, angry tones.

"You are jus' horrid," said the voice, "I don't love you a bit."

And another time: "You are just as ugly an' stupid as you can be—so there!" And about the end of the sixth tuck: "I've a great mind to knock you in the head."

"Dear me—dear me!" exclaimed Mrs. Peter Marshall, "who in the world can this be that Daisy Bell is quarreling with? I must call her in."

But when she put her head out of the window and called, "Daisy—Daisy Bell," a smiling little face looked up through the leafy bushes. "Who is that with you, daughter?" asked the mother.

"Nobody, mother dear, except Peggy-from-Paris," answered Daisy Bell, holding up her best doll. "I have been trying to get up a quarrel with her, but she won't say a word, and you just can't keep on fussing with a body who won't answer back."

"No, thank goodness, you can't," laughed Mrs. Peter Marshall.

Another day the lady was writing a letter on the porch, but this time she was disturbed by the same sounds as before, only today somebody was answering back. Daisy Bell and her brother Wilfred were fussing over a croquet game.

"Come here, daughter, just a minute," said Mrs. Peter Marshall; "I want to ask a favor of you."

The little girl came at once to her mother's side, and listened to something whispered into her small, pink ear. "Will you try it?" asked the mother, kissing Daisy Bell's cheek.

The little croquet-player nodded and ran back to strike her ball. After that there was no more fussing.

Would you like to know what Mrs. Peter Marshall whispered in the small, pink ear? I will tell you: "Try Peggy-from-Paris's plan for not fussing!"—Western Recorder.

LUTHER BURBANK, INFIDEL.

According to associated press reports, Mr. Burbank, wizard in horticulture, is, by his own confession, an "infidel in the true sense of the word." He says, "I do not believe what has been served me to believe. I am a doubter, a questioner, a skeptic. When it can be proved to me that there is immortality, that there is resurrection beyond the gates of death, then will I believe. Until then, no." He seems to be an unbeliever of the unbelievers, and will not be convinced until science, on which he appears to rely, leads him to the light. He thinks that there is some great power in the universe but he does not know what it is, or what to call it more than "power." "It may be a conscious mind, and it may not." He does not understand it, and can't, for it is incomprehensible. Yet he seems to imply that this power, whatever it is, is back of the universe, and reponsible for it. All religions, he thinks, must fail. None is perfect nor inspired; and the prophets of religion, not being wise men, must be kept within the bounds of common sense by science. He does not believe in any hereafter, either for the good or the bad. A God that would send any body to hell is repugnant to him; and science disproves the possibility of life after death. And besides, there would not be sufficient room in the universe for the perpetual preservation of human souls, and all other living beings that have been here for their short span." How childish such talk! Jesus!, he says, was an infidel of his age because "he rebelled against the prevailing religion and government." He says that he loves Jesus and his works, and thinks that Jesus has been "outrageously belied."

One cannot but wonder if Burbank has ever tried to find out the truth about the things that he says he does not believe? There is a certain great teacher that stands far in advance of all the world's wisdom—and Mr. Burbank says that he loves this teacher—who said, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." Has Mr. Burbank ever tried this test? He is a scientist, and insists on proof for what he believes. All right, Christ says that he may have it in the realm of religion as well as in the realm of science. "If any man will do his will, he shall know." Mr. Burbank has never had in the scientific world a better opportunity to test his knowledge by proof than he has here. But he has not made this test, or he would not talk like he does.

It is further surprising that one with Mr. Burbank's remarkable mind would rest his unbelief in matters spiritual upon such sandy foundations. He does not belief in the resurrection, he says, because "science disproves reincarnation and life after death." It is true that science does know a great deal about life, and can do a great deal with life; but science has not yet been able to produce life, nor even tell what life is. It knows a great deal about the expressions of life, and can do a great many things with these expressions in their various forms—Mr. Burbank has proved that in many instances—but when it comes to telling what life is in its essence, science is completely baffled; it does not know. If science can not tell what life is, how, then, can science know what life continues to do when it ceases to be active here? This same great teacher said, "Except a grain of corn fall into the ground and dies, it abideth alone." If that grain of corn, by dying, can produce its perfect likeness in the full matured corn, "why should it be thought a thing incredible" that the God—Mr. Burbank would say "power"—who made the corn, and fixed the laws of its reproduction, should bring back to life and to reincarnation those whom he created in his own image and for his glory? Mr. Burbank will not deny that the grain of corn must die in order to live again, and until he can explain that he ought not doubt the resurrection.

Another argument that he makes for his unbelief seems altogether without support in fact and in reason. He refers to Christ as a wonderful psychologist, and presumably thinks that he was a great and good man. But Christ, he says, "was an infidel of his day because he rebelled against the prevailing religion and government." The idea! There is hardly a Sunday school boy or girl to be found any where who does not know that Christ was brought up in the Jewish church by pious Jewish parents; ttat he became a member of the church when he was twelve years of age; and that throughout his earthly life he was a strict observer of the essentials in the Jewish religion. It is true that he found it necessary to correct some of the erroneous teachings of some of the religionists of his day; and this he did unhesitatingly and unsparingly. But he is not an "infidel" because of that, nor untrue to his religion. And, as for the government of his day, his attitude and practice is summed up in his rebuffing answer, made to the Jews who sought to entrap him in his talk: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

Further, he says, "I am in love with Christ as a man, and with his works." "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" If Jesus were only a man, as Mr. Burbank claims, he was the biggest fraud and deceiver that the world has known, and not loveable at all. The idea of hell is repugnant to Mr. Burbank, and yet it is through the teachings of Jesus that we know most about it. Still he says that he loves Jesus. How can this be? Mr. Burbank says also that he is in love with the works of Jesus. What did Jesus say about his works? "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, BELIEVE THE WORK; that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him. And again he says, "The works that I do in my Father's name, THEY BEAR WITNESS OF ME." The works of Jesus, he says, are his "Witnesses" to his claims. And his claims are that he is the Son of God, the God-Man, and that his mission in the world is to save the world, and bring it back redeemed to God. How Mr. Burbank can love Jesus and his works, and still be an infidel is difficult to understand. If Jesus is lovable, then he must be every thing that he claimed to be. By the very nature of the case, this must be so; and if Mr. Burbank will carry his statement to its logical conclusion, he must make this admission.

In his sphere, Mr. Burbank is a very remarkable man, but when he gets into the sphere of the spiritual, and talks his doubts about the eternal verities of God, he gets his feet on sandy foundations, as does every other one who tries to find justification for his infidelity to God and to his truth. If all such men would try as hard to know the truth as they seem to try to justify their position in not believing, they would find the truth, and the truth would make them free.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE. 1.

This is a big subject if one were to attempt to notice all of the half-baked theories and quibbles of those who deny its inspiration. Those persons who deny the Divine insuppose them to be. Disclose the fact that they are not as well acquainted with the Bible as they are with what they call science. They disclose the fact that they are not as well acquainted with the Bible as one would suppose them to be. Disclosethe fact that they have read little or none of the great mass of literature on the other side. Write, or speak, much in disparagment of theology and theologians, showing themselves to be "blissfully ignorant" of both. They make sweeping statements that are not true; such as; "No well-informed person believes in hell." "No well-informed person believes in the creation account as given in Genesis." "All well-informed persons believe in evolution." "No well-informed person believes in miracles." "No well-informed person believes in the planary inspiration of the Bible." "No well-informed persons believe in the personal return of Jesus Christ." These are a few samples of the sweeping statements often met with in books and articles in the magazines and papers, which are utterly false and misleading. What can be the object in making such statements? Isn't ignorance, or something worse? Or have such persons become so obsessed with their own theories that they are rendered incapable of sound reasoning? When a person says "all scientists of all kinds, believe in evolution," as a certain Ph. D. did to the writer, he's beside the facts. We simply referred him to Prof. Virchow, and others, later. I do not know whether he did not know, or whether he thought I did not know. In either case the facts were against him. As to belief in hell, miracles, plenary inspiration of the Bible, the personal return of Jesus Christ—to say that no well-informed person any longer believes in these, is to show one's ignorance, orsomething worse.

Now to get back to the subject: if all of the Bible is not inspired, why do not those men and woman who deny its full inspiration tell us just what part, or parts, are inspired, and what are not? This they never do. The truth is, some of them do not believe that any of it is inspired, in any miraculous, or Divine, sense. No more inspired than Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Locke, &c.

his is the contention of James Freeman arke and others. So they are all the way om no real Divine, miraculous, inspiration, scrappy, partial, inspiration, that carries authority, and amounts to nothing, leaving ery one to make his own Bible, inasmuch as ey fail to separate the ,wheat from the aff. They cast doubt and question upon the hole thing, leaving us no "sure word of ophecy," and like Solomon's "strange oman," who "wipeth her mouth, and saith, have done no wickedness," though they erthrow the faith of thousands.

It has been said by some, as an objection believing all the bible, that if you require me to believe all of the Bible, they will t believe any of it. This may be so in some ceptional cases. But suppose it is, must we pen-knife" the Bible to suit some skeptic? he can't believe, that's his misfortune. here's no way to force him to believe, if e would. But it is passing strange that pers who contend for an uninspired, or parly, inspired, Bible, cannot see that to ve the average person the Bible, and say Take this book and read it. We used to ink it inspired by God Almighty, but our ise men and scholars have found this to a mistake. There's some truth in it, but great deal of error." Can't any one see at any sensible, thinking person would ink, if he did not say so, "Well, if that the case, I have no time to fool with it." If part of it is untrue, perhaps it all is,— ow am I to know the true from the false?"

The truth is, such a Bible carries no authority. Human reason is made supreme. uch a conception of the Bible is Rationalm, pure and simple. Is evangelical Christanity going to surrender to this pernicious, adly error? If so, it had just as well write Ichabod" on its doors, and quit. Whoever new of a modernist, a Rationalist, to be soul-winner? Whoever knew of a great vangelist, a great preacher of the Word, om John Wesley to the present, that did t believe in the full Divine inspiration of ie Bible? Such men as Chas. G. Finney wight L. Moody, R. A. Torrey, Sam. P. nes, Chas. W. Spurgeon, Billy Sunday, Mr. am, R. A. Pearson, and scores and scores others. Who ever knew of a modernist to a pioneer, pushing his way into the junles of Africa, the South sea Islands, among avages and cannibals, as David Livingstone nd John G. Patton, and many others? No ne—and it never will be known. These misonaries are preachers and teachers of the ord and not "criticizers." Jesus said, "Go nto all the world and preach"—not to criticise. So did Paul to Timothy, "Preach the ord"—not to criticise. The original word anslated "preach," meant to cry as a erald, one whose business it was to call the ssemblies together, similar to our court-criers o criticism in this, but to announce a fact o, to preach the word is to announce, or eclare, the word, and not to criticise it. So does not suit the one who does not believe a fully inspired Bible to push out among nnibals and savages, with his criticisms, ultfindings, etc., until some real herald of the cross has preceded him and prepared the soil for him to "sow-tares." Or cuckoo- like, after some one else has made a good nest, by hardships of various kinds, and exposing himself to many dangers to life and limb, this "criticiser" does not scruple to take possession, if he can, forgetting, or ignoring, the command, "Thou shalt not steal." So we ask again, "Whoever knew of a person who does not believe in a fully inspired Bible to be a soul-winner, or a revivalist? Who are the men that are stirring the world to-day, religiously, where any stirring is done? Men who believe the Bible, and believe it intensely. The revival of the 18th century, initiated by the Wesleys and Whitefield, turned back the tide of infidelity in England, and ushered in a new day there. So of America, the early Methodist preachers under Bishop Asbury did a like work here, as the Wesleys and their co-laborers did in England. Again, we say, whoever knew a Unitarian, a higher critic, a modernist, to lead anyone to repentance, to salvation? Whenever one loses faith in the integrity and authority of God's word, he "grieves" the Spirit of God, and God departs from him as from Samson, and he becomes "weak like other men." So, when we as a church, or Protestantism as whole, depart from the faith of our fathers, as regards the inspiration of the Bible, we had just as well call in our missionaries, shut up our churches and quit, so far as saving souls is concerned. True, we might continue to spend much money on fine church houses—pagans have done this—pipe organs, surpliced choirs, and various "programmes," etc and etc ad inifinitum, but the people would continue to live in worldliness and sin, and go down to perdition. It is not an unreasonable supposition that there is such an unprecedented amount of crime at the present time, is because so many have thrown the Bible on the scrap-heap, and with this goes all belief in a future life, rewards, punishments—Divine retribution—a "judgment to come." So every fellow does "as seems good in his own eyes"—to him. So as a result, we see the Sabbath, the marriage relation, the value of human life, the right to property,, largely ignored and trampled on. So as a result we see a generation of reckless, dare-devil, God- defying persons. "Neither fear God nor regard man." Driven by the devil into all kinds of reckless, dare devil crime, as completely as the swine were driven into the lake. We are "sowing the wind and reaping the whirlwind," Paul said that in "the last days perilous times should come." And Jesus said ',iniquity should abound."

That there should be false teachers and false Christs, and lead many astray, and so did the apostle Peter. That there should "come scoffers walking after their own lusts," denying the return of the Lord Jesus. And Jesus said, "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth."

WOMAN'S RIGHT TO SMOKE.

Will. H. Brown.

While some women are arguing that they have a right to smoke—just as much right as the men—they are not convincing even the male smokers that it is right for them to do so. The Rock Island Argus says: "There is a mannishness about a woman's cigarette smoking that doesn't set well with the male."

Ninety girls in the Ohio State University, when questioned as to why they smoked, replied: "We have just as much right to smoke as the boys." The Ann Arbor Times-News comments upon this as follows: "Their logic is wholly sound. They have the right. The only question is whether it's a right worth using. Once a sculptor spent long years making the figure of a monkey. After he had finished the work he gazed upon it in disgust, saying: 'I could just as easily have made the figure of a man.'"

All smokers, male or female, could just as easily spend their time and money in doing something worth while, instead of polluting pure air, weakening mind and body, and making themselves look like the "last rose of summer."

By the way, Dr. R. Horstatter, the noted Vienna physician, says that the use of cigarettes by women is damaging to facial beauty; that the features usually become much sharper, the corners of the lips prematurely wrinkled, that the lower lip shows a tendency to stick out, and that the lips lose their color and become very pale.

Dr. E. L. Fish, medical director of the New York Life Institute, says: "Working indoors all day, dancing all night, SMOKING CIGARETTES and failing to take healthy exercise, is shortening the lives of women between the ages of 15 and 32. The death rate from tuberculosis between the ages of 15 and 20 has increased 60 percent."

HOPE FOR HUMAN SOCIETY.

Education, Civilization, Religion—Especially Christianity—Should Surely Get Us Somewhere.

By Luther K. Long.

I am reading with very great interest Henry G Wells' "The Outline of History." The author has a large view and a strong grasp of his subject. His remarks on the world situation at the time of Alexander the Great are very impressive.

Stories concerning Philip and Olympias—father and mother of Alexander—and several other prominent people of those times, are related. Following that, Mr. Wells goes on to say:

"These stories have to be told because history cannot be understood without them. Here was the great world of men between India and the Adriatic ready for union, ready as it had never been before, for a unifying control. Here was the wide order of the Persian empire with its roads, its posts, its general peace and prosperity, ripe for the fertilizing influence of the Greek mind. And these stories display the quality of the human beings to whom those great opportunities came. Here was this Philip who was a very great and noble man, and yet he was drunken, he could keep no order in his household. Here was Alexander in many ways gifted above any man of his time, and he was vain, suspicious, and passionate, with a mind set awry by his mother.

"We are beginning to understand something of what the world might be, something of what our race might become, were it not for our still raw humanity. It is barely a matter of seventy generations between ourselves and Alexander; and between ourselves and the savage hunters, our ancestors, who charred their food in the embers or ate it raw, intervene some four or five hundred generations. There is not much scope for the modification of a species in four or five hundred generations. Make men and women only sufficiently jealous or fearful or drunken or angry, and the hot red eyes of the cave-men will glare out at us today. We have writing and teaching, science and power; we have tamed the beasts and schooled the lightning; but we are only shambling toward the light. We have tamed and bred the beasts, but we have still to tame and breed ourselves."

Does all this seem very discouraging? Yes, and no. Yes, if we are to continue along the same old lines and in the same old way. No, if we are to make free use of the newer light and of the forces that are becoming more fully understood, and which are found to be at our service.

It is true as Mr. Wells concludes—"We have tamed and bred the beasts, but we have still to tame and breed ourselves."

But can we tame and breed ourselves? Most assuredly we can, if we study and apply the facts and laws of Heredity as they are ably set forth in "The Fruit of the Family Tree," by Wiggam—and in the writings of other scholars.

The Interdenominational Student Conference—held in Evanston, Illinois, from December 29 to January 1—took significant action on this matter. Here is the report of it:

"Resolved, that the interdenominational student conference go on record as favoring the adoption by our country and the church of a modified program of eugenics, consisting of these recommendations:

"1. The legalizing of the dissemination of information concerning contraception, or birth control.

"2. By means of segregation and sterilization, progressively eliminate those who are, by heredity, mentally unfit.

"We believe that these recommendations are in accord with the spirit of Jesus, who came that we might have abundant life, which means the possibility of everyone living up to the best and fullest of his powers and not a flooding of the country with vastly superffuous numbers of undereducated and underfed children who have an exceedingly small chance of becoming anything but economic and social burdens."

We can also control our own conduct—wisely regulating our individual and social relations—if we cultivate and increase and make use of the Intelligence with which we are endowed. Profesor James Harvey Robinson and others are contributing in a splendid way to the understanding of the human mind. We may believe that—as they understand themselves and their fellow-men better—men will cooperate more perfectly in bringing to pass better individual and social conduct.

Above all, we have the life, teaching and spirit of Jesus Christ. His philospohy of God, of men, of life, has not been exhausted. His power to save and to upbuild is with us today. Taking his teaching seriously, yielding to his spirit, living in harmony with his will, there is no end to the improvement that will be made in human affairs. Recognizing the authority of Jesus let us hear again with interest and obey with devotion the words of the Great Commission:

"Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

THE DOXOLOGY TO THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Rev. W. A. Ledford.

The Long Meter Doxology written by Bishop Ken near the close of the seventeenth century, has met with such universal favor and occupied such a large place in the minds and hearts of Christians, till it is almost startling to the common mind to suggest that there is another doxology in existence. Yet 'most all commentators refer to the portion of the Lord's Prayer following the petitions as the doxology, which is "a hymn of praise and honor to God." It reads thus, "For thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory, for ever. Amen." And is a most appropriate ending for this matchless prayer.

The American Standard Version of the Bible does not contain the doxology as found in Matthew 6:13 in the King James Version, nor is it found in Luke in any translation. The majority of modern scholars omit it, who regard it an interpolation by some pious Jew, deriving it from the use of the Liturgies of the Early Church. The principal arguments against it having a place in the canonical scriptures is its absence in Luke, from the four oldest uncial and five oldest cursive manuscripts: it is neither found in the Latin and Coptic Versions, nor in any of the citations of the Latin Fathers. On the contrary it is in perfect harmony with all scriptural teachings: has been a part of the liturgy of the Church from almost the days of the Apostles themselves and worthy of the place it has occupied in the devotional life of the Church during her long and honored history!

The doxology to the Lord's Prayer is more than a courteous, affectionate ending such as we attach to our letters. It is far more than any pious, solemn "Good-bye" when the best of friends part. It is more nearly like the peroration of an oration, when the salient points are summed up and the main arguments are enforced. God is attributed with a Kingdom, Power, and Glory that are imperishable. They are surrounded with an atmosphere of immortality. These forming a marked contrast with the changing kingdoms of this world, whose rulers have such limited powers, and whose glory is mostly wanting. The closing Amen, meaning "so be it" or in modern parlance, "all right," is more than a willingness for God to have the Kingdom, Power, and the Glory; it is, yea, a deep satisfaction and a special delight for God to have them now and for eternity. The pious souls will continue to repeat these closing lines of the time honored Lord's Prayer frequently, reverently and fervently regardless of what others may do. The intrinsic worth of the doxology to the Lord's Prayer will save it from perishing from the earh.

IN MEMORIAM.

We, the members of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the M. P. Church of Winston-Salem, wish to offer a tribute of love and esteem to the memory of our dear sister, Mrs. Mary Murphy Hauser, wife of R. N. Hauser, who died November 25, 1925.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father in His love and tender mercy to remove from our midst our esteemed and loyal member who was ever willing and ready to promote the work of her Master and who leaves with us sweet memories of her beautiful life and Christian character; while we shall indeed miss her presence and cheerful smile, we feel our loss is her eternal gain.

Therefore, be it resolved:—

First: That in her death we have lost a true friend and co-worker in Christ.

Second: That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to the care and keeping of One who doeth all things well.

Third: That copies of these resolutions be sent to the family, be recorded in the minutes of the Missionary Society, and be published in the church paper and Missionary Record.

FROM THE JAPAN TIMES.

The following, received from Rev. Dr. L. Layman, Nagoya, Japan, is an editorial from the largest newspaper, printed in English, owned and controlled by Japanese, in Japan. It is supposed to reflect the ideas of the Government. The occasion of the editorial is the presence of Dr. John R. Mott on his 7th visit to these shores. "Dr. Mott's present visit on these shores is especially interesting, indeed gratifying, as it is in response to the invitation of the National Christian Council of Japan, which wishes to have his opinoion on the questions of the service that the Japanese Christians may render to the world, and of services the world's Christians may render to Japan.

We have no doubt that Dr. Mott has liberally benefited his hosts with valuable counsel, so that the Japanese delegates to the World Christian Evangelization Congress at Jerusalem in 1927 may know what to say and how to act. For our part, we take the present opportunity to put on record our view, as a non-Christian independent observer, of what Christianity and Christians have done to this country.

It is common enough to say that Japan as won her present place in the world through er prowess at arms, as if mankind had no riterion for judging the greatness of a peole but the brute instinct to kill each other. No, that is not the only criterion, nor yet he main criterion. There is a higher standard ndeed, the highest standard, namely the qualty of civilization. What is it that has given apan her present civilization?

It may be claimed that Japan has had centuries of oriental civilization, that has prepared her to rise to a higher plane of humanity nd enlightenment.

But no amount of sophistry will hide the act that it is the Christian workers and hristian civilization that have lifted Japan bove the darkess of old ideas and backward ustoms, and put her on the path of progress nd higher culture.

Modern Japan may have been an apt pupil: ut she has had her days of tutelage, and her utors have been neither Buddhists nor Confucianists, but the Christians with their Christan civilization.

Thirty years ago we had extraterritoriality emoved not because we had our own enlightned judiciary system, but because we won eart and soul into mastering and adopting e Christian system and ideas of justice.

We are today received to all practical urposes, (except alas, in immigration question) as equals in the most advanced centers f the world's civilization, and that not beause we are the descendents of people of e highest bravery, with a noble code of chivry, but because we have succeeded in assimlating the Christian standard of ethics and orality as well as Christian good manners. et us ask who it was that taught us in this ruggle for uplift in our selves. The answer perfectly simple. The Christians and Christan ideas of love, humanity, justice and proriety, therefore, Christianity. Japanese hristians professing their belief in the Bible, nd going to churches may not be very large: ut the Japanese men and women who think good Christians do without knowing it, nd are propagating and acting up to Christan ideas are innumerable. In fact it may be id, without exaggeration, that if Christiany as a religion be making but a slow proess in Japan, the Christian ideas may be id to have already conquered the country. Take the Christian festival, for instance. is fast becoming a national institution, the additional idea of celebrating the anniverry of the birth of the Lord of Peace appealg strongly to the Japanese sentiment. In okyo, at all events, the Christmas season s become one of rejoicing and fraternity r take fiction and magazine and newspaper rticles for popular reading in Japan, one nnot help being astonished to see to what ttent their writers are guided by Christian eas. For this Christian conquest, of which e are not ashamed, we must admit that we ve it to Christian workers, foreign and Japese, especially workers like those who are presented by our great visitor, now in our idst. We sometimes think that these workrs would be more welcome to us and accomsh more if they did not talk so exclusively religious topics. None the less we cannot deny that they are doing us a world of good. These are our plain but frank words of welcome to Dr. Mott." Fred C. Klein.

Asheboro.—While there has not been a death in our membership here since conference, yet a number of our people have been called upon to give up loved ones. On December 18, Mr. M. L. Winningham, father of our A. R. Winingham who at present is living in Florida, passed to his reward at the age of sixty-six years and the funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. C. H. Hill at Giles' Chapel on Sunday, December 20.

On January 18, Mrs. Z. A. Lewallen, grandmother of Miss Beatrice Lewallen and mother of Mrs. H. S. B. Thompson, was called home at the age of 82 years. The funeral was held from our church on January 20 and was conducted by the writer, assisted by other ministers of the town. Mrs. Lewallen held her church membership at New Union Church on Richland Circuit and was an excellent woman.

On January 18, Brother Colvin McCain, brotherinlaw of our brother J. S. Ridge, fell from the running board of an automobile and was killed. The funeral was held at Charlotte M. P. Church on January 20th and was conducted by Brother C. H. Hill, the pastor.

On January 21, Mrs. David C. Stanley half sister of our brother R. D. Lowdermilk, fell asleep in Christ and was buried the following day at Flag Springs M. P. Church, the writer holding the service.

Recently, Mr. Robert Walker, of the western part of the county, father of Mrs. H. W. Ferree of our church, died at an advanced age. We sympathize with all of these who have been called upon to give up loved ones.

Attendance at all the services except the Wednesday evening prayer meeting continues good. At the prayer meeting this week we are to discuss the question, How the church may reach the community to a larger extent. With apologies to Grace Church we are dividing the people into two classes, old and young, and will see who can muster the largest number.

Next Sunday has been set aside as Annual Conference Day and we are hoping to raise a good deal of our Annual Conference Budget.

It has been decided that the regular monthly business meeting of the church will be held on Tuesday night after each first Sunday. The one held last month was very helpful.

The carpet and pews have not yet been put in our church but sentiment is getting very strong for them now, so we are hoping to have something to report along this line before long.

Some of the brethren are handling two of the thousand dollar notes for the college this week and an effort will be made to collect all the old pledges.

Miss Cleon Holden, one of the younger members of our church, who has been critically ill in the High Point hospital is somewhat improved. J. E. Pritchard.

Gilburg.—On Sunday, January 24, our pastor, Rev. M. P. Chambliss, drove about sixty miles in spite of the cold to preach to us. The sermon was greatly enjoyed although it was cold and the crowd small.

Miss Virginia Gurley and Miss Lerry were visitors from Chase City, Va. We were glad to welcome them and wish for them to hurry and come again.

Last November we raised a Thank's Offering for the Children's Home. The money was turned over to J. B. Satterwhite. The report had not come out in the paper until just a few weeks ago signed, "J. B. Satterwhite $15." We are in hope that it was meant for the church.

We are still trying to have Sunday school in spite of the small crowds we have and the bad weather we have, too. We all will be glad when our pastor finishes at the Seminary so that he can be with us more and help us develop a better Sunday school.

Alma Poythess, Reporter.

Asheville.—Our reporter has been keeping you all informed of the progress of the work here. There are discouragements to be sure, and yet enough encouragements to offset them and to keep us pressing on. So, we thank God and take courage.

For some weeks we have been working on organizing the men of the church into a Brotherhood. We are to have another meetin to-morrow (Tuesday) night at the parsonage when the nominating committee will report, and the organization set in motion. We are hoping and expecting great things when the men once they get started.

A Sunday School Council was perfected last month. The meeting of the Council held last week was helpful. Some rearrangement of classes is going to mean a great deal to us. Because of the over-crowded condition of the Sunday school two of the classes will meet hereafter in the parsonage. Sentiment is crystalizing for the enlargement of our Sunday school space. It is proposed to build out to the limits of our lot, and to add another story to that part of the building. This will about triple our space. More about this later.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Ct.—Brother Ridge preached for us the 3rd Sunday in January a good sermon.

We have not organized Sunday school yet; today was set to try again. But it was so bad no one went that I know of. We have had no prayer meeting in some time; the weather has been unfavorable so it seems we have gone into winter quarters. Hope both Sunday school and prayer meeting will get started soon. They have the arbor done, only a little work to do on the pulpit yet. It looks nice and we are well pleased with it. We Chapel people thank everyone that gave money to help. Mr. Thomas Hall was the foreman in the work. They want to seat it some time. It makes us feel like Chapel will live on for years to come.

Our pastor, Brother Ridge, gave three days' work. The people came in and helped; had plenty of help 'most all the time.

Mrs. Columbas Loflin fell three months ago and has not walked since; but can sit up some. Lizzie Cranford.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Birmingham Convention—April 12-19, '26.

Every four years the hosts of Sunday school workers and leaders in Religious Education hold a great inspirational convention and educational conference.

The next quadrennial convention of the International Council of Religous Education will be in Birmingham, April 12-19, 1926. It will be a most significent gathering, inamuch as it will be the first convention held by the International Council since the merger of the thirty-five Protestant Denominations and the Inernational Sunday school Association.

For the first time, every denomination in the International Council is actively behind the convention and earnestly working for a large attendance. Likewise, the fifty-four state and provincial councils in the United States and Canada are all planning on large delegations, in order that the value of the convention may directly help the local communities put on stronger and better programs.

The International Convention is the great rally of Protestant workers interested in the teaching ministry of the church. It divides itself into two principal activities. First, the inspirational meetings, which everyone attends, where one listens to the inspiriational messages of America's leading religious educationalists. These sessions stir the soul to greater activity and fill the listeners with a real appreciation of the task of the church in advancing the teaching ministry of Jesus Christ. Secondly, and perhaps even more important, are the twenty or more educational conferences, meeting every modern phase of religious education and need, including workers' conference for teachers of children, young people and adults, leadership training, week day education, vacation church schools, church school administration, architecture, missionary education, educational evangelism, publicity, pageantry, art, and many others.

These educational conferences afford church leaders a direct contact with the outstanding national experts of denominational and interdenominational agencies. Here one may receive specific, constructive help on one's own problems, arrange for personal conferences, and also learn what others elsewhere are doing in various fields of Christian teaching.

Who Can Come.

Everyone sincerely interested in the Christian training of childhood and youth and the problems of adult education may come. No one is barred from attending this convention The only qualification is a real desire to know more of the latest teaching methods and modern ways of administering and promoting religious education.

What It Costs.

Birmingham, Alabama, is located in the south central part of the United States. Reduced railroads rates of one and one-half the regular round trip fare will prevail. Special trains have been scheduled.

The registration fee is $3.50. Entertainmet and lodging can be had for a nominal sum either in private homes or in moderate priced hotels. Extensive arrangements have been perfected for thousands who will come by auto and live in the mountain camp sites provided around Birmingham.

How To Register.

Those desiring to register as a delegate for the convention will write Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md., enclosing the registration fee of $3.50, upon the receipt of which will be mailed you a certificate which entitles you to the privileges of the convention. Any further information will be gladly fursished by writing the above address.

As only a limited number of delegates have been allotted to the Methodist Protestant Church, you are requested to register as early as possible. In case a delegate is registered and finds he cannot attend the convention, fee will cheerfully be refunded at any time before March 1, 1926.

Young People's Conference.

Under the leadership of Doctor P. R. Hayward, Director of Young People's work of the International Council of Religious Education, a three-day session for young people will be held in Birmingham, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, April 16, 17, and 18, 1926. It is expected that several thousand outstanding young people of high school and college age will be present to discuss their own problems and seek to find their solution.

The registration fee is only one dollar and a half to those who attend the three days. The regular registration fee of $3.50 will admit all young people's delegates to the conference likewise. E. A. Sexsmith.

1915—A NOTABLE DECADE—1925.

One of the most momentous decades history has just come to a close. During t past ten years almost every social organis even to the basic family, felt the impa and impulse of change. Centuries hence h torians will be turning back to this deca to explore the period in which the course human affairs was radically altered, or find the points where the promise of chan still to first appeared. No soci l orga ization has felt the pains of reconstructi during these ten years with more force th has the Christian church.

Church and State.

It had been the delusion of protestanti since Luther, and of American protestanti since the pilgrim fathers, that the issue tween church and state had been settl with mutual liberty. The church in its o compartment; the state in its own compa ment; neither transgressing—this was tradition. "The things of Caesar and things of God." Americans have carried litical campaigns in the virtue of that t dition. The decennial cycle just closed seen the emergence of new convictions the part of many Christian communions the light of which this tradition, alw poorly founded, can hardly survive. T things of God have become too inclusive the things of Caesar an unquestion in any realm of human inter the awakened issue.

From 1915 to 1925 has decade of the world war. Europe and the colonial parts of Asia and Africa were embroiled in the war when the decade opened; Germany is being readmitted to the family of the nations and an active process of appeasement has just begun as it closes American churches began the decade praying for peace, they close it praying for peace; but they have spent most of the ten years readjusting themselves to the astonishing fact that after nineteen centuries of Christian influence war is still as gloriously intrenched in the social scheme as in the days of Caesar. Because modern war has become a thing of peoples rather than of armies, the relation of the churches to war is felt as a problem of more importance than at any previous time. In America, as in all the other countries involved in the late war, this relation proved to be, in the main, an uncritical support of aid in recruiting, rationing, financing, and the creation and maintenance of community morale.

War reaction has swept the churches as much as any of our social organisms; perhaps more than most. The fate of the Wilsonian ideals at Versailles began the process of disillusionment. The fourteen points and kindred expressions had furnished the intellectual basis for American support of the war; the crass realities of the treaty jarred many churchmen into first asking whether they had been deceived into serving at a sorry shrine. The treaty was signed in 1919; the American reaction came in time to register at the election in 1920; by 1921 the first voices were heard declaring that the churches had been fooled in the ideals which furnished motives and justification for blessing their nation in its participation in the great slaughter. It is probable that a majority of churchmen, faced with the choice of 1917 again, would follow substantially the course they then adopted. But at least a minority has been developed strong enough to make the issue of the relation of the church to the state when the state again devotes itself to making war, one of compelling importance.

The Church and Industry.

Within ten years the church has begun to interfere actively and on a national scale in the processes of industry. By that, it is meant that the recognition of the responsibility of the church in this field is wholly a developement of the cycle under review. The prophets began to prophesy as far back as the time of Kingsley and Maurice. The present attitude of the American churches grows directly out of the fearless preaching of Rauschenbausch and Ward which began twenty and more years ago. But it has been nevertheless, the passing decade which has seen the triumph of the truth that the churches are involved in the ethical implications of the conditions under which all men earn their livelihood.

The general acceptance of this fact is to be seen in the increase of organizations devoted to securing facts and passing them on to the churches, or to bringing the weight of church sentiment to focus on industrial abuses. In the federal council, the commission on the church and social service has carefully been moving toward a position of influence during the decade. Perhaps the department of research and education of the same body has been even more successful in making its presence felt in connecting the churches with this field of dispute. Most of the protestant denominations have founded societies, boards, or departments of boards, which are dedicated to serve in this realm.

Political and Social Issues.

Even more striking has been the growth of a concern for the just regulation of political and social issues. This, too, has been in large measure a developement of the decade. In the case of prohibition, of course, this is not so. National prohibition came during the decade largely because of the attention which the churches had given the issue in previous decades. But the decade deserves remembrance because of the spread of the interests of the church from a social issue of not more than national dimensions—when the decade opened not even that—to a number of issues of world-encircling importance.

The churches are still interested in protecting the nation from disintegration fostered by the commercialized liquor traffic. But they have other social and political issues of equal importance, some of which are leading them into unexplored regions. They are interested vitally in the organization of an international order which shall make for peace. The manner in which the churches have taken up the issue presented by the exclusion of orientals under the immigration law is another evidence of an increasing interest in social and political matters. Brotherhood and good will have had a sorry time in some parts because of the activities of the K. K. K. By far too many congregations and preachers have been swept into this orgy of intolerance to allow us to cherish an easy optimism as to the soundness of the church's moral understanding. But this much, at least, can be said: if many churches tried to close their eyes to the ethical menace of the klan while it was powerful, no denomination—unless it may have been one of the bodies so small as to escape general notice—gave the klan official approval; and almost all the churches are recovering their poise and so hastening the passing of this order.

The Christian Message.

Of more importance has been the change in attitude toward the content of the Christian message, particularly as it is shown in the rise of a militant fundamentalism, and of a new attitude toward missions. The basic problem is the old one of authority. The issue has become critical now because for the first time it is generally perceived that this is the issue. The fundamentalists have rallied around a conception of authority which every day grows more untenable; the liberals have not yet found an authority to which they can give unhesitating allegiance or an intelligible popular interpretation. Every major religious revolution which the west has known has revolved around this issue. Early Christianity rejected the authority of the apostles; the protestant church rejected the authority of the Roman order. It is of more than passing moment that the decade just closing has seen the question of authority come up again.

Denominationalism.

During the decade there has been an appreciable lessening of communal respect for the institution of denominationalism. The spectacle presented during the war when, for the sake of a national victory, it proved possible for Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile, immersionists and non-immersionists, predestinarians and free-willists to worship to[illegible]bone much to undermine the den[illegible]em. The more liberal der[illegible] the widening liberal fringe [illegible]rations, recognize this, and are [illegible] adjust themselves to it by promot[illegible] formation of churches resting upon [illegible]mon life of the community, in which [illegible]nominational connection shall be minimiz[illegible]to the utmost.

It has not been possible even to list here all the characteristic developements of the past ten years. It may be that some omitted will be regarded in certain quarters as of more significance than some of those included. But sufficient changes have been mentioned to make the decade under review clearly a period of importance. All must agree that the churches are certainly on the move, and we dare to believe that they are going forward. —Condensed from the Christian Century.

THE EXTRA STITCHES.

Stitching flannel for the poor of the parish engaged the attention of two young girls. "Now we have completed our garments, our work is finished for this season, at least," one of the two girls said with a sigh of relief.

"No, no, wait a moment; just a few moments more," replied the other; and, going into an inner room, she returned with some skeins of crimson silk, and few knots of ribbon and lace.

"Why, what are you doing?" asked her companion with surprise, as the deft fingers swiftly fashioned a dainty edging of crimson silk, frilled in the soft lace at neck and sleeves, and fastened on the bright ribbons here and there.

"These extra stitches take just a moment," was the answer, given with a blush, "and I want to make the dress pretty for some mother's baby."

As the great pile of dresses was distributed to the needy, that cold winter, one hard-visaged woman burst into tears, and hid her face in the folds of a little dress trimmed with lace and ribbons. "Oh, to think of someone doing this for my baby! I didn't think anybody cared," she sobbed.

"God cares for you and your baby," said the reverent voice of the pastor, who had long sought an opportunity to reach this hardened heart. And for the first time the woman was willing to listen to the sweet old story. Does this not teach us that there is something more for us to perform beyond the rigid call of simple duty? The extra stitches are surely the threads of gold that beautify and enrich the dull, dark fabric of our too often careless and indifferent charity.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

THE QUESTION BOX.

How many Auxiliaries use the Question Box? If yours does not, why not? If your Auxiliary is too efficient to need to use the Question Box you are doing fine.

The object of this Question Box is to get every member to read the "Missionary Record" thoroughly in order to keep well informed about our missionary work and workers.

If you can't answer the questions you have not read the paper thoroughly. How about it? It is one thing to take the Missionary Record, another thing to read it. If it is left on your table unopened it is of no use to you whatever. Let one of your New Year resolutions be: "I will be able to answer every question in the 'Question Box.'" We must have the information before we get the inspiration. May we get the inspiration to do more for the Master's Kingdom than we have ever done!

Sincerely Mrs. Clifton L. Whitaker.

STUDENT LOAN FUND.

Since everything we raise goes into the "Budget," I fear some times the Budget is an indefinite thing.

We have been asked to give 10 cts. per member for the Student Loan Fund, and told that this counts on our Budget. Now if we only have in mind to raise our Budget and give only the 10 cts. per member, our Student Loan Fund will grow very slowly and I fear our Student Loan Fund will never appeal to us as being so very important. The Fund, you understand is in reserve and only the interest is to lend to young women who are in need of funds to get the training for the work in Foreign Fields.

The Kings Business requires haste. Opportunities are open before us the like of which has never been known. Let us strive to make this Student Loan Fund a power to help prepare the workers that are needed now. Put this Student Loan Fund on your prayer list.

I am asking each Auxiliary to bring this appeal in some way before the people. I know one Auxiliary that had a woman in it that was so interested she talked to the Sunday school about it and they gave her $5.00 as an offering, which was more than 10 cts. per member.

This is one opportunity for your offering to go on doing good even after you have passed off the stage of action, for when the missionary helped, gets on the field she pays back the Loan and it in turn helps another missionary to prepare for the work.

Our missionary year ends with March and I know February is Thank-Offering month, but please don't forget the Student Loan Fund and try in some way to impress the importance of it and the wonderful opportunities it affords.

Sincerely. Mrs. Clifton L. Whitaker.

ATTENTION, PASTORS, PLEASE!

If any minister in the North Carolina Conference has read the Japanese Tribute to Christianity, in Dr. Klein's latest letter to the denominational periodicals without a quickening of the pulse and a great rejoicing of the heart, this appeal is not to him. But to all who are glad of the progress of Christianity in Japan may I ask that you re-double your efforts in behalf of the Missionary Enterprises of our church. Every one most reorganize now that "the pastor is the key man in the Missionary Enterprise." Are your people intelligent concerning missions? If not, can't you persuade some at each church to subscribe to the Missionary Record? you know at our last annual Conference our President, the Reverend Dr. A. G. Dixon, said in his address that every M. P. who kept up with the entire church must take four church papers. I have no appeal for any of the four except The Missionary Record, but I believe a church that hasn't a good list of subscribers for this one is cheating itself. Surely we all want to have a part in bringing all the world to a saving knowledge of Jesus. Did He not say "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free"? This is quite out of its setting to quote it here, but unless we know about the needs of the unchristian people we shall never be able to help them to get away from their superstitions and sins, to freedom through the Blood of Jesus.

The Missionary Record is 75 cts a year Editor, Mrs. H. E. Amos, 918 Gaston Ave., Cambridge, Ohio.

Is is too much to hope that every pastor in the N. C. Conference will subscribe, and talk missions until either the men or the women get interested in this most fascinating subject, and we have Missionary Societies at every church?

Very truly yours,

Mrs. R. M. Andrews.

Mrs. McCullough Redding Dies In Ione, Washington.

In the far land of the West, in the little City of Ione, Wash., on Sunday morning January 17th at the calling of the church bells to the house of prayer, the angel band visited the home of McCullough Redding and said to his beloved wife, Clara, join hands with the angel band; while she lingered to kiss the bowed head of her heart broken husband, and bestow a benediction on little Frank and baby Betty, the heavenly messengers bore her spirit way.

When relatives and kind friends had prepared the body the grief stricken husband little Frank and baby Betty with friend Colie Redding started for her eastern childhood home.

Arrived at 12:30 Saturday night. The body lay in state in best parlor Sunday, at the home of her father, Mr. Michael Ward, and was viewed by hundreds of friends during the day.

Monday morning Mother Nature had covered the earth in a blanket of snow, but long before time appointed for funeral people in large numbers assembled. At 10 o clock the funeral procession started on its winding way in the gentle falling snow to Bethany, the little church on the hill a few miles away where a host of friends and relatives awaited them.

The funeral was conducted by former pastor, Rev. W. F. Ashburn assisted by Rev Mr. Lindley. Pall bearers, Dwight Trogdon Samuel Pugh, Clark Pugh, William Hinshaw Samuel Nelson and Isaac Julian.

Flower bearers Sunday school class mates.

All during the service the snow gently fell, but as the body was committed to the grave, earth to earth, dust to dust, ashes to ashes, a bright beam of sunshine burst forth and an unheard voice seemed to say: Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord henceforth and for ever more. Amen. B. B. Ferguson.

Orange Charge.—Owing to bad weather and rough roads our congregations have been reduced, still we have been able to keep moving along slowly.

The third Sunday in January we held "Annual Conference Day" at Efland Churih. (The first such day that I know to have been held in our conference.)

Our goal was the raising of the entire annual conference claims, and amount for college running expense.

We failed to reach our goal; but were able to send check for $60.00 to Brother Idol on annual conference claims. So we feel the efforts were not in vain, though we did not come up to what we expected.

Three new members were received into the Efland Church third Sunday in January as follows: Mrs. Fred Brown, Mrs. Robert Nickols, and Miss Ernestine Miller. We are glad to have these unite with our church.

Fourth Sunday in January annual conference day was held at Hebron. Do not know just how much was raised here; we are continuing the campaign here through February. Hope by so doing to be able to pay at least 50 percent of claims.

These Annual Conference Days will be observed at the other churches as follows: Union Grove, 1st Sunday in February; Chestnut Ridge, 2nd Sunday in February.

Sincerely. B. M. Williams.

Little Jane was left with a cousin, while the rest of the family went on a trip. In spite of all the playthings the hostess had to amuse her, Jane began to get lonesome after a while.

"I wish you would not be lonesome, Jane," the hostess said. "With all these nice things to play with you should be happy here."

"But it's not where I am makes me lonesome" quavered Jane. "It's where I am not."—Los Angeles Times.

"Red tape" is a popular name for official formality and delay. The term had its origin in England during the 18th century and arose from the custom of tying documents with red tape. It was perfectly natural for the ordinary man, impatient for action, to ridicule this everlasting tying and untying of red tape which bound the dispatch and document cases.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for January 14th: "What is Faith, and What Does it Do for Us?" Hebrews 11: 1-10. (Consecration Meeting).

This is a Consecration Meeting and each person in the meeting is expected to take some part, aside from singing. Place your chairs in two circles, one within the other. As the members are seated, have them sit in the outer circle. At the close of the meeting, you might call attention to the fact that Faith places us within the inner circle of God's loving care. Without faith, we are ever in an outer circle.

A week in advance, assign the following topics to members of your society for discussion in this meeting: (all of them may be found in the Bible.)

The Faith of Abel; of Enoch; of Noah; of Abraham; of Jacob; of Joseph; of Moses; of Barak; of David; of others whom you may select. Ask your pastor, or other leading worker, to close the meeting with a short talk on "Faith as an anchor."

Monthly Service Program.

The Monthly Service Program for February includes: Observing Christian Endeavor Week, January 31 to February 7th, Reporting Society Officers to National office, and preparation for Dixie Endeavor Day on March 7th.

Do It Now.

Send in a list of your society officers NOW to Rev. Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade St., Greensboro, N. C. It is important that we have an up-to-date directory of all officers so that the new program may be sent out to all societies. PLEASE send at once, listing all officers with their mailing addresses, and all superintendents of Junior and Intermediate societies.

Our New Chart Ready.

The new chart of the Board of Young People's Work is off the press and it surely is a dandy. It gives the denominational program for all Christian Endeavor societies and presents workable plans for all societies working under all conditions. Surely your society will want a copy to place on the walls of your room. It is free to all who send a list of officers to the above address BEFORE THE SUPPLY IS EXHAUSTED. Rush in your list and be the first society to begin working the chart. This is the first chart of this kind we have ever had and I am sure you will be proud of it.

Gibsonville Attends Rally.

The society of Gibsonville was largely represented in a mass meeting and banquet of the Eastern Guilford Christian Endeavor Union, held last Tuesday night at Whitsett. There were two hundred young people in this meeting, which was addressed by Lawrence Little, president of our Board of Young People's Work, Rev. G. H. Hendry, the live pastor of the Gibsonville Fountain Place charge attended the meeting with his Endeavorers and Mrs. and Miss Hendry. The young folks came over to Whitsett in a truck and had a thoroughly enjoyable time. One of the features of the meeting was the male quartet of the Gibsonville Society, which rendered several very enjoyable numbers. This society is evidently doing big things and one can hardly wonder why when they see the enthusiasm and leadership of Brother Hendry. Would that our young people had more pastors who can find time for young people's activities!

Sexsmith Is Coming!

We have been able to secure for a week, Dr. E. A. Sexsmith, Executive Secretary of our Denominational Board of Young People's Work, for a series of Young People's meetings, March 21-28. We are hoping to arrange meetings in our central points and invite nearby churches to send delegations, so that his message may reach the largest number. Watch for further announcements.

Grace Endeavorers Boost Prayer Meeting.

The young people of Grace Church, Greensboro, have staged an interesting contest with the older folks for attendance at the mid-week prayer meeting. The contest is to run from January 27th until the opening of their new church. The Endeavorers and the their friends sit on one side of the house, while their elders sit on the other side. Careful count is made and general interest is being aroused. The society mailed out nearly a hundred postal cards last week asking the recipients to attend this service.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

The following article on "Discipline in the Sunday School" should be of general interest, particularly to teachers of boys:

"Stimulating and Maintaining Interest.

Children are attentive to what they are interested in. At a moving picture show hundreds of children will sit rapt and spell-bound watching the adventures of "Peter Pan," or of "Jackie Coogan at the Circus," or of "The Covered Wagon." In a Sunday school class there will be no problem of discipline if interest is aroused and maintained.

A teacher complained that some boys in her junior department class were unruly and disorderly. (Such complaints are rare in thoroughly graded Sunday schools). The friendly visitor discreetly proceeded to examine the teacher rather than the boys. It was found the lessons were beyond the comprehension of ten year old boys. They were concerning experiences natural only to adults. They had no meaning nor usefulness for fifth grade boys. This teacher's lesson material could not even stimulate interest, much less nourish and continue it.

A further examination revealed the lecture method of teaching was being used almost solely; for twenty minutes or more, the restless boys were expected to be quiet and receptive as they listened to "knowledge" the teacher imparted. Such terms as "Story-telling," "Handwork," the "Socialized Recitation," the "Project Method," "Service Activities," etc., were not in this teacher's vocabulary.

Her business, primarily, was to teach the Bible, to prepare her pupils for a church membership, to get their names on the church roll. She had never had the vision of teaching boys, growing, developing boys, or of adapting her materials and methods to the capacities, needs and interests of her pupils. Discipline was indeed a problem for her, a problem she must settle for herself by a new vision of her task and the use of appropriate materials and methods. Discipline means attention, attention depends on interest, and interest, results when the Sunday school is "pupil centered."—Clifford W. Collins in 'The International Journal of Religious Education."

Madison Brown.

Madison Brown was born May 20, 1863. In 1894 he was married to Bertha Burrows. It was early in life that he accepted Christ; and joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Shiloh, Randolph Charge; where his piety and interest in the church was such that he was elected Superintendent of the Sabbath school. In this capacity he served faithfully for twenty years. Had God permitted him to remain on earth, doubtless, he would have served many more years.

In him, all found a friend. Every good cause found him a supporter. The whole community has been blest by his life.

It was just before his death, while arranging for the Christmas tree and exercises that he manifested his unselfish spirit, when he said—"If any of you have anything to give me, I want you to give it to the Near East Relief."

God found in him such a faithful servant; and so ready for service above, that on December 14, 1925, after having conducted his Sabbath school as usual; and listened with unusual interest to the sermon, and having retired for the night in usual health, early in the morning, God called him to Heaven, very quickly.

He left a son—James Brown, of Winston-Salem; and a wife, at Julian, N. C., and many friends who deeply mourn his going.

The Sabbath school has not only lost a prompt, efficient, and interested leader; but the community has lost one of its best citizens; and the church one of its most faithful members.

FORCIBLY IMPRESSED.

A church in a certain rural district was sadly in need of repairs. The official board had called a meeting of the parishioners to see what could be done toward raising the necessary funds. One of the wealthiest and stingiest of the adherents of that church arose and said that he would give $5, and sat down. Just then a bit of plastering fell from the ceiling and hit him squarely upon the head. Whereupon he jumped up, looked confused and said: "I—er—I meant I'll give $50," then resumed his seat again. After a brief silence a voice was heard to say: "O Lord, hit him again!"

AWARDING THE TWO JAPANESE BANNERS.

It is useless to enumerate the difficulties encountered this year in seeking to secure the necessary data on which to award the two beautiful embroidered Japanese banners to the two Sunday schools entitled to receive them, and the delay has been greatly regretted.

The banners were to be awarded as an expression of appreciation of the cordial cooperation in the plans of the Union Board in securing the largest possible returns from the Children's Day Service.

The blue velvet banner was to be awarded to the Sunday school that made the largest offering on Children's Day, and the red silk one was to be awarded to the Sunday school that made the largest offering in proportion to membership.

The blue banner has been awarded to the Sunday school of the West Baltimore Church, Baltimore, Md., and the red banner to the Drawbridge Sunday school of the Dorchester charge of the Maryland Conference.

The West Baltimore Sunday school contributed seven hundred dollars and the Drawbridge Sunday school contributed more than three dollars per member.

The banners will be held by these two Sunday schools for one year, and will be awarded again, based on the Children's Day offering of 1926, and upon the same conditions as heretofore announced, and will thereafter be awarded annually, and will not become the property of any of our Sunday schools.

It is indeed commendable that a Sunday school out in the country, and connected with a circuit that has had a struggle of late years, should have become so much interested in the great foreign missionary work of our church and should have succeeded in making this fine record.

It certainly speaks well for the leadership of the school, and indicates hearty cooperation of the officers, teachers and scholars, for only by union of effort could such a result be achieved. The other two schools made splendid offerings, but have larger memberships.

The West Baltimore school has on several occasions been awarded a Japanese banner in recognition of their excellent offerings, but to those who understand the conditions which environ that church today, their large offering is an expression of loyalty interest and liberality which is deserving of much praise. To me, having been reared in that Sunday school, their achievement is very gratifying indeed.

Acknowledgment From Japan.

Rev. S. Wada, acknowledging the receipt of the letter of sympathy from the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration, sent on learning of the death of his estimable wife, wrote the following which will be of interest to our people generally. He is the efficient head of our Blind School in Tokyo and ranks with the ministers of the Empire, having been signally honored by the Emperor for his work in behalf of others.

"I feel very, very thankful for your profound sympathy to me. I am glad to think Mrs. Wada was called to her heavenly home to be with our dear Savior in Father's presence for which she had been hoping with her whole heart. She was a good wife to me, and a good mother to our seven children, and was seventy-three years old when she left here. She was living with me for fifty-six years so that I feel somewhat lonely, although I am in good health, and having very happy days in serving our dear Master.

Very sincerely yours. S. Wada.'

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 14.

Jesus The Good Shepherd.

Lesson Text: John 10:1-5, 11-16.

Golden Text: John 10:11.

The Central Truth: Jesus is the God Shepherd who laid down His life on the cross that the lost sheep might be saved from sin, and death, and hell.

Scriptural Points.

1. Jesus Christ is the way, the truth, and the life of redemption, and all who seek to climb to glory some other way are thieves and robbers in the superlative degree. These "some other ways" are empty profession, vain ritualism, mock morality, faithless good works, and baseless presumption.

2. Jesus is both the door and the shepherd, both the way and the life, and both Savior and Lord.

3. "To him the porter openeth." The Holy Spirit, by His convicting power, opens the door of the heart for the oncoming of the king.

4. "And the sheep hear his voice." The real followers of Christ heed with much joy His voice calling them from sin to righteousness, to service, and to glory.

5. "He calleth his own sheep by name." He not only knows the names of His followers but he knows their every weakness, thought, and aspiration. "For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether." "But the very hairs of your head are all numbered." Matt. 10:30.

6. "And leadeth them out" of temptation, trial, and failure; and He leads them into pastures of love, joy, peace and all to the fountain of living waters:

7. "He goeth before them." Jesus has led the way of humble living, of holy service, of patient suffering, of triumphant dying, and of glorious ascension. And He is still leading the way.

8. "Strangers" are the antichrists, false teachers and morernistic will-o-the-wisps whom the devil has set forth to deceive the unwary. But the true child of God will not be caught in their nets.

9. "The good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." Jesus Christ loved man so much that He gave up His life on the cross that man might have eternal life through faith in His name. Jesus did not die under the superior power of enemies, nor under the pressure of circumstance, but He willingly laid down this life that he might take it again at His own resurrection.

10. "The wolf" represents the devil and all the powers of darkness. As a roaring lion he goes about to destroy, if possible, the elect of God. At times he appears as an angel of light to deceive those whom God has called by His grace. "Ye are not ignorant of his devices," for the sacred Book is full of warnings against them.

11. "The Hireling" represents a commercialized ministry, those who care more for salaries, reputations, and other emoluments than they do for the lost souls of men. They feast upon the sheep instead of feeding them.

12. "And am known of mine." To know

Jesus and thereby share the fulness of His redemption is the supreme attainment of this life. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee. the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John 17:13.

13. "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold." Jesus doubtless refers to the millions of Gentile believers, who are separate from the fold of the chosen people —the Jews.

14. "And there shall be one fold (or flock). and one shepherd." All believers, Jews and Gentiles, all sets and shades of belief, shall compose one universal church. Unification of all believers is the plan of the gospel, the process of the spirit, and the destined glory of our Christ.

Practical Points.

that all needs will be met. "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. Ps. 23:11. "But my God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus." Phil. 4:19.

2. The Good Shepherd leads the way to the streams of living waters. "He leadeth me beside the still waters." Ps. 23:2. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." John 7:37.

3. The Good Shepherd imparts righteousness to all hungering and thirsting souls. "He restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." Ps. 23:3. "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Rom. 10:4.

4. The presence of the Good Shepherd makes us fearless and unafraid. "Yea, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." Ps. 23:4. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 John 4:18.

5. And the Good Shepherd provides a perpetual feast. "Thou prepareth a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over." Ps. 23:5. "Behold I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3:20.—Word of Life.

WILL THE MILLENNIUM BE A FAILURE?

No one but God knows how exceedingly sinful sin is. Perhaps the most startling evidence of the sinner's natural incorrigibility will be seen in the failure of the Millennium. Many people think that the Millennium, which will be ushered in by our Lord's return to this earth, will be the end of sinning and trouble. Far from it, says God's Word. It is true that, under the righteous reign of Christ, Eden conditions will be restored, and righteousness will be in control of the whole earth. Marvelous blessings will follow, described in glowing terms in the prophecies of the Old Testament and the New. Satan the will be bound and shut up, unable to deceive the nations as he has been doing since Adam's fall. Christ, not Satan, will be, then, the God of this world. But there will be a last test of the heart of the natural man, and that test will end in complete failure, as always before. At the end of the Millennium Satan will be permitted to tempt men again. As he makes his last appeal to men, the number of those who will follow him, in rejection of Christ, "is as the sand of the sea" (Rev. 20:8). Then will follow the final conflict between Satan and his followers, and God. It will end in Satan's last defeat, and his being cast into the lake of fire, to be followed there by all who have followed him instead of Christ. The Millennium will end in failure, so far as the natural man is concerned, in spite of the personal presence of Christ, and a perfect environment, here on this earth for a thousand years. As we face these terrible facts, we may well exclaim with the apostle, as we think of man, "Where is boasting then? It is excluded." But what a God and Saviour we have, who can save even such men, when they abandon their own righteousness and accept God's righteousness as a free gift, by faith in Christ. —Sunday School Times.

TILL HE COME.

By Bishop Edward H. Bickersteth, 1862.

Till He come! O let the words
Linger on the trembling chords;
Let the little while between
In their golden light be seen;
Let us think how heaven and home
Lie beyond that "Till He Come."
When the weary ones we love
Enter on their rest above,
Seems the earth so poor and vast,
All our life-joy overcast?
Hush, be every murmur dumb:
It is only till He come.
Clouds and conflicts round us press.
Would we have one sorrow less?
All the sharpness of the cross,
All that tells the world is loss,
Death and darkness, and the tomb,
Only whisper "Till He Come."
See, the feast of love is spread,
Drink the wine, and break the bread:
Sweet memorials,—till the Lord
Call us round His heavenly board:
Some from earth, from glory some,
Severed only till He come.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

I will leave my various and Sunday duties undone this morning, while I answer some questions that have come to me from hundreds of miles away.

Why is it more harm for a girl to smoke than a boy? Surely, little girl, you must have forgotten that women have ruled the world ever since Cain was a baby. You thought that man was the head of the family? He is: but while he is supporting his family in one place the mother is training the babies to be whatever they are when they are grown. If one goes into any community and finds Godless, lawless girls, they will surely find the same kind of boys. I don't think that no one can say that any form of using tobacco is harmless, but a noted physician has said "the girl that smokes cigarettes will be a perfect physical wreck by the time she is thirty years old. There can be nothing more important than the robust health of the mothers of future generations. It can be nothing but a black crime for anyone to do anything to impair the health of the parents of the future. We often hear men say, "Let the girls smoke if they want to," but you will find that class of men want the women to be as bad as they are, which, they think will be a good excuse for their own evil habits. Now, young Ladies, it is your privilege, and bounden duty to use every power of your mind, and soul, and strength to keep your purity and cleanliness so that every young man with whom you come in contact may gain strength from you to fight evil habits. You cannot do this and smoke or use tobacco in any form.

Young men in this section cannot hold a position that requires mental, and moral strength if they smoke cigarette. It is considered much worse than other makes of using tobacco, because the paper prepared for them is first saturated with some kind of a solution that makes it almost impossible to stop smoking after using them.

Another lady asked me to tell her how to go about training her precious little boy. The first requisite is to be sure you are following divine guidance in your own life, seven days in the week. It is impossible to accomplish anything good on this earth without power from on high which is so freely offered to every one. Don't do or say anything you would not be willing for him to do, or say, and above everything in life teach him to obey you because he loves you instead of being afraid of you.

My dear friend find some other way to correct an evil habit besides beating the little ones. We often hear people quoting scripture to prove that children must be whipped for every infraction of parental law, but they would speedily change their views if our divine Master should inflict that kind of punishment on us. Don't let him contract bad habits because he is too young to understand what trouble they will bring later in life.

Our Savior requires us to obey Him because we love Him—not because we are afraid of the punishment that follows evil doing.

It will take a lot of your time and patience but is is the only investment you can make that never failed to pay a thousand fold.

Ruth Fletcher.

—A man from Georgia spent the summer in the mountains, and met an old fellow who when he found out that his friend was from Georgia, said: "An' you come frum Georgy? Mebby you knowed Bill Johnson, my wife's first cousin. He's traveled all over Georgy peddlin' sewing machines. He's been everywhures. He's been away down to that place that sticks out in the Atlantic Ocben!"

"Do you mean Florida?" the stranger asked.

"Yeah, that's hit—Floridy. I just couldn't think uv the name uv that town!"—Forward.

A COMMENDATION OF ARTICLE BY S. R. H.

Some time ago I read an article, printed in the "Herald," by "S. R. H." in which reference was made to a resolution in the minutes found on page 92—"Resolution no. 3 "on teaching in schools," I believe it is. I trust that the article referred to above has been read by every person in our grand old State as well as by our own church folk. Surely this wonderful deliverance ought to be read and reread by every man, woman, and child throughout the land. It is a complete explanation of some of the hard problems that have been agitating the minds of a great many people from time to time for centuries. I verily hope that we will not soon, if ever, forget those illuminating and uplifting thoughts so ably presented by our good friend and brother.

It has been my honest conviction for a long time, that when a brother or sister contributes a real good article to the church paper, or any paper, that such article should not only be read but that we, the beneficiaries, should in some way show our appreciation. For this reason I am now writing this article.

Selah.

With reference to what our aforesaid brother wrote concerning taxation he asks the question "what taxation unites man by blood to the lower animals?" I am sorry I am unable to say definitely, just what sort of tax this can possibly be: but in order to assist my friend in finding a solution to this very unusual inquiry, would suggest, that in all probability, this is a tax that some of our friends who hold to the theory of evolution have levied upon their own minds, and have not, as yet, been able to make payment: hence the desire to tax the pocketbooks of others in order to meet their self-imposed obligations. Selah.

So endeth the first lesson.

Now concerning the doctrinal matters presented by our very worthy friend and brother will say that what he has to say about these things is certainly of very great importance. These are the things that have been "bones of contention" among some of the great theologians for many centuries. I am glad that in so far as I am concerned these questions will cease to give any further trouble, for since reading this exceedingly voluminous and unaswerable argument as touching these troublesome questions I for one must say farewell to all these intricate problems which have hitherto associated themselves with these great doctrines, I am glad I have lived to see the day when some great mind has come upon the stage of action and by one grand sweep with his versatile pen has knocked into eternal oblivion these perplexing things that have caused divisions among the brethren and sisters for Lo! these years. Now that the job has been completed surely, oh surely the millennium will be here in a few days. Me thinks it would be a good time to start church union again: why not? after reading this very plain explanation of "Total depravity." "Final perseverance of the saints," "Popes and bulls." Is it conceivable that any reasonable mind after reading this splendid contribution on the aforesaid doctrines can ever again entertain a shadow of a doubt as to their true meaning? Surely not—surely not. Selah.

Thus endeth the second lesson.

Tobe Shepherd.

GETTING ALONG NICELY!

Beatrice M. Parker.

"I think you are getting along nicely," said Aunt Emma with a smile.

"Well, we were," replied Beth, "but now we haven't anything at all to do and it is raining so we cannot go outdoors to play."

"We might get along nicely," said Bob with a laugh, "if we were ducks and could shed water from our backs and swim!"

"Speaking of getting along nicely," and Aunt Emma laid down her sewing as the children came up to her chair, "I wonder what other ways we may find of getting along nicely in this world. See if you can tell!"

The children were thinking. Then Ruth said, "Well, we all of us walk here in our family except when we go out in the auto, but autos are not fair, are they?"

"No," replied Aunt Emma with a laugh, and a shake of her head. "I mean natural ways of getting along. Yes, we walk and ducks swim and birds fly, but how many more ways are there, can you think?"

"About a dozen, I guess," said Charley, "but I'm not sure I can think of them all. A worm crawls and frog jumps—that makes five."

"Not all worms crawl," exclaimed Ruth. "for don't you remember the one that got on Beth while we were picking blueberries one day?"

"Huh!" and Beth made up a little face as she thought of the inchworm that Aunt Emma had to take off her coat. "Such things ought not to get along nicely at all in this world, they are too scary for me!"

"That is surely another way of getting along," and Aunt Emma laughed. "Sometimes we call them measuring worms, for they measure off just so far at each advance as they move along."

"Jelly-fish!" exclaimed Bob. "I remember the one that stung me a year ago down at the beach. That is another way of getting along, isn't it?"

"Yes, the jelly-fish sort of 'swimswiggly,'" said Ruth, and they all laughed at this new term. "But in its way it stings good and hard!"

"Are there any other sea creatures that get along nicely in their own peculiar way?" asked Aunt Emma. "Now think hard. I have in mind a poem that was written by a famous poet."

"The chambered nautilus." Beth's reply was quickly given. "That shell-fish has a sail and gets along very nicely indeed, so the books say."

"Good, and that makes seven so far." Charles was anxious to get the dozen he guessed might be found. "How about combinations like the flying squirrels that jump, walk, run, and fly?"

"Yes," and Aunt Emma nodded her head. "I don't know that it is actually flying, but that is another way of getting along and can be counted. Can you think of any more combinations?"

"Some spiders make balloons and fly away with the wind," suggested Ruth, "but that might not be any more fair than using an auto."

"Surely it is," Bob replied generously. "Man has tools to make things like autos and planes, but the spider has to make a balloon from her own web. We'll count it, anyway. That makes nine. Who has the tenth?"

"Clams and oysters!" came Charley's quick response. "They move their shell's back and forth and shoot themselves along through the water."

"Are you sure they are both alike in their movements?" asked Aunt Emma. "For you know if they are not, we want to be able to count two instead of one."

Charley supposed they both moved the same way, but when he looked it up in one of Aunt Emma's books, he found that there are some clams which move by stretching out their long arms, attaching the ends to a rock, and pulling themselves along; so the count was two more, making eleven in all.

"Only one more and we shall have a dozen!" Charley exclaimed as he read what he had found.

The twelfth was the monkey that uses his tail in swinging from place to place, and just after Beth had suggested this animal, Ruth spoke of the parrots that catch hold of things with their beaks; so they had a "baker's dozen," or thirteen.

If anybody thought that thirteen was an unlucky number, the thought did not have to be expressed. For immediately Aunt Emma named snails and bats and flying fishes, which brought the total to sixteen.

They did wish to get it up to twenty if they could, and how they did work and think! Seventeen came when Charley happened to see a book called "An Old Barnacle"—and of course the barnacle, with his attachment to the bottoms of ships, was added. This made Ruth think of the remora, a fish that attaches itself to the shell of a turtle and goes along from place to place without needing to swim—so there were only two more to think of.

At last the crab came into mind—the shell-fish which does not go ahead or backward but sidewise, and gets there so nicely that it takes a lot of skill to catch him in deep water. So only one more remained to find, and when Aunt Emma's fur-trimmed hat, which she had out to see that no moths had got into the box, caught Beth's eye, she exclaimed, "The seals! They both swim and flap along, in water and on land!"

"Yes, that is twenty, and plenty!" exclaimed Aunt Emma. "And now I think we have been able to get along very nicely indeed. For it is after five o'clock and I must get supper ready for some hungry little people!"—Zion's Herald.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Efland, Orange Charge.—Notwithstanding the rainy weather we had a very good crowd our for service last Sunday. The Lord's supper was administered by Brother Williams. A goodly number partook.

There are a good many on the sick list We wish for all these a speedy recovery.

Our Sunday school is still on the go. We had 29 present last Sunday which was good for a rainy day. We have had Sunday school every Sunday in January. You'll agree there have been some rough ones. May God's blessing be upon all of our church work and may there be lasting good accomplished.

Mrs. E. S. Taylor, Reporter.

Vance Ct., Notice.

There will be preaching at Harris Chapel the second Sunday at 11: A. M., Spring Valley 2:30 P. M., Flat Rock 7:30 P. M.

Superintendents will please announce this in Sunday school.

M. P. Chambliss, Pastor.

Porter.—Some one has said Porter's reporter must be gone into winter quarters, or letting other things take his time. I am sure they have guessed wrong, as we have been to church every Sunday this year. It is true we haven't reported lately; as we have been without a preacher since conference we feel that we have not done anything to report. I think our Sunday school is doing fine with the rough weather and bad roads. We had a very pretty Christmas tree which everyone enjoyed very much. We are becoming very much discouraged without a preacher. I think there should be some arrangements made to give us one service a month any way. We are hoping to take our Sunday school on a picnic to the Children's Home some time this spring, or Summer. No sickness to report that we know of. With best wishes. Reporter.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—Although we haven't been heard from in some time this is no evidence that we haven't been doing anything. Our pastor has been doing his part faithfully. He has been giving us splendid sermons. We have all been standing by him in all he has undertaken to do. Our finances are well up, and right here I think it due our people that something be said in regard to our having no place on the list as having paid anything on the General Conference Budget since we've been holding a place near the top for several years and this conference year we raised $50 for this cause at our Christmas service which was sent to the conference Treasurer on December 21st. This failed to be sent in to the bank to be cashed, for ten days, and on the day it reached here our banks doors were closed, and it was not cashed. We feel it is due our people to make this statement, as one might think from the paper that we were turning a deaf ear to the call of the G. C. B. All our organizations are doing good work. Our Ladies' Aid is always one of the most interesting meetings we have. Sunday school has been having splendid attendance through the winter months. Oor C. E. Society is holding its meetings in the homes of the people now during the cold weather. We are having real good attendance and the meetings are interesting. Today being fifth Sunday a union service between our two Methodist churches was held in our church with Rev. Mr. Boon, the M. E. Pastor doing the preaching.

The death angel has visited our ranks again, this time claiming the soul of Mrs. Henry Weaver. She had been in bad health for several months. She leaves a husband, and eight children, four sons and four daughters, besides an old blind mother, who had made her home with her for so long. It is particularly sad for the old mother.

We have been missing Mrs. J. Henry Cutchin from our services for some time. She recently underwent an operation at Park View Hospital, Rocky Mount, and is now getting on much better, we hope she will soon be able to be back at her post of duty.

Another one of our old standbys, Miss Wheless, is confined to her bed with a sprained back.

We are indeed glad to add to our Sunday school and Ladies' Aid Society, also W. F. M. S., Mrs. Harrold Braswell, who was one of the Christmas brides. We are sure she will be a valuable worker in the church work Being one of our high school teachers for three years, we had already learned to love her, before she became a member of our family.

Our town, community and our churches have been hard hit by the bank failure and we don't know what it may mean with regard to our finances, but some how we believe if we put our trust in God, "He'll carry us through." He has promised it and it's up to us to put Him to the test.

We were mighty glad to have with us today, Spencer Cutchin, who is home from High Point College for a few days.

Wishing for our church a successful year's work in our Master's vineyard.

Mamie Johnston,Reporter.

Willey.

Clarence Lee Willey, the son of Charles Lee and Lelia Willey, departed this life on January 19, 1926. He was 17 years old the 26th of last November, which was Thanksgiving day.

Clarence was seriously hurt in an automobile wreck on January the 18th and died the next day in the hospital at Rocky Mount.

He professed religion and joined the church at Eden in August, 1924, and has lived a consistent christian life since. He was a steady, quiet, promising young man, and since his death it has been said by those who knew him best that he was a good boy.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the presence of a large crowd of friends and relatives, after which the body was laid to rest in the family cemetery near the Willey home beneath a very large mound of flowers.

He will be greatly missed in the church and Sunday school, and community, and most of all in the home.

His father preceded him to the grave just seven years, both having passed away on the same day of the month and year. One sister died in 1923.

He is survived by his mother, two sisters, and two brothers, and his grand parents Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Willey, Sr. and Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Neville.

We would commend the bereaved family to the Heavenly Father who is able to comfort and help in the time of trouble.

A dear one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled. G. L. Spencer.

Brown.

Malonie Elizabeth Brown, daughter of David and Louida Smith, and devoted wife of Sidney A. Brown, was born February 13, 1869. She departed this life November 4, 1925. Her age is 56 years, eight months, and 21 days.

The parents of Sister Brown lived in Guilford county, in the Mt. Pleasant community. It was there that she was born and where her early years were spent. In her girl-hood she was sought and won in marriage by her surviving husband, Brother Sidney A. Brown. After her marraige, which occurred on the 21st day of March, 1886, she and her husband established their home in Burlington, and the remainder of her earthly life was spent here.

This union was blessed with eight children, four sons and as many daughters. Two sons and one daughter and her father and two sisters, preceded her in death. Besides her husband, she is survived by two daughters—Mrs. H. L. Kidd, and Mrs. Ada Diamond—and by three sons, Lester, Ernest, and Erwin. Her mother is also living, and eight brothers—Cary, Albert, Sidney, Cleveland, William, Cyrus, and Ernest.

To all these, who mourn the passing of a loved one, our hearts are tender in sympathy. In their sorrow there is much to comfort them. Sister Brown was a good woman—devoted to her husband, and to her children; kind and obliging to her neighbors; and true to her Christ. For a long time she was a member of the First Methodist Protestantant Church, but in her latter years affliction kept her from attending the services. She was always glad for her pastor to visit her, and she never failed to enter heartily into the worship that marked the close of such visits. The few days immediately preceding her death were attended with much suffering. She longed to be released, and gave comforting assurance of her readiness for that good event, when it pleased God to grant it. Her deliverence came on the fourth of last November, when quietly and peacefully she passed into the great beyond.

The funeral service was held in the home, conducted by the writer, and attended by a large company of sympathizing friends and relatives. Interment followed in Pineview cemetery. Beneath the flowers that marked her grave we deposited the mortal form of a Christian woman.

We commend her loved ones to the God that she served, and pray that in his good time the family may be reunited where sepations do not come. S. W. Taylor.

Shiloh S. S. Conley Spring Ct.—Sunday school 10:30. W. S. Miller, Superintendent present. Bible Class 1, L. E. Setser, teacher; Bible Class 2, Rev. J. E. Austin T. Junior quarterly class; Mrs. E. M. Summ, teacher Card class; Mrs. W. S. Miller, teacher; Sec. T. S. Setser; organist, Miss Elvia Austin; no. present, 34; collection, 98 cts; no. chapters read past week, 406.

Owing to sickness Rev. J. R. Girtner could not fill his appointment. Rev. Roy Carlette came to deliver a message for us, he preached an interesting sermon. Rev. J. E. Austin preached Sunday night. Reporter.

Mitchells' Grove, Guilford Ct.—As I have been elected reporter for this year, I'm glad indeed to report that our church is very much alive. We have ninety on roll in the Sunday school and an attendance of eighty-one last Sunday.

Our new pastor, Mr. O. C. Loy, filled his appointment last Sunday evening and preached a wonderful sermon, his subject being, "Jesus the light of the world" after which our newly organized Gospel team held a very interesting and impressive service.

About two weeks ago the Stephens Evangelistic Club, of High Point, held a two weeks meeting here with Mr. Jack Burris as leader which has accomplished much good throughout the community. There were more than twenty conversions. Twelve new members were received into the church Sunday evening.

The young men and boys of the church and community have organized a Gospel team since the meeting and are doing much good. They hold services every Sunday evening.

The ladies hold a prayer service every Wednesday evening and have a good attendance.

We hope to do more good this year than ever before.

Sorry to report that Miss Phineta Kersey is sick. Also Mr. Raye Frazier, and Miss Flora Bowman. We hope they will soon be out again.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Nina Jones.

Fairfield, Guilford Circuit.—Since we made our last report there has been a little decline in our attendance. Last Sunday morning there were only 43 present. Let us hope that we will have an increase in attendance next Sunday morning and everybody work to that end.

Last third Sunday afternoon our regular pastor was not able to fill his appointment his substitute, Brother Boyd, brought to us many things that if we would carry home with us would throw a great light over the community in which we live. His text was taken from Psalms "Rejoice evermore." From this text it was brought to our minds that we could rejoice even when wordly things were pressing us hard. If each one could forget what great things he had done or tried to do there would be happiness all the while.

With best wishes to the Herald. Reporter.

Weaverville Charge, Clarks Chapel.—It has been some time since we reported but we are still doing business for the Master. Our Sunday school is holding up very well considering the bad roads and rough weather, there being good attendance yesterday. Our people seem to be very deeply interested in the school.

The Christian Endeavor Society is doing nicely, too. Every one seems to enjoy it very much. Our pastor has found it convenient to attend every service. We enjoy his presence and the helpful talks he gives on the topics. Everyone is taking great interest.

Last Sunday, being preaching day, we had our pastor, Rev. J. D. Cranford, with us. He preached a very wonderful and inspiring sermon.

We consider this one of the most spiritual meetings we have had this year, and as the weather opens up and we increase in attendance we hope these spiritual meetings will come more often.

We are looking forward for great and noble things this year. It seems that our people as a whole have a fine spirit for cooperation and work, and may we ask the Herald and all its many readers to remember us in their prayers.

We are praying that this will be the best year in the history of the M. P. Church, not only for us, but for all the churches in the conference. This we can do if every fellow will put his shoulder to the wheel and do his part. Reporter.

Pine Bluff.—In the near future the Christian Endeavor Society will give a pageant "The Royal Way." It promises to be quite a success and will contain some good lessons for every one. A delegation will go from here January 31 to Midland for the purpose of organizing a Senior Society there. The program of the evening will be under the direction of L. E. Mabry.

The writer was present at the funeral of Brother J. M. Voncannon, of Seagrove. His death was not at all unexpected. He had been sick for several months with poisoned blood, finally developing into pneumonia. He realized his time to die had come and told those who administered to his physical needs that all was well with him. He was a man whom every one loved and was always ready to say a word of encouragement to any one in trouble. He is survived by an invalid wife, three sons, five daughters and a host of other friends. Reporter.

A Good Woman Gone.

Rachel Christine Bevil, wife of Brother M. J. Bevil, was born February 18, 1847, departed this life December 23, 1925.

In early life she professed faith in Christ and united with Fair Grove Methodist Protestant Church to which she was faithful and loyal until she was called home.

For a long time her hearing was dull so that she could not understand much that was said, but still she loved the house of God and honored it with her presence when able to attend.

Before the end came, she suffered intensely, but without murmuring and in perfect submission. She was conscious of the approaching end and expressed her complete readiness to go.

A dear old mother in Israel is gone home. The church will miss her, and the community, but most of all the aged husband and the children who were so devoted to her in her last illness. But while their loss is great her gain is exceedingly great. The following lines fittingly expresses the hearts' grief of the children.

"Dear mother, our grief for thee is more than we can tell; but we know that all with thee is well. Thy hands are silently folded across thy peaceful breast, and thou art gone to the home of thy eternal rest."

The funeral was conducted by the writer and her body was laid to rest at Fair Grove.

The sympathy of their many friends go out for the bereaved family. W. D. Reed.

Liberty, Siler City Charge.—Our pastor, Mr. Gibbs, filled his appointment the fourth Sunday. He gave us an interesting and helpful sermon on the theme "The Upward and Onward Look."

Two young men, students of Elon College, Messrs. E. E. Kipha and Paul McNeil, sang a duet: "I'll Live for Jesus." These young men helped in Christian Endeavor and evening service also. We hope they may come again.

The Christian Endeavor Society was delightfully entertained recently by Mrs. Jno. W. Curtis at her home in South Liberty. A most pleasant evening was enjoyed and plans were made to hold prayer meeting once a week.

The Philathea class recently gave a miscellaneous shower to one of its members, Miss Peace Staley, a well known and successful teacher of Randolph County.

A singing was held in our graded school auditorium the 5th Sunday. It was largely attended.

We are glad to have Mr. and Mrs. George Parker worship with us. Reporter.

Caroleen Church.—Caroleen Chsistian Endeavor meets every Saturday night at 7:30 with Brother G. W. Wilson President, Sister Jennie Radford, Superintendent, Sister Elsie Grant, Secretary. The Society met on Saturday night, January 30, with 34 members present,, seven visitors and collection, $1.15.

Brother Wilson and pastor gave some very interesting thoughts on the lesson. On the first Sunday in January our C. E. Society met at Caroleen Church and went over to Brother Englan, who has been very sick with T. B. and held a prayer service and had the greatest pleasure of seeing him saved. May the Lord lead him. This society is doing a great work in the church.

With best wishes to the Herald.

Connie Helms, Jennie Radford.

Must Have Been A Scotchman.—Rev. R. R. Michaux used to tell of a man who when asked in a revival meeting, "Do you love the Lord?" replied:

"Wall, I reckon I ain't got anything agin Him."

COLORS FOR WOMEN.

Women are often tempted to wear colors suited to their type because of the popularity of those colors.

We suggest these combinations for various types:

1. Black or dark-brown hair, brown, gray or blue eyes can usually wear blue of all shades, cream, ivory, golden and tan in browns, dark-red, blue-gray, and other shades of gray and mustard and amber yellow.

2. Olive skin, brown or black hair, blue or gray eyes: black, only when worn with cream collar or touch of color; chestnut and golden brown, navy blue, warm shades of gray, crimson, old rose.

3. Dark sallow type. She must wear the black and dull shades with touches of bright color trimming, as rose, flame, orange.

4. Auburn hair with blue or brown eyes wears black, especially in thin materials, rich shades of brown, dull and dark greens, violet, pearl and dove gray; navy, peacock or gray blue.

5. Sallow blondes must be careful in choosing their colors, but they can wear soft gray combined with rich tones, as rose or burnt orange; dark red, navy blue, creamy white, blue.

6. Black hair, brown eyes and dark skin wears golden brown, black with touches of color, dark green, pale or dark blue, clear red or crimson, coral, pale or rose, any yellow.

7. The golden-haired girl with fair skin and blue eyes wears black, white, very dark brown, all shades of blue, delicate yellow, blue pink or old rose, warm shades of gray and teal green.

8. The elderly woman with gray hair should choose for her colors black, if trimmed in color, creamy white, dark blue and violet.

The fleshy figure ought to wear "retiring" colors, as blue greens, blue, brown, gray and black, while thin figures need the "advancing" colors, red yellow, orange, rose and light blues to increase the size.—Selected.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Sykes.

Mrs. John A. Sykes of near Mebane was born February 22, 1861, and died January 9, 1926; was married April 12, 1883. She joined the church in early life, the latter part of her life was a member of Hebron Church. Another of our number has passed away. Her health was such that she didn't get to church often, but she will be missed.

Funeral services were conducted from the family residence Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock by her pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, assisted by Rev. J. S. Garner, of the Presbyterian Church, of Mebane.

Interment was in the cemetery at Hebron.

Surviving are her husband, one daughter, Mrs. Wm. Edmond Pratt, of Sumter, S. C., eight sons, Charles Lee, of Asheville, Wm. J., Julian C., Broadie B. and Ollie W., of Mebane; W. Eugene, of Weston, W. Va., John E., of Durham, and Herman W., of Waverly, Va; one brother W. A. Johnson, of Burlington also survives.

Mrs. Sykes had been in declining health for some time, but developed pneumonia, was sick only a short time when death relieved her of her suffering.

Thus passes a mother and neighbor, who will be greatly missed. When her large family go home mother's chair will be empty, her voice is stilled, her great care for her family is over. O how sad was the parting, but this is what comes to us all sooner or later. The greatest thing in life is to prepare for death, for we know not when it cometh.

She had many friends as was shown by the beautiful floral offering, her grave being a mound of beautiful flowers.

May her husband and children so live that they may meet wife and mother on the other shore, where there will be no more partings.

Mrs. F. W. Nelson, Reporter.

Herman Hux.

Death came and took one of the most precious souls away from us.

Herman was born August 11, 1908. He was the adopted son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hux. He had been suffering for several months, but was not confined to his bed until just one day before he died.

He became a member of the M. E. Church in 1923 and lived a beautiful Christian life. He was loved by every one who knew him. Those who knew him best, loved him most.

Everything that loving hands and medical remedies could do was done but God saw best to take him.

He said during his last hours: "I want to get straightened out and go to rest." We can feel no other than satisfied about his soul.

He leaves to mourn their loss one sister, three brothers and his adopted parents and one adopted sister.

He was quietly laid to rest in a cemetery near his home by Rev. C. T. Rogers.

His Friend.

McCain.

G. Calvin McCain, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh T. McCain, was born March 7, 1882, and died in the Hospital at High Point on January 19, 1926. On the evening of the 18th he in company with some of his people, and neighbors started to High Point, after completing his day's work, and just this side of High Point he stepped on the running board of the car, and in some way fell on the hard surface road. The people that were with him hurried him to the Hospital, but so sad, he did not live many hours. His death came as the poet said,—

No time for a last farewell,
No time for the shock of fear,
Scarcely a moment's halt on the shore,
With the guide and the boatman near—
Dear brother, how surprised you were to go,
With little to suffer, little to know.
Only a moment of dark,
A dream of the fleeting night,
And then the beautiful break of day
And the quiet peace of light;
And you found yourself where you longed to stand,
In the repose of the fatherland.

No doubt his soul is a light to guide some one else to the other shore.

On May 17, 1911, he was united in marriage to Annie Eliza Redding. To this union God gave four children, who still survive. He also has two brothers living, hosts of friends, and relatives, to mourn his departure. He professed faith in Christ in early manhood, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church at Charlotte, lived a consistent member to the time of his death. His church will miss him. He was one of the Sunday school's faithful members. But it is in his home where he will be missed the most. His wife has lost a kind and loving husband, and the dear little children such a tender, loving father. Our sympathy goes out for all the bereaved ones. May God's richest blessings rest upon all.

On the 20th of January, his funeral was held at Charlotte Church, by the writer. The flower bearers were C. L. Cranford, Carl Page, D. F. Ridge, Casper Cox, and W. J. Moore. The pall bearers were Elias Robins, C. M. Nance, J. F. Berkhead, J. E. Hill, C. N. Moody, and T. J. Foster. The large attendance and many beautiful flowers spoke of the high esteem in which Brother McCain was held.

C. H. Hill. Pastor.

Sykes.

On Sunday January 5th at 10:25 A. M. the death angel entered the home of Jasper J. Sykes, and bore his gentle spirit into the life triumphant.

Mr. Sykes was a very kind and affectionate father, a good citizen and faithful to his church; always attending church services and also Sunday school as long as his health would permit.

He attained the ripe old age of near 82 years.

Mr. Sykes had been in declining health for some time; although not serious until Tuesday before death came on Saturday. He will be sadly missed in the home, church and community.

The funeral was conducted Sunday afternoon at Chestnut Ridge by his pastor, Rev.

B. M. Williams. Mr. Sykes had been a member of this church for over 50 years. He was laid to rest in he church cemetery beside his life companion who passed over some 25 years ago.

The floral tribute was both profuse and beautiful. His grandchildren were flower bearers.

He leaves several grandchildren; also three children, namely: Mrs. J. M. Mennis and Messrs Chester A. and Carl E. Sykes. One son preceded him to the glory world.

Maggie Sykes.

In Memory Of Little Fred Julian Free.

On Christmas morning, just as day began to dawn, then it was that God called little Fred Julian Free to join the angel band.

Fred was a bright, attractive child of 22 months old and was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Garland Free.

Funeral service was held Saturday afternoon at Cedar Falls M. P. Church conducted by Rev. C. H. Hill, pastor, and Rev. G. A. Laughlin. Then the little body was laid to rest in Cedar Falls cemetery. Farewell, Darling; thou hast left us and our hearts are sad and lonely, but we know that thou art dwelling with the Savior and His own, tho we miss thee here, our Darling. There's no one that can fill his place; we cannot hear that sweet little voice, nor the patter of his little feet, nor the touch of the hand, but this sweet thought shall linger with us and shall make our pathway bright: we shall meet thee in that City where the Savior is our light. Or how sweet the thought! we'll meet thee over on the other shore where with angels we shall greet thee and shall dwell for evermore.

Written by His Grandmother,

Mrs. M. H. Free.

Weaver.

Mrs. Hery Weaver was born December 1 1861, and quietly passed from the life January 19, 1926. Mrs. Weaver before her marraige was Miss Willie Porter, the daughter of Mrs. Margaret Porter, who still lives and is the oldest member of the Whitakers' Methodist Protestant Church. In early life Mrs. Weaver united with the Methodist Protestant Church and remained in our fellowship until her death. Several months before her death she was not at all well and prior to her illness she was often kept from church on account of her aged, invalid mother. The writer was her pastor more than two years and frequently visited the home. Mrs. Weaver impressed one as being a quiet, gentle, good woman. Surely she will be missed by those who knew her but her absense will be more intensely felt in the home.

On September 5, 1878, she became the bride of Mr. Henry Weaver and to this union there were born eight children; all survive the death of their beloved mother. The children are: Mr. Ben Weaver, of Scotland Neck, N. C., Mrs. Bullock, of Tarboro N. C., Mrs. Vick, of Enfield, N. C., Mrs. Martin; Mr. Robert Weaver; Mr. Otis Weaver; Mr. William Weaver, of Whitakers, N. C. Mrs. Watkins, of Raleigh, N. C.

May the invalid mother, the husband and children, other loved ones and friends be greatly comforted in this trying experience by the presence of a sympathizing and loving heavenly Father who they constantly look to, lean upon and trust in Him, who gives a peace that passeth all understanding.

The burial service was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. R. C. Stubbs of Enfield, N. C., Rev. W. C. Proctor, of Rocky Mount, N. C., Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Scotland Neck, N. C.

Trivette,

Amos Wilson Trivette, son of Andrew and Almelia Trivette, was born in Iredell County, Eagle Mills township, on the 18th day of July, 1857, and died on January 18, 1926.

When he was eighteen years of age he professed faith in God and united with Wesley's Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church. About three years later he transferred his membership to Union Grove Methodist Protestant Church and remained a member of this church until his death.

On October 30, 1878, he was united in marriage with Delia Ann Crater, daughter of Sylvania and Emily Crater. To this union nine children were born, five sons and four daughters, all of whom with his widow survive him.

The children are: Mrs. J. N. Binkley, Harmony, N. C., Mrs. E. M. Sole, Jennings, N. C., Mrs. D. M. Morefield, Harmony, N. C. Mrs. J. F. Johnson, Hamptonville, N. C., S. A. Trivette, Statesville, N. C., Eugene Trivette, North Wilksboro, N. C., Dr. W. A. Trivette, Hamptonville, N. C., Dr. L. Parks Trivette, Weaversville, N. C.

He was a loving husband, a loving and affectionate father, a consecrated Christian and at all times and under all conditions he held on to his faith in God. He possessed a cheerful and sunny disposition, always greeting his friends and loved ones with a smile.

In his home the preacher could always find a hearty welcome. At church he was always an intent listener. Sometimes during the services he would openly rejoice.

It seemed that all who knew him loved him. Hundreds attended his burial.

One of our best has left us.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Saturday, January 16, 1926, death visited the High Point Hospital and released from suffering the spirit of Mrs. Charles Livengood.

By her death the Mt. Pleasant Sunday school has lost a most valued member, one who by her search for truth and her adherence to the faith made her an inspiration to the entire school.

Therefore be it resolved:

First: That the members of the Mt. Pleasant Sunday school wish to express publicly their grief at her passing and that the class to which she belonged henceforth bear her name, Esther Satt Livengood, and be known only as the Livengood Class.

Second: That we extend our deepest sympathy to the beloved family in the dark hour and pray that the blessing of the good Lord may abide with them.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of her family; to the Methodist Protestant Herald, and a copy spread upon the minutes of the Sunday school record.

AN EASTER SERVICE IN EVERY CHURCH THIS YEAR.

Where is there a church that should not celebrate Easter? It is so reasonable a thing to do that every church should study how to do it even if there were no helps provided. Easter means the resurrection of Jesus the Christ without which great fact our faith would be vain. That great event, the coming forth of Jesus from the domain of death, is the ground on which we base our hope of life after death. It means so very much to our happiness here that we should ever be ready to celebrate the coming of Easter time.

Fortunately for our churches, our Board of Home Missions provides every year an order of service, with songs and recitations etc., to be used by our churches and Sunday schools in celebrating Easter. We have just received a sample copy of this service for this year, prepared by Dr. Sheridan, the new Executive Secretary of the Board of Home Missions. We find in it all that is necessary to enable any Sunday school that has children and somebody to train them to have a delightful service. There are ten songs with notes and numerous speeches and dialogues from which to select. This service is sent free of charge to all our Sunday schools who wish to observe Easter and take an offering for the Board of Home Missions. Make a careful estimate of how many Easter service programs you need and how many collection envelopes and write to Rev. J. M. Sheridan, 916 N Charles St., Baltimore, Md. He will send the supplies. The offering your church makes for the Board of Home Missions will of course count on your budget for the General Conference.

By observing Easter in this way, you will be helping not only your own church, but you will be through the Board of Home Missions helping other churches to get on their feet and do greater service in the cause of the Master.

Brother Gerringer's sermon to young women last Sunday night provoked much favorable comment. He told the young women present in a plain but inoffensive way some things that all young women ought to know but which some seem not to know. He dismissed the frivolities of youth with a few fitting words and passed on to the weightier things of morality and religion. His Scripture text was, "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken from her."

—Miss Velna McCulloch's class gave a supper to the members of the Workers' Council before their meeting at Calvary Church last night. This added greatly to the interest of the meeting.

—Rev. E. G. Cowan recently underwent an operation for appendicitis but rallied quickly. He and his family have moved to Pleasant Garden. They receive mail R 1 in care of L. W. Kirkman. Brother Cowan seems to be gaining slowly, writes Mrs. Cowan.

—The Methodist Protestant Herald goes to readers in a number of states besides North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, and in a number of cases it goes because friends in North Carolina send it. We thank these friends, recognizing them as friends of the paper as well as to those for whom they subscribe.

Since my last report I have received from Mr. L. F. Ross, at Asheboro, check for $1,000. for one of the Board's notes. Brother Ross hopes to send another thousand dollars shortly. A few other notes are still in the hands of some of our people, and we hope they will be able to negotiate them and send us the money shortly. Those, however, who have not called for the notes are urged to press collections as much as possible, as it is absolutely necessary that we have additional funds to provide for our obligations on building account. It will be recalled that those who handled the notes would have the privilege of making collections and depositing the money in their banks, to be applied on the notes when due.

Burlington has made a beginning in this way, and has deposited $115.00, and expects to make other collections shortly. It will of course be encouraging to the friends who have handled these notes if pledges can be collected, and the money deposited, to be applied on the notes at maturity.

Concerning Our College.

Anyone familiar with the history of our college during the past five years must be impressed with two facts:

First, that a large number of our people are deeply interested in the institution, and have contributed liberally according to their means, and many have sacrificed in its behalf. The other is that a very large number, possibly the majority, of our members have not been interested; have remained aloof, and have either contributed nothing or very small amounts. A great many of these have doubtless felt that the undertaking could not succeed—"You can't do it," or "They can't do it." I might here confess that I believe they are right, or nearly so. "You" or "They" cannot do it without the help of those who have thus far withheld their sympathetic co-operation, but now it has become perfectly apparent that it can be done if all our people will truly cooperate in the great undertaking. About one-fourth of our members have made it possible to carry the college to the point of its magnificent achievement. The remaining three-fourths can easily make it possible "to go over the top."

I should like to ask all who have thus far felt indifferent whether they are absolutely sure that their Lord does not wish them to lend encouragement and substantial aid to this enterprise? They may have lacked faith in the beginning, but the institution is now located on solid earth; property is valued at over half a million dollars, and nothing but the aid of the "doubting Thomases" is necessary to insure its success.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE. II.

In II Tim. 3:16, Paul says, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God." We are aware of the fact that the R. V. reads, "Every scripture inspired of God," but the margin of the R. V. reads, "Every scripture is inspired of God." Hinds New Testament reads, "Every scripture is God-inspired." The original word, Theopneustos, Greenfield defines, "Divinely inspired." Liddell & Scott, defines it, "inspired of God." So this word Theopneustos is from Theos, God, and Pneu, "to breathe, or blow," meaning literally, "God-breathed." So the scriptures, writing, Paul was speaking of here, in II Tim. 3:16, were "God-breathed," "God-inspired," whatsoever that means. He had just spoken in the preceding verse of "the holy scriptures," or "sacred letters"—Hinds' rendering—"which were able to make him wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." These "holy scriptures" could be none other than the Old Testament scriptures which he had "known from a child." And further he had just spoken of the apostasies of the last days, in verses 1-5, of his own persecutions, and of deceivers, "deceiving and being deceived," and then thus commends the "holy scriptures"—the Old Testament—as guide, amid all the prevailing false teaching, confusion, and apostasy. And so emphasises the value, or worth, of these "Holy scriptures," by declaring them "all," or "every" one, to be "given by inspiration of God," "God-breathed," or "God-inspired," and "profitable." It is absurd to suppose that Paul had in mind any heathen writings, or scriptures, as being "able to make one wise unto salvation." His teaching is that all scripture "inspired of God," or "God-breathed," "is profitable;" and that these were the "holy scriptures," which he had known from a child, the Old Testament scriptures, and that all of them were inspired and "profitable." There is no hint nor intimation here, by Paul, that any of these same "holy scriptures" were not God-inspired, but just the contrary. So the commonly held view, that "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" is sound.

So II Pet. 1:21 shows that "the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man." The human will, or mind, did not initiate prophecy—not a human affair at all—"but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost"—carried, or borne along by that Holy Spirit, as the original word implies. The prophet was absolutely under the control of the Spirit of God. An illustration of this all-controling power and operation of the Spirit is seen in the case of Balaam as recorded in Num., Chapters 22, 23, 24, where Balaam tried to curse Israel, but God forced him to bless Israel instead. Balaam himself affirmed that he could not do otherwise than he did. His will was to curse, but God forced him to bless. God even opened the mouth of Balaam's ass that he spoke with man's voice. He did not prophesy, but he spoke.

That God can use, or control, man's mouth, if he sees fit, is seen in his reply to Moses, when he made his excuse to God that he, Moses, was "slow of speech," "who hath made man's mouth?" "Have not I the Lord?" "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy youth, and teach thee what thou shalt say." Ex. 4:12.

Another illustration that prophecy was not by the "will of man," but wholly under the control of the Spirit of God, is seen in the incident of Jehoshaphat and Ahab consulting Micaiah, the prophet, in regard to a proposed battle, as recorded in II Chron. 18:24-27. "If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not God spoken by me." This shows clearly that Micaiah the prophet believed that God had spoken through, or by, him, and not he himself, had spoken.

Time would fail to speak of the many cases recorded in the Old Testament where the Spirit of God came upon persons and they prophesied. As Saul in I Sam. 10:6-12, and the elders of Israel as recorded in Num. 11:25-29. (Read these.)

There is nothing more positively and clearly taught in the Bible than that "God," not man, "spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, as certainly as in the "last days by his Son." Heb. 1:1,2. In II Pet. Chapter 1, verse 17,18, Peter speaks of the voice which he heard in the "holy mount," "which came from heaven," and adds, "We have a sure word of prophecy; where unto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place."

It is clear that Peter was no modernist, or higher critic, or he could not have referred to the Old Testament—to which doubtless he referred—as a "sure word," and especially as a "more sure word" than the "voice on the holy mount," as this "voice" was but for a moment, while the prophecy was recorded and abiding.

As to the method of inspiration it was miraculous—God speaking through and by man, and not man speaking of, and within himself, in any wise. It was full, certain, and unmistakable. And to this end it had to be in language neither superfluous nor lacking. And so had to be verbal. To be otherwise would be to render it uncertain. How anyone can object to verbal inspiration if he believes in an All-powerful God is difficult to understand. God had to give the precise, exact word, or so guard, influence, or control, the prophet, that he would select the exact word to carry the precise meaning intended, which amounts to verbal inspiration. Words are but symbols or signs of ideas. So, sometimes God gave the prophet a "vision" of symbols. These were not always understood at the time, but no doubt carried an exact, specific meaning, when understood. Why God has done this at times is not for us to determine, but that he has done so we cannot deny. But the great leading, fundamental teachings, doctrines of the Bible are given in plain, clear, specific language, not difficult to understand.

But as to the exact how, or method, of inspiration this need not consern us, further than to know he made himself understood as to the words given, whether the meaning of these words were understood or not. The rerord is, "God spoke," or "appeared" and "spoke," unto Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Samuel, David, Solomon, and the prophets. Of Moses it was said, "The Lord spoke unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." Ex. 33:11, Num. 12:8, Deut. 34:10 God spoke "words" at the Baptism of Jesus, and on the mount of Transfiguration: If he spoke "words" on these occasions, why not speak "words" to Moses and the Prophets, and to the Patriarchs, even back to Adam?

Why some should object to "verbal" inspiration is difficult to see, unless at the bottom, and in the last analysis, they do not believe in any real, Divine, miraculous inspiration at all. There is nothing unreasonable in "verbal" inspiration if we admit an Almighty God. Verbal inspiration seems to the only kind that can meet the case, if accuracy is needed, and it most certainly is needed.

Now we cite two statements of Jesus Christ, one before, and one after his Resurrection, which to our mind, settles forever the full inspiration of the Old Testament: The first is Matt. 5:18 "Till heaven earth pass, one jot or title shall in no wise pass from the law." So if the law—the Pentateueh—had contained the smallest amount of error, even a jot or tittle, this could not have been truthfully said by Jesus. Error could be no part of the law, as the smallest part of it could not be expunged, or climinated, therefore all the law was without error; for if there be error in it, this could be, should be, and would be eliminated. Therefore the law, according to Jesus, was, and is, without error. And this being true, it is a legitimate inference that the Prophets were also without error, inasmuch as Jesus said, in the same connection, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the Prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." Would Jesus come to fulfill a falsehood, an error, in any wise, or to any degree? The supposition is absurd and buaspnemous. Yet such must be the case, if the Law or Prophets, or both, contain error, as the higher critics, the modernists, and evolutionists contend.

The second statement of Jesus to which we call attention is Luke 24:25, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." This surely implies that all that the prophets had spoken was worthy of belief, and should be believed, he even calling thou "fool" for not believing all they had "spoken." This could not be truthfully said if the writings of the prophets contained error, for he doubtless had reference to the collection of sacred writings known as the Prophets. It's an absurd quibble to assume that the Prophets "spoke truth" but "wrote lies," as some "modernists" have done, attempting to evade the unanswerable force of Jesus' statement.

A few statements of Jesus settle the inspiration of the New Testament. Jno. 14:26, "The Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Also Jno. 16:13, "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth,.....and he will show you things to come."

These statements of Jesus cover the entire field of the New Testament, when they say, Teach you all things," "guide you into all uth," "bring all things to your remem- ance, whatsoever I have said unto you," id "show you things to come." If this is ot full, plenary inspiration, what is it? nough the method may not be just like that the Old Testament inspiration.

"All things," "all truth," "whatsoever I ve said unto you," and "show you things come." "All things" that he had ught them in the three or three and a lf years, should they forget. "Things to me"—additional revelations. What could be ore full and complete? Covered all his past aching, any present need, and the future. nd this Comforter, Teacher, Enlightener as to "abide with them forever." Jno. 14: 6. So all this insures absolute certainty, as "truth" and the teachings of Jesus. And addition to this promise, he "opens the nderstandings" of the Apostles, and per- aps all present, "that they might understand e scriptures"—(Old Testament). Other riptures, corroborative, could be cited, but the above do not carry conviction, one ould not "be persuaded though one should se from the dead."

A word in conclusion: Some confuse reve- tion and inspiration. They are not the same. ll revelation must be inspired, but all in- piration is not revelation. Facts of biogra- hy, history and related things, for which no evelation is needed, but for which inspira- on is needed, in order that they be correct- recorded and transmitted, may be inspir- d. J. F. Dosier.

WHEN GOD REBUKES.

"Remove thy stroke away from me."—salm 39:7-11.

The word "rebuke" does not sound good us, and the chief reason for this is that e have grown to think of the word apart om its original meaning. To rebuke is real- to keep back, to restrain. So that the ought of the passage is that God finds it ecessary to restrain us, or keep us back from mething that would not be for our good. here is one motive only in His rebukes—to rrect.

Time would fail to tell of all the ways in hich the dear Lord may rebuke us. When e met Saul of Tarsus in the way, He re- ked him. Paul tells us that he was "appre- ended," but the meaning is the same. The ophet was rebuked when God asked, "What est thou here?" And every one of us is buked when God, through His great grace, fts us from "the horrible pit and the miry ay."

And so on through our lives, we are rebuk- d again and again, always and ever with e desire to correct us. And if we could only e this in the proper light, we would as adly invite the rebukes of God as we do e criticism that we know is designed to help s. It would naturally follow that the more illing we are to be corrected, the less need ere would be for correction.—Rev. I. D. yttle.

THE SOCIETY'S THANK OFFERING.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, for a number of years, has celebrated the anniversary of its organization—February, 1879, by a thank offering made by its members and friends of the great cause.

The fact that the administration of all the foreign missionary work of our denomination has been entrusted to the Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration has not changed any of the plans of the Society for raising their allowed percentage of the budget, and the thank offering in the month of February is one of its established plans.

At times a well prepared program has been prepared by the Society's Executive Board, and sent to the auxiliaries to be used by them with such changes and additions as local conditions called for.

At other times the local auxiliaries, under the general direction of the conference branches, have adopted their own plans for observing the anniversary, and securing the thank offering.

This practical and helpful feature of the anniversary celebration has been of great service to the Society, inasmuch as the proceeds from the thank offering are devoted to the erection of needed buildings, and to repairs and maintenance.

The Society has, in our three Missions, homes for its lady missionaries, school buildings of different kinds, kindergarten buildings all of which represent a large sum of money, and the upkeep of the buildings in those climates calls for an annual item in the budget.

Then the Society's work is enjoying a healthy growth, and while the main Girls' Schools in Japan and in China have very creditable buildings in which excellent work is being done, in the Society's newest field, India, there is no regular school building for the Girls' school.

The school occupies a considerable part of the large two story bungalow, which is also the home of the Society's four lady missionaries, and it is very evident that a building designed for regular school purposes has become an insistent demand, but the resources for its construction are not in hand.

There are other needs of the women's department in our three Missions which cannot be met without funds secured through the annual thank offering, hence its recurrence annually assumes great importance to the entire foreign missionary work of our loved church.

The officers and the members of the Society, and, of course, the members of the Union Board are most anxious that a large amount may be realized this year from the thank offering, that their hearts may not be burdened, their hands may not be tied, their missionaries' work may not be made harder nor retarded for the want of the money needed.

Of course, every member of every auxiliary will lay on the altar her thank offering in gratitude for God's many blessings, and to aid the work He gives us to do, but here is an opportunity for all to share in the good work of supporting the girls' schools, and the other agencies which are being used to promote the highest welfare of women and girls in the three countries where our church is now carrying on foreign missonary work.

If womanhood is to be elevated in those dark lands it must be by the Gospel, and the Christ it reveals being accepted, and our girls' schools, our Bible women, all our agencies are being devoted to that purpose, but necessary equipment, and the money to provide it are urgently called for, and this is one way you can help. Fred C. Klein.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

The Commision appointed by the last General Conference to study the problems surrounding Adrian College has finally completed its work. The last session was held in Pittsburgh January 29, and, as reported by the Methodist Recorder last week, it was voted unanimously to leave the college at Adrian, provided that certain conditions to be announced later are met. This decision was reached after thorough investigation and study by a representative body of men chosen from the Adrian area. It will doubtless give general satisfaction and settle for a generation at least, a question which has been more or less disturbing. The next step that is essential to enable Adrian to render a satisfactory service to our young people and the church is an endowment. Plans for this are now being made.

The Board of Education has contracted to assist seventeen young people through the Student Loan Fund this year. That will require $2550. We have several applications pending but have had to postpone accepting them until we know better what our income is to be. At present we need nearly $2000. We feel reasonably sure that one half of this will be provided for from return payments, regular contributions, and some unpaid pledges of the "600 club."

One of the most successful teachers in one of our colleges is a former beneficiary of the Student Loan Fund. We know of a case where a young man entered college through the help of this Fund and later decided for the Christian ministry. It is a service our young people greatly appreciate. It binds them closer to our church and helps them to realize a worthy ambition.

We have promised help to thirty-seven ministerial students this year, two more than last year. That requires close to seven thousand dollars. All but twenty-five hundred of this is provided for and a diligent effort is being made to secure this amount from former beneficiaries. Over fifty thousand is due the Board most of which is long over-due. If half of this could be placed in our invested fund it would enable the Board to treat our students more generously.

The Board has an anonymous friend who contributes two hundred and fifty dollars every year to the cause of ministerial education. When the receipts of the Board warrant it this money is placed in the invested fund. We were able to do that last year. Such gifts are a great encouragement and render an exceptionally fine service. May his tribe increase!

The returns from Rally Day on January 1 were as follows:

Ohio, $3146.32; Maryland, 1841.75; Pittsburgh, 1224.21; Eastern, 727.78; Indiana, 605.85; West Va., 518.85; Onondaga, 370.72; No. Car., 308.26; Kansas, 265.58; Illinois, 25:93; Alabama, 125.00 Ia.-Mo., 81.36; Arkansas, 77.63; Texas, 75.00; Michigan, 50.00; Kentucky, 17.50; Col.-Tex. (Col.), 10.00; Georgia, 7.87.

The receipts to date total $9713.36 or $868.-05 less than a year ago. Since the receipts from the Budget for the Board of Education were on January 1 over $9000 less than a year ago it would be greatly appreciated if our pastors would make a special effort to see that any special day or other General Conference funds in their treasuries were sent in at once. Frank W. Stephenson.

HOME MISSIONS.

Mississippi Conference.

It was my privilege to again attend the Mississippi Conference which met in Clara, December 3. The Conference was largely attended and the reports for the year were encouraging. The spirit of hopefulness as to the future of the church was in evidence. The Woman's Home Missionary Society, organized a year ago, is succeeding finely. Dr. Stephenson, Secretary of the Board of Education, was the appointed official Representative and presented the interests of the General Conference.

I was there to represent the Board of Home Missions in general, and the Meridian Church in particular. This new church enterprise has been prominently before the general church in that Dr. Lewis, several years ago, made an appeal to the denomination at large for funds with which to purchase a lot in the city of Meridian with the view of erecting a Methodist Protestant Church. The lot, centrally located, was purchased for $3,000, the title of which is held by the Board of Home Missions. A wooden tabernacle was erected on this lot a year ago and services have been held regularly.

I preached for them Sunday morning and night, held a business meeting Monday night and preached again Tuesday. They have a membership of about forty with a Sunday school of the same number. Rev. J. T. Williamson, who lives in Meridian, is the acting pastor. He and his family are deeply interested in the church and have contributed liberally to its support. Brother Williamson is the father of Mr. Nate S. Williamson, a prominent young attorney of Meridian, whose loyalty and devotion to the Methodist Protestant Church prompted Dr. Lewis in starting a movement for a church of our denomination in that city.

They have in cash in the Meridian Bank nearly $3,000 and with the $1,900 Dr. Lewis has since collected there is practically $5,000 with which to begin the first unit of the new church. Dr. Lewis has requested the Board of Home Missions to assume responsibility for the supervision of this new work. We are cooperating with our friends in Meridian in securing plans and assisting in starting building operations. The plan is to have the building ready in time for the next session of the Mississippi Annual Conferenec next fall. The Annual Conference has furnished some money toward the building and has pledged further support.

The work of the Confereenc in the past has been largely rural. They are, however, awakening to a realization of the fact that no denomination can make any decided progress unless well represented in the centers of population. This needs no argument. It is plain to any one who is observant. We have an illustration of this in the Alabama Conference, the adjoining state to Mississippi. The establishment of our denomination in Birmingham and Montgomery, with attractive church buildings well located, has put new life and hope into that Conference. What has been done in Alabama can be repeated in Mississippi. I call on the whole Mississippi Conference to rally to the support of this new Meridian Church.

Pray for it, talk about it, work for it, give to it and when that church is well established we will turn our attention to some other city in that state. It may mean labor and sacrifice but it will be well worth all it will cost. I urge the pastors to present this work in every church in the conference. We now have a church in Laurel about sixty miles from Meridian which needs some attention. Laurel is a city of fifteen thousand people. Our church there should have special attention. I regretted that I was not able to visit Laurel during my stay in the state.

Those from other sections of our denomination who have contributed to the Meridian Church can look for further news from Meridian. J. M. Sheridan.

TO WORK FOR PEACE.

Fred B. Smith—a prominent Congregational layman, Y. M. C. A. worker, world-traveller and lecturer—has accepted the chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. He purposes to devote the rest of his life to a crusade against war and what he calls "war philosophy." He proposes to exercise an active leadership throughout the churches of America in a continuous campaign against war. Mr. Smith has issued a statement in which he gives expression to his seven fundamental convictions on this matter. We here summarize his statement:

1. The abolition of war is the paramount world issue. In the judgment of men possessing wisdom and information far beyond anything I profess to have, every hope and aspiration of the human race is being placed in jeopardy by the War Philosophy. The heart of the world problem is just this, can humanity find some way to abolish war? This I am convinced is the supreme issue of the moment. Nothing else matters much. Viewed from the standpoint of good government, good economics, or true religion, the abolition of war is the supreme affirmation.

2. That the ominous war clouds still hover over the nations. I am profoundly impressed by the fact that notwithstanding all the lessons of the past, in the face of all the warnings which have been issued and all the superb efforts which have been put forth, since 1918, ominous war clouds still hang over the world.

3. That war can be abolished. I am glad to record my conviction and unbounded confidence in the belief that war can and will be abolished. I do not believe that war is an incurable malady, and therefore must be carried on permanently in all human activities. I do not believe that it is in the purpose of God to organize war. I believe it is in the great plan of God that nations and peoples shall live in peace. I believe that Christianity and the War Philosophy cannot live together in the same world.

4. That the great hope will only be realized through the full co-operation of all the agencies which believe in God. I am further constrained to hope that in this relationship I may render some service in enlarging the co-operative plans of the allied Christian societies which are so deeply interested in the world brotherhood ideal. I am thoroughly of the opinion that this task is so colossal, and the consummation to be desired is so exalted, that the realization of it will only come through the growing co-operation of all those agencies throughout the world which believe in God and universal brotherhood.

5. That this message is the highest and most compelling Christian apologetic. Frequent tours thoughout the world have led to a very serious consideration of the problems confronting the Christian church in that universal extension of the Gospel message we believe to be indispensable to all people. I have been made strongly aware of the fact that millions of people in this as well as other lands have lost a good deal of their faith in organized Christianity as they have observed these professed followers of Jesus, organizing, promoting, and leading the most horrible war in all history. We may as well recognize the fact that Christianity cannot become universal until it has rid itself, root and branch, of the War Theory. I have always believed in evangelism, and have sought to impress that message upon every appropriate occasion and feel now that any service rendered in exalting the Christian doctrine of World Peace will add to the most compelling argument for the indispensable place of our faith. Christianity will not become the universal religion of mankind in a million years unless it can be purged of its war traditions.

6. That the noblest service to be rendered to America is to have her assume her full place in this great undertaking. What the men of our country need most just now is a great new, compelling challenge to idealistic life and service, and I believe that this message of universal good will and world peace can be so translated in the life of our American citizenry that its reaction will become highly beneficial in the realm of our domestic issues. The fact is that when on November 11, 1918, the order was given to "cease firing," we not only began to demobilize our army, but in an appalling way we demobilized our altruism, our idealism, and high aspirations for world human welfare. I do not believe that anything short of a program which contemplates world peace will be sufficient to arouse again those great emotions which led to sacrificial service for country and humanity.

In accepting the chairmanship of the Executive Committee, therefore, I do it with the expectation of organizing and personally conducting campaigns in the cities and towns and colleges and universities, which will carry the whole message of our own Christian, moral, patriotic welfare as well as these issues which reach to the uttermost parts of the world.

7. That the World Alliance is the best hope of co-ordinating the Christian peace sentiment throughout the world. In my travels since 1918 I have been meeting men in all parts of the world who are saying that some kind of a world grouping of the Christian and religious forces is necessary to preserve the impulses and desires which are being quickened everywhere in behalf of world peace. Not long ago Sir Douglas Haig, in addressing the Presbyterian General Assembly in Scotland, said, "What we need just now is a World League of Chirstian Men and Women to Promote Ideals of Peace and Brotherhood." I was profoundly impressed, in the last tour around the world, by the fact that this World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches is already that organization. Twenty-nine nations now have branches of the World Alliance. While this is an emphasis on only one issue of the Christian program, it is an emphasis on the supreme item it is already in action. It has in it men, resources and vision, and it is the best hope we have for enlisting immediately the whole Christian world upon this subject. It would naturally be expected that of the nations organized in this group, the American Branch ought to be one of the most effective. Therefore, I welcome this responsibility cordially, and more heartily than anything I have ever before given myself to in a rather long and varied life.

EVENING SHADES.

The busy day is ended,
The hour of toil is done.
The reapers homeward journey
At the setting of the sun.
From shop, from field, from office,
They are coming home at night,
To find in home's retirement
Home's rest and home's delight.
And if they've proven faithful,
And if there's love at home,
There will be some one waiting
And watching, when they come.
There is an evening coming,
When life's long day is done,
When we'll find our journey ended
With the setting of the sun.
And then death's cloud will shade us,
Like the coming of the night;
But with footsteps homeward treading,
We shall find the morning light.
And if we've proven faithful,
There will be some one at home;
There'll be a face to meet us
And greet us when we come.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Stewardship and Church Extension Letters have been mailed to all pastors and to a goodly number of laymen calling attention to conference action deferring all Church Extension appropriations until after this February campaign, page 70 of the Conference Journal will show that our Church Extension work for the year depends upon the action of the churches in supporting this worthy cause. This is your work and mine, so let us do our best. We are asking all local churches to raise at least 50 percent of the annual conference budget during February, and send it to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., by March 1st.

Fallston.

It was my privilege to attend a District Raliy at Fallston on Saturday and Sunday, January 30th and 31st. The Chairman had arranged a splendid program, and though both the weather and the roads were unfavorable the people attended well, and we had a good time together studying many topics and problems concerning the work of the church. I was called upon to fill in several times where speakers were absent. It was a good meeting, and should mean much to the community.

On Sunday evening at 7:30 I had the pleasure of preaching to a splendid congregation at Lawndale. The people heard the Word gladly, and we had a good time together.

On Monday, February 1st, we held a rather lengthly business meeting, and quarterly conference in the Fallston Church. I wish I knew how to report this meeting, but will leave that for some one else to do. I certainly trust that some good was accomplished.

Winston-Salem.

All those who are interested in our church in Winston-Salem will rejoice to know that we have at last secured a pastor for our people there. After corresponding with several of our own men relative to the pastorate there, and after consulting with several people, both in and out of Winston, I asked Rev. C. M. Compher, of Washington, D. C., to accept the pastorate there. After due consideration, and after taking the proper course with the president of his own conference, and with the members of his own quarterly conference, Brother Compher agreed to accept this pastorate. He preached in Winston on January 31st, and will take full charge of that pastorate after about February 25th.

We are trusting and believing that he will have a successful pastorate in this our largest city.

First Church, Thomasville.

On last Sunday morning I drove to Thomasville to be with Brother J. L. Trollinger and his people in their Sunday school and morning worship. They have a splendid Sunday school which is very active in Christian service. I enjoyed preaching to them at the eleven o'clock hour. This is a fine people, and they are starting off well as a station. We predict for them a splendid year's work.

St. Paul's, Greensboro.

On Sunday night we were with Brother J. H. Moton and his good people at St. Paul's. Brother Moton was not well enough to be at church, but he was there in his accustomed place. It would be well for him if he could just get away from all work for a few weeks and have a complete rest. He has never learned how to spare himself in the work. His people are standing by him nobly and they too are destined to have a good year.

A Challenge.

One of the young men in the Conference Course asks me to say, to all the second and third year men, that he challenges them to undertake to pass all studies between now and next conference and be ordained at the next session of the annual conference. Get your books, study them closely, and pass these examinations. All of you can do it if you will. Why not try?

Appointments.

1. Draper, Sunday, Feb., 14th, at 11 A. M.
2. Reidsville, Feb. 14th, at 7:30 P. M.

Yours in service for the Master.

A. G. Dixon.

Asheboro.—We had a splendid attendance at all services Sunday, especially the Sunday school and morning preaching hours. At the preaching hour the pastor gave us a splendid sermon on—witnessing for Christ.

Mrs. Garland Pritchard was received into membership. It seems we are holding our record of one new member for each Sunday.

Our C. E. Society is now very active. On Thursday evening we had an unusually interesting business eeting and social, and at the prayer meeting on Sunday night had a good attendance and fine program. The C. E. Societes have been challenged by non-members of C. E. to see who can have the larger number present at Wednesday evening prayer meeting. Just watch C. E. shine! Reporter.

First M. P. Church, Burlington.—Under the leadership of our president, Mr. Lonnie Braxton, the Senior Christian Endeavor Society is having a very interesting and helpful membership contest. The Society is divided into two sections, "Reds" and "Blues". Points are scored for each side at the meeting each Sunday evening, a member present counting one, a visitor one, and a new member ten points. A list has been made of the young people of our church and a systematic effort is being made to get them into this work. Interest seems to be increasing considerably among old members and several new members have been enrolled since the contest began.

The Society holds prayer meeting at the County Home each fourth Sunday afternoon. The people at the Home have taken a great interest in these meetings and seem to enjoy them very much. The fourth Sunday of this month, the Society, under the direction of Mr. Way, will give a musical program. Reporter.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.
Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Dear Auxiliaries,

Are you ready for your Thank Offering program for February 14th? May we do our best; this money is greatly needed—

WHY I GIVE A THANK-OFFERING.
By Mrs. John P. White.

There is no more beautiful occasion in our churches than the annual Thank-Offering service. It is a time set apart by the women for recounting God's blessings and bringing an offering in recognition of His goodness. It pre-supposes that this offering represents the overflow of our gifts. Week by week and month by month, we bring our tithes, but on this glad day we bring the accumulated money from our thank-offering boxes as a love offering to our King.

Not every woman in the church has entered into the full blessedness of this service. With the hope of leading some to a clearer conception of its meaning and purpose, let me give a few reasons Why I Give a Thank-Offering.

1. I give a thank-offering Because I believe it is accord with the teachings of the Bible. The prnciple of giving runs all through the Scriptures. The Old Testament is full of references to this subject. The New Testament likewise points out the duty and blessedness of giving to the Lord. There is a distinction between tithes and offerings. In several places "tithes and offerings" are mentioned, indicating a difference. "The tithe is the Lord's. It is holy." After the tithe has been given, there is the privilege of making a special freewill offering. And this is just what our thank-offering is—a freewill offering.

2. I give a thank-offering Because I am a Christian woman. If I were not a Christian I suppose I should feel at liberty to refuse to give anything to the cause of Christ. And yet I would be unreasonable in such an attitude. For in this Christian land every woman benefits from the teachings of Christ. The non-Christian woman in America little realizes that her opportunities for education and self-development, her right to decide her choice of a husband, her position in the home, her equality with man before the law and a thousand other blessings are all due to Christian teachings and influence..

I am a Christian woman. I recognize what Christ has done for me. I have stood before God's people and have pledged my life, my service, my all, to help advance His cause in the earth. All I have comes from Him and in gratitude, my heart cries out "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?"

I look around me for opportunities to pay my vows. On every hand I find places where I can render service. But I realize that my obligation is world wide. In order to help my sisters across the seas, I must transmute my life into gold which in turn will be transmuted into life in a faraway field. I do this because I am a Christian woman. It is a Christian conception and a Christian plan and according to the will of the Christ.

3. I give a thank-offering Because of the need of the world. I have received a rich heritage, that was intended for every woman in all the earth, and yet more than half of these women have not even heard that a heritage has been left them. Plainly this is not the will of the Master. Those last messages "on a mountain in Galilee" and on the Mount of Olives meant that this blessed news should be told to every one. Where the news has not been told, where Christ's teachings are not made known, woman suffers immeasurably. She suffers physically, largely because of ignorance, but also because her life is not held in high esteem. She suffers intellectually, for she is deemed incapable of acquiring knowledge; she suffers spiritually, because there is no one to teach her of a Saviour. In some of the non-Christian faiths she is not even counted in the religious ceremonies and is not expected to go to the place of worship.

These "sorrowful women's faces, hungry yearning, wild with despair or dark with sin and dread," pass before my mind in endless processions—beautiful Japanese women, the bound-footed Chinese women, pitiable Hindu child wives and widows, unclothed African women, blackrobed Mohammedan women, millions upon millions of them who are living in sin and ignorance because no one has told them of the way of life.

My thank-offering will help to send the Gospel to these, and I gladly give it.

4. I give a thank-offering Because of the success of the work. In the darkness of heathenism there are here and there bright spots. Messengers of the Cross have been telling the story of Christ's love for men and women all around the world. Many have believed. Wherever people become Christians, life becomes richer and better. Woman rises in the esteem of man, because his attitude changes and because her characters change. Schools and hospitals have multiplied in all our mission fields. There is a constant call for enlargement. The new buildings are already overcrowded. There is an embarrassment of success.

5. I give a thank-offering Because it is a spiritual tonic. The little thank-offering box which I see the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night, a constant reminder of God's goodness and likewise a constant reminder of duty. There are hundreds of things crowded upon one's mind, the routine duties of the household, the extra sewing and company, the church and social meetings, all these clamoring for attention. The little box says: "Just pause a moment; turn your mind heavenward. Have a thought for the multitude who need what you are going to put in here today." I reflect that I am what I am, by the grace of God. Had I been born in a heathen land my mother would have placed in my baby hand an offering for a hideous idol. She would have taught me to pray to that terrible monster; or, perchance in a passion of grief or fear she might have snuffed out my life in her blind ignorance.

I was born in a Christian land. A Christian mother early directed my childhood steps in Christian pathway. She taught me of th blessed Saviour so long ago that I have a ways loved him. She taught me to expre my love by giving gifts to my Master. Of yes; I might have forgotten this had the littl box been pushed back in a bureau drawer ou of sight, but with it standing right before m I cannot forget. Nor do I want to forge My life is strengthened by this daily paus and prayer before the little box.

6. I give a thank-offering Because I ar loyal to the Women's Foreign Missionary So ciety. The annual ingathering of this mone is a part of the program of our organizatior My thank-offering is very small, but when i is added to the other offerings larger an smaller, it helps make a very large sum.

The thank-offering is used for every de partment of our women's work. It goes t the furthering of our work in Japan, Chin and India. Without this money our worl would be seriously crippled; with it the worl is greatly bbessed. If the offering could b doubled its working power would be doubled This would be an easy thing to do.

The plan of a penny a day from every wom an in the church is an unattained ideal. Yea by year we have seen our thank-offering in crease, but never have we reached the goal What would the thank-offering amount to i every woman in the church would give a pen ny a day? The solution is very simple. Ther are 10,000 women in our W. F. M. S. If eac woman would give one penny a day or thre dollars and sixty-five cents, then 10,000 wom en would give 10.000 times $3.65, or $36,500 which is more than two and one-half time the amount of our largest annual offerings

Is this too much to give in view of wha Christ has given us?

God wants the best. He in the far off age Once claimed the firstling of the flock, th finest of wheat;
And still He asks His own with gentle plead ings
To lay their highest hopes and brightest tal ents at His feet.
He'll not forget the feeblest service, humbles love;
He only asks of our store, we give to Him the best we have.
And is our best too much? O friends, let us remember
How once our Lord poured out His soul fo us.
And in the prime of His mysterious man hood,
Gave up His precious life upon the cross.
The Lord of lords, by whom the worlds were made,
Through bitter grief and tears, gave us the best He had."

For we are laborers together with God. We are looking for others to join us in this good work. Come on.

In order to give the Editor more time I am now making my reports on Friday instead of Monday. E. G. Lowdermilk, Supt.

Only a little more than a month remains in which to raise the remainder of our budget for which is very much behind for most of the interests. March is Pine Ridge month, so let's make plans to raise the entire amount. I your society has already paid what was asked can't you help a little more, as some of the societies won't be able to raise theirs and Dr. Woodford needs the money so badly for the new building.

The Executive Meeting of the W. H. M. S. will be held in High Point in May and I am sure no one wants the N. C. Branch to fail to raise its entire apportionment.

Make your plans to attend both the Branch and Board meetings. Mrs. Geneva Garrett.

THE DENOMINATIONAL OUTLOOK.

Alabama. A church has been organized at Baldwin, on the Gulf of Mexico. Five acres of land has been bought, upon which there is a building suitable for church purposes. This will be lighted with Delco plant, money for which is already in hand.—New Merkle church will celebrate its hundredth anniversary on December 27th.

Eastern. Six laymen of the Conference have offered to give every "Front Line" pastor a copy of the Scofield New Testament with the pastor's name printed on it. (A "Front Line Pastor" is one who raises the Budgets in full, and meets certain other standards that the Conference has set.)

Illinois. Contractors are making fine progress on the Chatham church, Chicago. The first unit of the building will cost $30,000.—The Avalon Park Church, Chicago, is being enlarged at a cost of $50,000. The Annual Bazaar netted $2,000.

Indiana. The "Indianapolis News" recently published an illustrated article concerning the Old Stone Church, near Guilford, Indiana. This church is more than a hundred years old. After 104 years it has just experienced the first wedding within its walls.—Rev. C. H. Simons, pastor of Grace Church, Indianapolis, is the teacher of a High School Bible Class at the city Y. M. C. A.—The Elkhart Church has received 16 new members since Conference.—The Fowlerton Church has raised $1,000 to pay off a long standing debt. Extensive repairs have been made, also, in the church property.

Iowa. As a result of a splendid revival, twenty-one members have been added to the church at Keokuk. One of these converts was a man eighty-seven years old.

Maryland. In an enrollment of 200 in the Parksley, Va., Sunday school 57 members attended 48 Sundays and 17 attended every Sunday last year.—Trinity Church, Baltimore, had 18 professions and fourteen accessions as a result of the revival service.—As a Christmas token, Rev. S., is raising money with which to by a bus for our Children's Home.—The new Edmondson Ave. Church was dedicated on January 17th. On that day more than $5,000 was pledged and paid on the debt, and twenty-five members received.

Michigan. The Sheridan Avenue Church Saginaw, is going forward with the building program. The basement unit will be occupied in a few days.—The Michigan Conference proposes to put on a six-weeks Summer School for the pastors, the sessions to be held at Adrian College.

Ohio. The Young Ladies' Auxiliary of the Toronto Church made something more than $150 from a supper held recently. William B McKeeknie, Manager of the Pittsburg Pirates, who, with his family, is a member of the Toronto Church, is not only a famous ball player, but also a good singer. He was the soloist at the church on a recent Sunday.—More than $500 was cleared by the Ladies' Aid of the Mt. Lookout Church, Cincinnati, at the Bazaar.

Pittsburg. The People's Temple, Fairmont, W. Va. was reopened after extensive improvements costing in the neighborhood of $30,000. It may be interesting to state that Governor Pierpont "the War Governor" of West Virginia, whose statue is in the Hall of Fame in the Capitol at Washington, was a member of this church.—Rev. Judson Headley, pastor of the Castle Shannon M. P. Church, preached the baccalaureate sermon of the Washington, Pa., High School.—The Turtle Creek Church has had a gracious revival with more than fifty professions and many additions to the membership of the church.— Budgets receipts for the first four months of the conference year total more than $13,000, an increase of more than $3,000 over the same period last year.

Calvary, Reedsville Circuit, with [illegible] to the membership.—Most of our preachers wouldn't appreciate the gift of a saddle horse, not having much use for one. Not so in West Virginia. So the pastor of the Blue Circuit is thankful for the horse his membership gave him for a Christmas present. More to be desired than a Ford, yea, than many Fords.

Thirty-six accessions, and more than $4,000 raised for all purposes.—It is expected that a new building will be erected shortly for the Seaview Church.

"LET DOWN YOUR NETS."

Launch out into the deep,
The awful depths of a world's despair;
Hearts that are breaking and eyes that weep,
Sorrow and ruin and death are there.
And the sea is wide, and the pitiless tide
Bears on its bosom away—away,
Beauty and youth in relentless ruth
To its dark abyss for aye—for aye.
But the Master's voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!
He stands in our midst on our wreck-strewn strand
And sweet and royal is his command.
His pleading call
To each and all
And wherever the royal call is heard,
There hangs the nets of the royal Word,
Trust to the royal Master's will:
Trust to the nets and not to your skill,
Let down your nets each day, each hour,
For the word of a king is a word of power;
And the King's own voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!

THE NEED OF THE WORLD.

The world is needing you and me
In places where we ought to be;
Somewhere today it's needing you
To stand for what you know is true
And needing me somewhere today
To keep the faith, let come what may.
The world is needing me and you
To share the tasks it has to do;
It needs high-minded men to stand
Against the thoughtless of the land;
Men who will scorn to stoop to wrong
To win the favor of the throng.
The world needs humble men to toil,
Men who will till a patch of soil,
Men who behind their work can see
More than its gold and silver fee
And choose to serve where best they can
Their country and their fellow man.
The world needs honest men today
To lead its youth along the way,
Men who will write in all their deeds
The beauty of their spoken creeds
And spurn advantage here or gain
On which deceit must leave its stain.
The world needs men who will not brag.
Men who will honor Freedom's Flag;
Men. who, although the way is hard,.
Against the lure of shame will guard.
The world needs gentle men and true
And calls aloud to me and you.
The world needs men of lofty aim,
Not merely men of skill and fame,
Not merely leaders wise and grave,
Or learned men or soldiers brave,
But men whose lives are fair to see.
Such men as you and I can be.

ANOTHER CHEW ON THE OLD RAG.

Why all the exxeitement about a little resolution of 39 words? Why should anyone lose sleep or have to invoke the aid of a Daniel to find the meaning of resolution number 3 on page 92 of the last Conference Journal? Had that resolution been adopted before the day of Poole bills and Scope's trials, it might have been a mystery, but in this enlightened age when we call a monkey grandfaher and bow to the tadpole as our paternal ancestor or when we cuddle up close to the Zoo and feel that we are among kinfolks, it does seem that we might find the meaning of one little resolution without having one or two lessons and all the exeitement. That resolution might have been written in a different way and might have been improved by a little more study, but be that as it may, those who read it know beyond a reasonable doubt what the committee had in mind when it was written. There is nothing in the resolution that would lead anyone to believe that taxation had anything to do with uniting man by blood to the lower animals, which seems to be the bone of contention, but we as American citizens have the right to object to schools teaching such theories when said schools get their support from the tax-payers of our State and Nation, and as a democratic body owe it to ourselves and our posterity to go on record as we did, that we are opposed not only to the teaching of the theories mentioned in the resolution but to unjust taxation.

Must we sit still and say nothing when we are called upon to pay, and urge others to pay to the support of an institution that denies the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, the Virgin Birth of Jesus and the Atonement? An acceptance of the theories mentioned in the resolution means a rejection of the above fundamental doctrines. Take these away and "to whom shall we go?"

Brother Tobe Shepherd or Sister Tobe Shepherd or whoever he or she is seems to think that it would be a good time for church union to begin, but take away the truths our committee were trying to protect by the resolution and there will be no churches to unite. Our churches stand today on a foundation laid on "the faith once delivered to the saints," and if it takes resolutions to keep us in the old spiritual paths, even if the resolutions have a wrong construction, I am ready to support and help adopt them as I did this one. I believe it is better to try and fail than never try at all.

Dangerous doctrines and theories may be taught in our schools and colleges and some of them may be preached from our pulpits, but by the grace of God I am and I will be found trying in my weak way to keep the church "without spot and blemish or wrinkle or any such thing." I thank God for the men who had the courage to sign and insist on the adoption of that resolution. Our church will stand, men and women will be saved and the Kingdom of God will be made stronger while such godly men fight for the truth as revealed through the Gospel and we owe it to them, not to condemn but to pray God's blessings upon them for their stand.

Praying for the success of our great church, the salvation of lost souls and the coming Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, I am,

One of the least in His service,

C. E. Phillips,

Pastor of Pageland Circuit,

Four new names were added to the A. C. B. list this week. Grace Church, Greensboro; West End, Greensboro; First Church, High Point and Roberta. Grace Church heads the list, First Church, High Point comes second, West End, sixth and Roberta twenty-seventh. Pleasant Grove moved up from 12 to 10. Monthly offerings on the budget helping the church to go toward the top systemematically.

On the G. C. B. 1st Church, High Point still stands first and Asheboro. We are glad to see Spring Church doing as they did last year,—moving right up to the top by regular contributions. Graham enters the G. C. B. at 24. We are due apologies to Mebane. Some way in typing the paper for the Herald Mebane was omitted. We thank the pastor for calling our attention to the matter and are glad to place Mebane in their rightful place again. Mocksville made a gain of three points. This month we expect to see many of the churches go over the top both on the A. C. B. and on the College assessment. A. G. Dixon

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for Sunday, February 21: "Lives Transformed by Christ." Acts 9:1-20.

Plans for the Meeting.

Just as in every other Christian Endeavor meeting that is a success, preparation must be made in advance. GOOD CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MEETINGS DON'T JUST HAPPEN. They must be planned for, thought about, and prayed over. Assign in advance a number of topics for discussion, such as: "How Christ transformed the life of Paul;" "How Christianity transformed the life of Moody;" "The transformation of womanhood in Christian lands as compared to her station in heathen countries;" "Fear transformed into Confidence through Christ;" "From Pride to Humility through Christ;" "From Sorrow into Joy;" "From weariness to rest;" etc.

Write at the top of your blackboard in large letters the words, "Transformation through Christ." In two columns list the conditions of a life before and after accepting Christ. For instance, at the top of one column place the word "Hatred." at the top of the second column, place "love."

Try to think of instances in your own observation of lives that have been transformed by the love and power of Christ. Perhaps you would like to give your own testimony.

Close the meeting with an earnest series of sentence prayers asking Christ to transform the lives of all present and of all Christian Endeavorers into beautiful lives of sacrifice and service.

A Workable Plan

Everybody is busy these days, and a society is often hard put to it to find time for the various committee and business meetings that must be held if the society is to do the work it is meant to do. The following plan is being worked by some societies with success and the editor is passing it on.

For the various committee meetings, Executive Committee, business meeting, and social, the following schedule is worked: A given night each month is designated as "Christian Endeavor Night" and, as far as possible, all other engagements are avoided on this night. All members of the society meet at the church at 6:30 P. M., or as early as possible after work hours. Each person brings his supper along, or this may be arranged for at a nominal charge per plate. Some of the social service groups in your church, such as the Ladies' Aid, Missionary Circles, etc., will be glad to serve the supper at cost if you let them know what you are trying to do. Let each member eat his supper while some songs and fun are provided by the social committee, the officers, or somebody designated. After the supper, arrange a series of committee meetings in separate rooms, or in different parts of the same room. Each committee holds its meeting to discuss its part month's work and make plans for the new month, while the president and vice-president go from one committee to another with plans and suggestions.

After the committees have finished their work, have the officers and committee chairmen, with the pastor, together for a few minutes for an Executive Committee meeting. Follow this with the business meeting of the entire society. This entire program should not take more than an hour and a half—in a dandy time to start a real live social.

In this way, all the committee meetings the Executive Committee meeting, the business meeting, and the social will be held on the same night. Everybody will look forward to this night and much larger interest may be maintained. Try it.

Reports Officers.

Only one society in the Conference has been interested, so far, in our request for the names of officers of the society. We asked last week that all societies report the names and addresses of officers so that the new chart might be mailed. Mr. W. K. Hemphill of Julian, N. C., was considerate enough to do this at once and sent in the list of officers of the Shiloh Society, Randolph Charge. This society has long been an active one and has done very fine work. If all societies in the state were as thoughtful and considerate of the requests of the union workers, our life would be much more pleasant. "I thank you!"

Grace Society Obeserves C. E. Week.

The Senior Society of Grace Church, Greensboro, fittingly observed Christian Endeavor Week. On Thursday evening, February 4, the society entertained the societies of all the churches in Greensboro at a City Union Banquet, held at the Grace Hut. The tables were arranged in the form of an "E," with the speakers and the presiding officer at the middle of the formation. The hut was suitably decorated with Christian Endeavor emblems and colors. In addition to the city union workers present, Prof. P. E. Lindley, Prof. J. D. Hardy, Mr. Clyde Coulter, and Miss Lucy Cherry Crisp were in attendance.

On Sunday, February 7th, a new Junior Society was organized with an initial enrolment of sixteen. Plans are made for the organization of an Intermediate Society at an early date.

The Sunday evening church service was turned over to the Christian Endeavorers; the officers of the societies were installed; and a special sermon was preached to the members of the socities and their friends. At the Christian Endeavor meeting, the fund was collected for the "Francis E. Clark Recognition Fund." This will be forwarded to headquarters at once.

LET US KNOW WHAT YOUR SOCIETY IS DOING.

Have You Any Books You Can Spare?

The Board of Young People's Work is engaged in a church-wide campaign for books for the High Point College Library. In order to retain our splendid rating as an A-Grade College, we must have at least 8000 volumes in the college library by June, 1927. We believe that the young people of the denomination, the Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor societies, the missionary circles, etc., can secure the needed number without an unnecessary burden on anyone.

A Call Has Gone Out.

This week nearly a thousand letters have been mailed to leaders throughout the Methodist Protestant Church, asking for cooperation in putting across this campaign. We know that there are hundreds of folks in our various churches who have books in their libraries that are no longer used, books that no doubt they would like to contribute to this worthy object. All we need to do is to ask them to contribute them to the college.

The Books Needed.

All kinds of books are needed—history, biography, science, reference, theology, fiction, literature—every kind of book. Any desirable cloth-bound book will be acceptable.

The Plan.

In order to have a uniform plan and to save the college workers as much trouble as possible, the following plan has been adopted for the handling of the books. All books should be mailed or shipped to Rev. Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade St., Greensboro, N. C., with a slip in each showing who is contributing the book. A committee is aiding Mr. Little in receiving them, classifying them, and transporting to the college. As each package is received, it will be classified, and the name of each contributor will be printed on the fly-leaf of each book, after which the books will be taken to High Point College and deposited in the library for permanent use by the students who will come there.

Help Us Out.

Every church in the conference can do something to help out in this campaign. A letter sent by the writer recently to a lady in Maryland, who had a father and a brother in the Methodist Protestant ministry, brought the very welcome news that she had a large collection of books stored away that would be sent as soon as they could be re-packed. We know there are many others who would likewise be interested. If you know of such, please send us their names and addresses. But, better than that, see them yourselves and send us the books.

Who will be first to send a good collection?

—People of Tabernacle community are appealing to the Board of Education of Guilford county for a new and larger school building, and seem to have good ground for their appeal. There ought to be a good school at Tabernacle. The board is to meet at Tabernacle next Monday to go over the matter. The people interested should solidly manifest their interest.

Pleasant Hill, Why Not Circuit.—Our new pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, filled his appointment yesterday with a right good congregation.

All gave him their most prayerful attention while he preached a wonderful sermon.

So with our new pastor and the help of God we are trusting this will be our most successful year. Reporter.

FOSTER'S LITTLE LIGHT.

By Hilda Richmond.

It was Old Folks' Day in the pretty Elm Avenue Church, and somebody had brought nearly every elderly person in that whole section of town. Grandmother Eberly was the oldest lady present, and she was ninety-five, and Grandfather Fields got the big bouquet presented to the oldest gentleman, and there were other ladies and gentlemen well up in the eighties, and so many people past seventy, but below eighty, that the reserved seats were all filled early. Any boy or girl who did not have an aged relative present was pitied by the others and more fortunate ones, but Foster Ackers was quite boastful because he had two grandmothers, two grandfathers, and five other old people to tell the teacher of the Little Light Bearers about that morning in Sunday school.

"Grandfather Miller felt almost too ill to come, but I coaxed real hard," said Foster proudly. "I wanted to ask ten people to come, but could only find nine. There's old Mr. Henderson, of course, but it wouldn't have been any use to ask him. He even frowns at me when I take him our church paper."

The members of the Little Light Bearers class had all pledged themselves to let their lights shine in one way and another to tell the world about Jesus, and Foster had been carrying the church paper to old Mr. Henderson for a long time. He often slipped some candy into the paper, or a fine apple or some cookies, but still the crippled old gentleman sitting by the window frowned at him until he wished to give up the task and try letting his light shine somewhere else.

"I think you had better keep on," said Foster's mother, and so did his teacher. "Mr. Henderson has been ill for years, and he has been disappointed in many things, so frowning is hard for him to overcome. You know Jesus came to save people who are unhappy and ill-natured, just as much as he did the happy folks."

And what do you think happened on Old Folks' Day? Why, Mr. King, the superintendent of the Sunday school, came in wheeling Mr. Henderson in a large chair, and he took him right down in the front of the church where he could hear everything. And when they asked the oldest lady and gentleman present to speak, Mr. Henderson said he would like to say a few words also.

"Friends," he said in his broken voice "you all know that I've not been faithful to the church, and I've not taken Jesus for my Saviour until a very few days ago. You know I've been hard and bitter on account of my illness and my trouble but for some time past a little boy from this Sunday school has been bringing me good papers to read along with nice little gifts. I'm sorry I never treated him very well, but he has kept on coming. I do not even know his name, but the papers he brought set me to thinking, and I'm here to-day in my old age wanting to be a Christian on account of that little boy."

Then such rejoicing as there was! Foster had to go forward, so that Mr. Henderson could lay a shaking hand on his head and tell all who were present that it was on account of the little Light Bearer's faithfulness that an old gentleman was very happy that day.

"Oh, mother, I'm so glad you wanted me to go on when I felt that t would do no good," said Foster on the way home. "It was such a little light that I didn't think it mattered."

"Yes, it was a little light, dear," said his mother, "but it was strong enough to light the way for old Mr. Henderson to find the Saviour."—Selected.

THE TWINS FIND SOMETHING.

To the twins who lived far inland, the seashore was a great treat.

Rae loved to run about bare-headed and to feel the fresh breezes among her brown curls. Roy felt more grown-up wearing his new white hat with the red band upon it.

This was their first trip out on the beach for they had only arrived the evening before, and the children were on the lookout for shells and sea-weed or anything else they could find.

"Rae, Oh see, Rae!" called Roy, "what is that queer looking, blue-gray thing over there? Is it a whale or a turtle?"

Roy armed himself as quickly as he could with a stick. It was a branch off a bush and had little prongs on the end. The children went forward as near as they dared to the odd creature which was scuttling along sideways first in one direction and then in the other as if it weren't at all sure which way it wanted to go.

Over on the beach a little ways were some rocks and a tiny pool of water left by the retreating tide.

"It lives over there, I'll bet," declared Roy.

"No, I'm sure its home is in the ocean," contradicted Rae, who always had opinions of her own. "And I know it isn't a whale! It doesn't look a bit like the one in the picture book Daddy gave us on our birthday. The whales were swimming around in the water and sending spouts like little fountains up in the air.

"Well, if you know so much," frowned Roy, "why don't you tell what it is," And he gave the little animal with the ten legs a push with his stick.

And then an amazing thing happened. The creature grabbed the stick with its two front, claw-like pinchers and began to fight in an angry manner. Roy wondered what would happen if it came at him, and the thought frightened him.

He looked back at the cottage and there was Auntie May standing by the porch railing shading her eyes and looking straight in their direction.

"Auntie May, Auntie May!" screamed Roy, lustily, "please come here quick, quick!"

Roy gave the stick a sharp jerk and loosened it. The creature hesitated a minute, then began a series of queer antics. First it began traveling around. Then it changed its mind and scuttled off sideways in the opposite direction from its first course.

"Gimme the stick, gimme the stick!" cried Rae.

"Go and get your own stick," ordered Roy. "I got this one, didn't I?"

But Rae had no notion of leaving, and besides Auntie May was nearly there to tell them what it was.

Isn't this a little, weeny, teeny whale?" queried Roy, as Aunt May approached. "Rae says it isn't."

"No, that isn't a whale," laughed Auntie May. "It is just a crab, and you will see a good many of them while you are here."

"What's he fighting for?" asked Rae. "See him grab this stick."

"That's because a crab is a peevish, ill-tempered shell fish, and it is always ready to fight. Those two front arms of his have little openings in them on purpose so he can take hold of things. He doesn't use those to walk with. The four legs on either side are all he needs for that. See, the back pair are flattened out a little bit like oars, so if he wants to go into the water, he can paddle along as handy as anything."

"Where is his tail?" wondered Rae. "Hasn't he got one?"

"Yes, he has," replied Auntie May, "but it's a short, stubby little affair, and it folds up under his body. He wears it that way to protect his most delicate and sensitive parts."

The crab began to travel rapidly to the left.

"I can walk that way too," boasted Rae and she began hopping around making crab-like motions with her legs and arms.

"This fellow is in fine condition to eat," explained Auntie May, "for he has recently shed his shell. When they are young and in good condition, they are better to eat."

Roy shuddered.

"I wouldn't eat that ugly-looking thing," he declared.

Auntie May smiled.

"There is a little boy," she said, "not many years older than you are, who goes out 'crabbing' every morning. He catches a lot of these fellows and sells them to the cottagers. He gets them in wicker traps baited with meat or pieces of fish, but more often with a net on a long pole."

"What does he do with the money he gets?" demanded practical Rae. "Does he buy ice cream cones?"

"I think he takes it home," said Auntie May gently, "for the lad's father was killed in the war and his mother is an invalid, yet she sews and is trying to save money to send Tomsy to school when he grows up."

The crab was ambling awkwardly over the sand.

"Daddy said that maybe I would see a crawfish," said Roy. "He said some people are like crawfishes. Are there any of that kind of folks around here?"

Auntie May laughed again.

"Well, there are crawfishes anyway and perhaps some folks like them. A crawfish looks more like a lobster than this crab, for it is a shell fish too. It has a way of going forward and then backing up and traveling in the opposite direction without turning around. That's what your daddy mean—that some people cannot be depended upon."

"I know," beamed Rae, "and when folks are cross and sour and hateful, they are called 'Crabs.'"

"Teddy Tradels at home calls his teacher a crab," informed Roy.

"He does that," explained Rae, "when he doesn't get his lessons and she keeps him after school."

"Then Teddy is to blame," said Auntie May, "and not the teacher."

Rae nodded soberly.

"What are those birds, Auntie?" she asked. "We haven't any like them at home at all."

The birds had tails deeply forked and were gray-white with black caps.

"Those are sea swallows," said Auntie May, "or common terns. They are a kind of sea gull. There's a regular sea gull. Sometimes gulls follow a ship clear across the ocean."

"If I could fly like that, I'd go home and see my daddy a while" said Rae.

"I believe I know somebody who is homesick," joked Auntie May. "Suppose we take the crab back to the kitchen and ask Susie, the colored cook, if it isn't as nice as any that ever came out of Chesapeake Bay. She is always boasting about the fine crabs she used to get there."

Susie was pleased with the crab, and Rae was on the point of asking a question as usual when suddenly she stopped and listened. Then with a shout, she burst into the living room

"Oh, Daddy, Daddy!" she cried, "when did you come?"

Roy was right behind her doing his part of letting out war whoops and executing a sort of Indian dance to express his joy.

"There, there, youngsters, don't smother me," said Daddy. "Thought I'd give you a surprise and I've done it. Got here in time for lunch, and I'm as hungry as a bear!"

"And there are fried crabs for dinner," said Auntie May. "Can't yon smell 'em?"

And the way those crabs disappeared proved astonishing and Roy ate more of them than anyone else!—Selected.

THE HOUSE THAT SPOILED LIBERTY STREET.

A little frown cropped out between Georgia's eyebrows—a very little frown, but, oh, the mischief that it did. It destroyed the sweetness of her blue eyes and round, smooth cheeks, her little "Cupid's bow" of a mouth and bit of a pointed chin, her soft hair, her very shiny little shoes! A minute before kind Aunt Mehit' had thought what a lovely-looking child Georgia was, and had meditated kissing her very cautiously, in order not to disarrange her loveliness. But now Aunt Mehit' no longer wanted that kiss; the little frown had taken away her appetite.

"Not Liberty street," repeated Georgia; "I'm going down Wallace and on to Main—truly I am, auntie, so there!"

"Liberty street," repeated Aunt Mehit' firmly. "Your mother especially reminded me to remind you."

"Not today," Georgia pouted, rebeliously. "I should think I might go the nice way today to—to celebrate!"

"Liberty street is a nice—"

"I hate it! Mamma knows I do. I think it's real mean—"

"Georgia!"

It was Memorial Day, and Georgia in her pretty white dress was going down to the church to join her class in a procession to the sleeping city on the hill, behind the town there to decorate the soldier graves with little flaunting bags and clusters of wild flowers.

Liberty street was the short cut to both Georgia's schools—the weekly and the Sunday one. But it was not its "short cut" quality that recommended it to the frail, invalid mother so much as its quietness. There were no trolley cars slipping up and down Liberty street, ready to run over careless little girls at any minute, and Georgia's mother was afraid of trolley cars, as she had a reason to be. Long before Georgia had arrived at the age to travel any street at all, alone, a little older brother had met with a terrible accident which had resulted in his death and the sad little mother's wrecked nerves. Georgia had been too young to realize the shock; it had not been allowed to sadden her own sunny life.

On Liberty street the Cross Person lived. Georgia never forgot that, and the whole length of pretty houses and neat grassplots was spoiled for her. Just by one single Cross Person! For of course you couldn't go to school or come home from school on a street a person lived on without going past the person. Not if the person was at home, and the Cross Person always was. She was always either on her broad front piazza rocking crossly in a cane seat rocker, or at her open window, rocking crossly there. And almost always said cross things when you went by. Like, "In my day little girls walked properly, not prancing along like colts." Or, "If I was that child's mother I'd dress her in sensible school clothes." But the worst of all thing that the Cross Person had done to spoil the pretty, quiet street was limping toilsomely down the front piazza steps—she was a very old and lame and feeble Cross people—men and women, men and women, like some of her tulips. Just because you had a speckly red tulip in your jacket and some of her tulips were speckly red ones!! When your own dear Aunt Mehit', who took care of you and Gentle Mother, gave you yours!

"You must be a very bad child—hasn't anybody ever taught you your Ten Commandments? In my day—"

But there Georgia in a very panic of fear and wrath had fled down the long, still street and left the Cross Person alone in her "day."

Since then she had rebelled daily at the short cut through Liberty street.

Today was especially a day to go by the way of Wallace and Main, because it was a day when you ought to think beautiful, sweet thoughts about soldier people who died for their country—not angry, resentful thoughts about cross persons.

Georgia decided to suit herself, though deep down in the little soul of her a queer feeling twisted and turned uncomfortably. Down busy

Georgia, her small face grave with a great feeling of pity, held out her hand.

"I'll take it—oh, I'll take it!" she murmured. A thought had come to her—oh, if she had gone on and crossed the wide street her mother dreaded! Suppose the poor Old Person, had found no way to send her wreath—no way at all!

"Hit's a beautiful one," Georgia said softly looking down at the flowers.

"He was a beautiful one!" cried the old mother. "Put it at the head, close up. You'll know the stone—'In Memory of My Son Richard Camp Kime.' You'll find it, down near the gate, at the left. The stone is worn out almost with my kisses. But today—today I can't—" The old voice trailed piteously into a sob.

Georgia went on with the wreath on her arm. She carried it very carefully. The thoughts in her mind were sweet, memorial thoughts, but saddened by the great trouble she had left behind at the gate of the house that had spoiled, but that would never spoil now. In her throat something crowded and hurt. She wished she could put her head down a minute on Gentle Mother's pillows.

Suddenly she turned and ran back to the old figure still at the gate. She reached up to the poor Old Person's ear:

"I'll kiss it for you today," she whispered. —The Congregationalist.

DOLLIE'S SUNRISE LILIES

Alice E. Allen.

The first stars were twinkling down the quaint fishing village and the glistening lake. In the church all was hushed and solemn—"like the words in prayer," thought Dollie.

A rugged little damsel was Dollie, daughter of the roughest, most ignorant and almost utterly worthless fisherman on the lake-shore.

Tireless and fearless as a boy, she rowed the lake from dawn till dusk in her father's old boat, the child was a veritable water sprite.

What was the evening service? Dollie sat up straight and listened.

"A sunrise prayer service!" Eagerly, Dollie leaned forward that not one word would escape her. They would meet at seven on Sabbath—there would be prayers and music.

Then the minister looked straight into Dollie's dark, earnest eyes, and said:

"Christ himself has promised to be here. So let us come to meet him. Let us bring something—something dear to us, and lay it in love at His feet—bring Him the best we have."

Dollie's heart thrilled strangely. She had often stolen unnoticed into the church to hear the music. And always she had heard something of Him—Jesus Christ. In her own way, she thought much of Him. She had long wanted to see His face, close.

He was coming! She clasped her hands and clasped her head. Oh, if she could only see Him for one minute—the great, kind man who had time to love little children. If she could only bring Him something!

But what? In all the world she had no treasure, poor little Dollie.

A VISIT TO FIRST CHURCH, THOMASVILLE.

It was the pleasure of this writer to visit the First Methodist Protestant Church at Thomasville on Sunday, January 31st, after an absence of more than two years. To my surprise I found one of the live st Sunday schools in the North Carolina conference.

Having been a member of First Church during a part of the year 1923 and the entire year 1924, although not able to attend during the year 1924, I thoroughly enjoyed meeting and worshipping with those good people again. Brother D. R. Connell, a fine gentleman and ardent Christian worker, is superintendent of the Sunday school. He is a man who does things and is an excellent leader in every respect, in devotionals, in song and in the administrative affairs of the Sunday school. The attendance was 153 in spite of the rainy day and muddy streets. The enrollment of the school is more than 250, and the average attendance for the first 12 Sundays after the last annual conference was 215. The average amount of offerings in the school for the same period of time was $9.50.

We had the privilege for the first time of hearing Rev. J. L. Trollinger, the popular pastor of First Church. Brother Trollinger is one of our best preachers in the North Carolina Conference. His delivery was good and his sermon discussion was very helpful. The people of First Church are well pleased with their pastor and they are co-operating with him in a fine spirit as was indicated in the Sunday school and church services which this writer observed during our visit there.

The First Church, Thomasville, is completely organized and each organization is functioning splendidly. I was told that they have the Ladies' Aid Society, with a membership of 25. Also the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society with 25 members. Three Christian Endeavor Societies are thriving with a total enrollment of approximately 160 members. An average attendance of from 25 to 50 in each society has been maintained, which is a fine record.

A Brotherhood was organized since the last Annual Conference and has a membership of 50. A Cradle Roll Department in the Sunday school has an enrollment of 45. Also a Workers' Council with 30 members, is an important organization which is functioning in the Sunday school and meets regularly as do all other auxiliary organizations of the Sunday school and church.

The First Church, Thomasville, has a bright future, and great things may be accomplished by the labor of the pastor and people in such a fine spirit of cooperation which was evident on the occasion of my unannounced visit. Pastor Trollinger has the work in fine shape and he is a real worker as well as preacher; always alert for the progress of the church and the entire denomination. A unique designation has been given First Church by its pastor on his calling card which is, "The Church of Happy Hearts." This writer experienced the truth of that title on the occasion of the recent visit because our hearts was really made happy because of the delightful privilege of being among the good people of the Mother Church of Methodist Protestants in Thomasville, from which two other churchts emanated during the past five years, namely West Thomasville Church and Community Church.

The entire North Carolina constituency of the Methodist Protestant Church may watch First Church, Thomasville, grow during the coming years and do wonderful things for the salvation of the lost and the edification of the Christian.

Friendship Station.—As spring is drawing near again and the bright sunbeams shine out from heaven and the grass begins to come out we ought to be thankful that we live in a free country and have the privilege of worshiping God as we please.

Our pastor filled his appointment Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. His sermon was based on Stewardship and he preached ont of the most wonderful sermon he has delivered from the pulpit in his past four year stay with us.

We wish to ask the prayers of all christian people. May God's richest blessings rest with each one that is striving to do the work of our Lord and Master.

Oscar Hatley, Reporter.

Sloch, Randolph Charge.—Although we haven't been heard from in some time, this is no evidence that we haven't been doing anything. We have heard some excellent sermons since the last report. Mr. McCulloch was with us February 7th. His text was found in Matt. 6:53.

We reorganized Sunday school the first Sunday. The officers are as following: Superintendent, Mr. J. S. Pickett; Assistant, Mr. V. K. Hemphill; Secretary, Miss Grace Garrett; Assistant, Gladys Pickett; Adult Class, Mrs. Grady Hemphill, teachers; Assistant, Mr. W. P. Pickett; Senior Class, Mr. W. K. Hemphill. Intermediate Class, Miss Mae York, teacher; Assistant, Miss Eura Brown. Junior Class, Mrs. J. S. Pickett, teacher; Assistant, Mrs. W. C. Pickard. Beginners, Mrs. A. L. Kime, teacher; Assistant, Mrs. W. P. Pickett.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. We have large attendance, considering the weather. The plans now are to get a new organ for the church in the near future.

Rev. A. O. Lindley will fill his appointment, the second Sunday at 11 o'clock.

The C. E. Social committees gave "An Early Valentine Party" at Elizabeth Hanner's home, Saturday night at 7:30. Every member present had a very good time.

Philadelphia, Greensville Ct.—We are still live at Philadelphia, although we have not reported in some time.

Yesterday proved a good day for us. Brother Powell delivered a very interesting and instructive sermon.

Things are moving along in right good shape considering the bad weather and roads. We do hope we can start with our Christian Endeavor Society again when the Spring opens up. We believe that this will give us a better knowledge of how to work and a deeper consecration to Christ and the church, together, with a large Christian experience.

Asking your prayers for the success of the Greensville charge and the church in general.

Reporter.

Gideon Grove, Flat Rock Ct.—Our reporter has not informed our paper as to what we have been doing but will try to let the Editor know some things. We have not been asleep all this time, for we have done more in the last two years than usual, we have built a good church. Our Sunday school has been very good and we have been having prayer meeting every Sunday night for a long time, till now the bad weather has closed it for the present, but will start again soon. Our preaching day is the 1st Sunday evening and the 5th Sundays. Brother J. B. Trogdon is our pastor and we like him and his people very much; he gave us a powerful good sermon today on the creation of man. He doesn't believe that human beings are half monkey. We are glad to say all his sermons are good and inspiring. He is doing a great work here. And Sister Trogdon was a great help to us in our Christmas service.

And we want to say Amen to Bro. Dosier's letter in last issue of the Herald. But we think it will be with some of those Bible Critics as it was with Ingersoll: he was an infidel of some note but when it came to the sun set of life it was all different. He learned that there was behind the universe a supreme power that could not be moved by what man thought, and as he looked into the dim vista of future ages or into the eternal as it were he could see all that he had done was wrong; his own life not only wasted, but what he had written was carrying thousands down to perdition to make his own punishment greater. Just so we expect Payne and Voltaire not only lost but ruined and so it is with such writers today. I kept for a long time a statement that Ingersoll made just before he died. It was a beautiful piece as to what he could realize then but it didn't say whether it gave any hope; we suppose it was too late.

Yours for Christ, F. J. L., Reporter.

Tobe Shepherd.

I was surprised to see the name of Tobe Shepherd in last week's Herald. I thought Tobe died in early infancy. Do you know how Tobe came into existence? It was on this wise. Some twenty years or more in the past at the close of an annual conference. held in High Point the stationing committee had completed its work and reports were sent to the daily papers. As usual some changes were left to be supplied; when we saw a paper next morning we read—Blank Ct.—Tobe Shepherd. It should have read Blank Ct.—"To be Supplied," Tobe was a funny baby; but I thought he died. Imagine my surprise when I saw that he is now a contributor to our church paper.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, our kind Heavenly Father who cred to the Memery of Mrs. James Moore.

On January 8, 1926, the hearts of the mem-rs of Bethel Woman's Foreign Missionary ciety were indeed saddened by the news of e death of Mrs. Elizabeth Moore, wife of . James Moore. The news came as a shock us all, for she had been in her usual health, ing cheerfully about her daily tasks, thank-to minister to those she loved. For years, ough, she had not been strong. Having rt trouble, she knew that she might be ddenly called home. She lived an ideal life d was ready when the summons came, bese for years she had lived and walked h God. "And He walks with me and He ks with me, and He tells me I am His own.
d the joy we share, as we tarry there, none er has ever known." What a blessed ught to live and walk with God; always dy, and just some day walk a little farth-and go home with Him. She always wel-ned everyone with a sweet smile, but now.
y tell us, she is dead. Ah, no; we know she s again, a brighter fuller life. In our imag-tion, we see her smiling still, for we never her any other way. "What is home with-mother?" one of the daughters said. It sad indeed, but there is an eternal Home
l mother is there, ready to welcome again husband, two sons, and two daughters.
this Home you may all go and meet again ther smiling and happy, for she is oh, so py there. There is no parting there; home rnal, home with mother.

Whereas God, who having a fore knowledge all things, and knowing always what is t and who doeth all things well, has seen to call wife and mother home, therefore it

Resolved, that we extend to the husband, s, daughters, grand children, brothers, sis-
, and step-mother our sincere sympathy commend them to our Father's care. Alugh your hearts are breaking, you know
t God is good and never makes a mistake, ow humbly to his will, profit by her daily christian life and meet her some time when God wills.

Resolved, that we, the members of Bethel
W. F. M. S. who also loved her and are sad to have her meet with us no more in our society or church, also bow with humble hearts to His will. We know that we will miss her sadly, but her influence will live on and be an inspiration to us all. We know what it means to love and part for a while, with those dear to us, so from the very depths of our hearts, we sorrow with you.

Resolved, that in memory of her cheerful christian life, we strive to meet all cares and trials with christian fortitude and a smiling face. This is God's will and in accordance with His plan of life for us. Some day, we too will pass through the gate of death and enter into life eternal, 'twill not be long.

"DEPART YE."

Sin brings separation from God. The word "depart," uttered to the workers of iniquity, is not an arbitrary one. It voices a law of God that runs through all his moral realm. Think it not strange, if man is driven from God and goodness who yields himself to sin. By a changeless law of moral repulsion, he is pushed away. Is it hopeless? Yes, as long as his back is turned toward God. But let him "come to himself," let him feel his sin and degradation, let him long for home, for forgiveness, for his Father's face, and the law of changeless love takes hold of him. The law of divine attraction draws him then to God and goodness.

Man-like is it to fall into sin,
Fiend-like is it to dwell therein,
Christ-like is it for sin to grieve,
God-like is it all sin to leave. —Ex.

AN OPEN LETTER.

My dear Tobe,

Yours in last week's Herald was certainly exhilarating. It is good to have companionship with a great mind. (I punctate with a period.) I thought it was possible that some eagle-eyed interpreter might see through all our difficulties and you have arrived on the scene; or is it in the unseen? The Bible is to me a great book—the greatest revelation of God and man we have; so your letter is the more enjoyable, because it carries proof in its face that you have read some of it. Your use of that biblical phrase? "Selah" three times is absolutely convincing. My dear Tobe, it was a master stroke.

I feel quite sure you could join the ministry if you would only put your collar on "hind part before" and get a job of calling the lessons. You ought not to hide your light under a hogshead—you know as well as I do that a bushel wouldn't serve. Besides, the good humor of it is refreshing; that is so much better than snarls and flings. I am so glad that "much learning" does not "make thee mad." It did not do it, Tobe, and I am glad of it. Your article is so clear, so convincing, so strongly expressed, so aptly illustrated with quotations and so good humored withal, that "Almost thou persuadest me" to believe in "Total Depravity." I save a proposition to make you: Let's meet somewhere and discuss it over a good bowl of "pot licker."

Assuring you of my regard I am
Yours very truly, S. R. H.

SOLOMON'S TEST MODERNIZED.

Two women claimed four-year-old Mabel. Irene. One was Mrs. Julia Przybyia, natural mother, and the other was Mrs. Irene Goosen who had cared for the child since birth.

Circuit Court Judge Brennan was in a quandary. In desperation he resorted to King Solomon's famous baby test. He told both women that he would send the child to an institution. Mrs. Przybydia didn't seem to care but Mrs. Goosen became hysterical.

Unknown to the women the judge had a movie camera record their emotions as he told them his decision. Psychologists called in to view the films agreed that the greater love existed in Mrs. Goosen. To the great joy of the latter the judge accordingly awarded her the child.

High Cost Of Peppermint.

More than 60 percent of the world's supply of peppermint is produced in southern Michigan and northern Indiana. Owing to an unseasonable frost last May, followed by a warm spell, there is an acute shortage of peppermint this year. A pound of peppermint oil is now worth almost its weight in silver. Last year's crop in this region amounted to only about 250,000 pounds, which is only 70 per cent of the normal supply. Four years ago peppermint oil was selling for $1.25 a pound last year the maximum was $4; now it is selling for $16 and $17. The oil is used chiefly by manufacturers of tooth paste, candies, chewing gum and various medicines. Something over 400,000 pounds is the normal annual production of peppermint oil throughout the world.

In Honor Of Mrs. Bosher.

Our hearts were shocked with grief Sunday night, January 31, at the sudden death of Mrs. T. C. Bosher, one of our best and most loyal members of West End church. Mrs. Bosher was on her way to the church at the evening service when, after falling while crossing the street car line, she was struck by the oncoming car. Two little boys, the sons of Mrs. Bosher, were accompanying their mother to the place of worship. Of course they saw the distressing situation just as soon as the mother fell, but were unable to stop the fast running car or help Mrs. Bosher from the tracks. So there in the last hour, like little heroes, they signaled the car, even running up the track to flag the motorman, but the deep darkness owing to the present rain prevented the car driver from seeing the little messengers.

Our service for the evening was made into a solemn, grieving prayer or two, with the reading of a Psalm. All hearts were heavy for the loss just realized. The congregation was already assembling at the church when the accident occured. So the sad news struck our hearts with extreme sorrow.

Funeral services were conducted from the home on Longview street Monday afternoon. The writer officiated assisted by Rev. E. E. White of the Baptist church. A host of neighbors and friends of Mrs. Bosher met to share the hour of grief with the family. The floral offerings were of unusual beauty and numerous. This presence of so many friends and loved ones and the wonderful collection of flowers show forth the love and appreciation the community hold for the life of Mrs. Bosher.

Sister Bosher was one of the charter members of West End Methodist Protestant church and the first to be called Home. There is no other more faithful and kind, more loyal and true. Our church and the community like the home, will miss this lovely life, but all things, we know are done in wisdom and tenderness by our Heavenly Father. So we resign our hearts to Him and submit to His righteous will knowing the sweet rest that awaits the children of God. Many were the words of kindness spoken, but none more often than that "She closed her life like she had lived it, moving always towards duty and ..."

Mrs. Bosher is survived by her husband, Mr. T. C. Bosher, who is connected with the Van Lindley nurseries. Five children and five step-children also survive. The children are Wilbur, Sarah, Thaddeus, Dorthy and Ralph Bosher; the step-children are Nita, Samuel, Vernon, Edith and Sheridon.

The sorrowing ones have our deepest sympathy and prayers. You do not grieve alone. We all share your loss and are reminded again of the consoling text: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, Yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

ABIDING IN PEACE.

Dwelling in the secret place of the Most High is a different thing from merely seeking shelter in time of trouble. The home offers a protection, a quietness, and a comfort to those who live there that cannot be extended to a passerby who simply rushes in to escape the storm. Many casual Bible readers fail to make this distinction. "If ye abide in me" is the Master's condition to many a precious promise of bestowal, but "abiding" means much more than being temporarily sheltered.

We miss much of peace and of privilege by living so far away from the great Source of supply. God hears the prayer of the needy soul, and very graciously He answers even the wanderer, but these miss both the strength and the joy of established safety that might be heirs.

"What time I am afraid,
I will put my trust in thee," said David.

But Isaiah had reached a greater peace and sense of security when he could say, "I will trust, and will not be afraid."—Selected.

bout seventy-five years ago David Fried- Strauss, under the influence of the Hege- philosophy, attempted to prove that the el records were a collection of myths. his "mythical theory" died aborning, ave all such theories which have ever been forth before or since.

r. Henry Van Dyke, in his able work he Gospel for An Age of Doubt," puts matter most clearly and forcibly. He s:

The Person of Jesus stands solid in the ory of man. He is indeed more substan- more abiding, in human apprehension, n any form of matter, or any mode of e. The conceptions of earth and air and and water change and melt around Him, the clouds melt and change around an everlasting peak. All attempts to resolve Him into a myth, a legend, an idea—and hundreds of such attempts have been made—have drifted over the enduring reality of His character and left not a rack behind. The result of all criticism, the final verdict of enlightened common-sense, is that Christ is historical. He is such a Person as men could not have imagined if they would, and would not have imagined if they could. He is neither Greek myth nor Hebrew legend. The artist capable of fashioning Him did not exist, nor could he have found the materials, A non-existent Christianity did not spring out of the air and create a Christ. A real Christ appeared in the world and created Christianity."

None, nor all four of the Evangelists, could have invented the character, or could have thought out the teachings of Jesus.

The late Bishop Attieus G. Haygood, in his "Man of Galilee," discusses most cogently and conclusively the inability of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John to imagine such a person as Jesus and to put upon His lips the teachings which they ascribe to Him. He says:

"For such thinking they lacked all things that history and philosphy show to be necessary for such thinking. Why could not Socrates and Plato, great, learned, wise and good, to whom came more than glimpses of heavenly truths, think out what the Sermon on the Mount contains. Socrates and Plato, if mere men sould do surh thinning, ought to have thought out the Sermon on the Mount; for they had every gift which cultured Athens could offer. And they did their best to think out the truths; and Plato sighed for the coming of a divine Man who could make clear what to him was dark. And yet if Jesus never lived, the four Evangelists, or men like them, thought out his wonderful doctrines. It is unthinkable."

The conception of the work and words of Jesus lies utterly beyond the reach of the inventive genius of any man, even the greatest of men. His life was lived. His teachings were uttered, and His deeds were done, or the Gospels themselves exceed in wonder the greatest miracles ascribed to Him. Even the skeptical Rousseau perceived this, and said. "The Gospel has marks of truth so great, so striking, so perfectly inimitable, that the inventor of it would be more astonishing than the hero."

Moreover, Christian history, which has persisted through twenty centuries, and which still goes on before our eyes, could not by any possibility have proceeded from a mere myth. The mighty and beneficent forces of Christianity could not have issued from any other source than that of the real Person of Jesus Christ. Could consequences so pure and institutions so potent have sprung from fiction?

"The mythical theory," stripped of all its delusive speculations, requires us to believe that the mightiest power, which for nearly two millenniums has operated for good and has brought forth a majority of the enterprises and institutions which in our own times are making for the highest welfare of mankind, has sprung from a delusion more unsubstantial than a dream. If the Jesus, depicted by the four evangelists, is no more than an ideal creation and possesses no historical reality, a mere phantom has been, and is more potent for the good of the human race, had all the realities that have ever existed. If we believe such a notion to be well founded, why seek truth since a cunningly devised fable has oeen more fruitful of good than all the truth, scientific and philosophical, that mankind has ever discovered? To such an absurd and repulsive conclusion the logical consequences of "the mythical theory" lead us! It cannot be so.

Jesus is so real and so influential that the ingenious authors and advocates of "the mythical heory" have not been able to publish the boeks in which they set forth their grotesque speculations without dating their publications by what is supposed to be the year of His birth. The small figures near the bottom of their title pages more than refute all that is contained in the volumes which are thus marked by the imprint of His Nativity.

The marvels which the Christian Scriptures record as having attended His birth, and which Strauss and other rationalistic critics would resolve into legendary wonders, are not so astounding as that the religion of Jesus of Nazareth, if it be false, should constrain the world's date-lines to bend around His manger cradle. When commerce makes entries on its ledgers, when governments issue decrees or publish laws, when infants are born or the aged die, when kings or peasants enter into the world, or when they pass through the portals of the tomb, they all pay unavoidable homage to the Babe of Bethlehem. Calendars which so fih dates cannot rest on a floating myth. Absolute accuracy they may miss as when men dated events from when they supposed the world began or Rome was founded. But whether accurate or inaccurate they point to firm and indisputable facts that cannot be reduced to an airy mist. That Jesus was born at Bethlehem some nineteen hundred years ago, lived in the reign of Tiberius, suffered under Pontius Pilate, and was by that Roman procurator crucified, is as certain as that the earth exists or that the city of Rome was built on the Tiber.

These facts are as incontestible as the existence and influence of Christianity among men is notable and unmistakable. And who can deny the extent and benign efforts of the religion of Jesus?

No potentate, who now lives, or who ever has lived, equals in the width of his realm or the power of his authority the breadth and potency of the Kingdom of the Man of Bethlehem and Nazareth, of whom Jean Paul Richter eloquently said, "Jesus, being the Holiest among the mighty and the Mightiest among the holy, has lifted with his pierced hands, empires off their hinges, has turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages."

And this regal reality of Jesus compels the acknowledgement of His claims and constrains the acceptance of His teachings. Truly He spoke as never man spake and He reigns as never man reigned.

Napoleon Bonoparte, a man highly sualified to measure men and determine the forces which produce the most lasting effects upon mankind, was accustomed, in the days of his exile on St. Helena, to discuss, with his attendants, the great men of the ancient world, and to compare himself with them; and one day he turned to Count Montholon and asked abruptly: "Can you tell me who Jesus Christ was?" To his question the count confessed inability to answer, and then the exiled emperor said: "Well, then, I will tell you. Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne, and I myself founded great empires; but upon what did those creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love, and to this day millions would die for Him. I think I can understand something of human nature; and I can tell you all these were men, and I am a man; none else is like Him; Jesus Christ was more than a man.... Across a chasm of eighteen hundred years, Jesus Christ makes a demand which is beyond all others difficult to satisfy; He asks that for which a philosopher may often seek in vain at the hands of his friends, or a father of his children, or a bride of her spouse, or a man of his brother. He asks the human heart; He will have it entirely to Himself. He demands it unconditionally; and forthwith His demand is granted. Wonderful! In defiance of time and space, the soul of man, with all its powers and faculties, becomes an annexation to the empire of Christ. All who sincerely believe in Him experience that remarkable supernatural love toward Him. This phenomenon is unaccountable; it is altogether beyond the scope of man's creative powers. Time, the greatest destroyer, is powerless to extinguish this sacred flame; time can neither exhaust its strength nor put a limit to His range. This is it which strikes me most: I have often thought of it. This it is which proves to me quite convincingly the divinity of Jesus Christ."

Why should Dr. Wise be criticised, or censured, for saying that such a man as Jesus is not a myth?

As a Jew he might have gone much further with reason, and have expressed the most ardent admiratio,n if not adoring affection, for this greatest Son of Israel.

He might at least agree with the liberalistic historian, Lecky, in saying:

"It was reserved for Christianity to present to the world an ideal character, which through all the changes of eighteen centuries has inspired the hearts of men with an impassioned love, has shown itself capable of acting on all nations, ages, temperaments and conditions, has been not only the highest pattern of virtue, but the strongest ineentive to its practice, and has exercised so deep an influence that it may be truly said that the simple record of three short years of active life has done more to regenerate and soften mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers, and all the exhortations of moralists."

"My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved."

Romans x:1; for theirs are "the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever." Romans ix: 4-5.—The Atlanta Journal.

PUT GOD FIRST.

In this fast and materialistic age the Giver of every good and perfect gift is largely ignored. The world has gone wild over the large developments of our advancing civilization. Man's achievements have largely eclipsed those of the Creator in the thought and appreciation of mankind.

Worship and adoration are not so real, devout, and frequent as they might be. Prayer is often formal, listless and unavailing. Delightful and constant communion with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ has become the occupation of the few.

"In vain we tune our formal songs,
In vain we strive to rise,
Hosannas languish on our tongues,
And our devotion dies."

Indications are abundant that ours is a backslidden age. Let us repent most humbly and most heartily of our sins of neglect and forgetfulness. Let us pray and work for an old time Holy Ghost revival. Let us seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness. Let us love, praise, and magnify Him, from whom all blessings flow. Let us, Jacob-like, wrestle at the throne of grace until the full blessing comes. Let us put God first.

A GROWING FIELD FOR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

There seems to be an increasing demand in churches of all denominations for full-time workers, in addition to the pastor. More and more such workers are destined to become a recognized necessity in the church, and in the years that are ahead the full-time worker will be considered along with the pastor when the church makes up its annual program. I am told that one of the large and progressive churches in Greensboro has now about twelve paid workers, and no doubt much that this church is able to do is due to these workers. The whole-time worker is not a fad in modern church life, but rather a response to actual needs and necessities. In many churches no better investment for kingdom service could be made by individuals who have money than to furnish the church with such a worker. In a well organized and progressive church it is impossible for the pastor to do all of the detail work. His preaching and pastoral duties, together with the many calls from without to which he must respond, leave him with but little time and strength for much else. And every one who is at all familiar with church opportunities and church needs knows how difficult it is to secure volunteer workers who can and will give the time and effort necessary to carry on the work. Many of our churches could very greatly add to their efficiency and many times multiply their usefulness by the assistance of consecrated and well prepared young workers employed for full-time service. This does not mean that such workers would or could do all the work required, and that they would displace or debar volunteer workers. On the other hand, they would assist the pastor greatly in discovering and developing local workers through the enlarged and intensified activities of the church.

Let us hope that our church may keep pace with this modern idea of church needs, and that many of our young people may find their places of service in this field.

A SLAP AT MODERNISTIC TEACHING.

Prof. Robt. Dick Wilson, of Princeton Theological Seminary, said before a large gathering of ministers at the Winona Lake Bible School of Theology that there were but two or three Theological Seminaries in the country but what had one or more Destructive Critics teaching thorough modernistic views of the Word of God and the fundamentals of the faith it contains. He declared that the so-called "Assured results of modern scholarship" are indispensable and mustered an array of clearly attested facts to prove his case. He scouted the idea of preachers, who in all their ministerial career never put in more than one solid month in New Testament introduction, and yet sat in judgment on a man like himself who has devoted a half century to the study of New Testament languages and history. The Dean of the Winona Bible School, Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, assured Professor Wilson that Winona, as an institution, is standing for conservative theology, whereupon Professor Wilson replied that he was glad of it, and remarked that any institution that did not stand for the shedding of blood for the remission of sins did not deserve the support of evangelical Christians. Professor Wilson told his audience why he claimed to be an expert. In Berlin at 25 he made a plan for his work: 15 years of study on the text and version of the Old Testament; and 15 years in defense of the authenticity and reliability of the same, all of which he has been providentially able to carry out.

Many theological giants of the country, among them Dr. Wilson, Dr. George L. Robinson, Dr. J. Gresham Machen, Dr. M. G. Kyle and others are on the faculty of the Winona Lake Bible School of Theology, and a tremendous piece of work is being done in defense of the old faith of our fathers.—M. A.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

A few weeks ago we had the pleasure of meeting with the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of our Asheboro church in the home of Mrs. Lewis. On Monday, Feb. 8, we were with the Ladies' Aid Society of our First Church in High Point in the home of Mrs. H. A. Moffitt. And on Monday, Feb. 15, we were with the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of our Reidsville church in the home of Mrs. G. M. Reed. The women in all three of these churches are very active in service for the Master through these organizations. It does seem that there should be these two missionary societies in every church wherever there are even a few women who are zealous in service for their Master, so that they might systematically gather their bits of money for the spread of the Gospel. The Aid Society is needed for local church work, and the missionary societies are needed for the spread of the Gospel beyond our local communities.

Draper.

On Sunday morning, February 14, we were with our people in Draper. We reached the church in time for a part of the Sunday-school and then preached at 11 A. M. The pastor,, Rev. J. S. Riddle, was sick and unable to be in the service. He has been confined to his home for two weeks with influenza and pleurisy. There was quite an epidemic of influenza in Draper, so the congregation was small. We have a very loyal group of people here, but their church so badly needs relocating. It is so far away from everything else. The one redeeming feature about it is that it is a good quiet country place for town people to worship. However, they are faithful workers and God is blessing them in their efforts.

Church Extension Again.

Two weeks of February are already gone, and when you read this there will be fewer than ten days of February left. Our Church Extension Work in the Conference for this year depends upon the action of our churches during February in raising funds for the Annual Conference budget. What shall the result be? We cannot appropriate money we do not have, unless we at least have a prospect of getting it. So please rally your people to do their best for Church Extension before March comes in. Also please be sure to make report to Mr. V. W. Idol; High Point, N. C., by March 1st. Failure to do this will hamper the work just that much. Have you held Annual Conference Day yet? If not, please plan it at once, and do your best for the Annual Conference budget.

A glance at a copy of the Herald for this time last year, and a late copy will show you that we are running considerably behind what we had done financially this time last year. Are we lagging in interest, or have we just forgotten the needs.

A Suggestion.

The women of Bess Chapel church are planning to plant three acres in cotton this year and will give the net proceeds therefrom to the General Conference budget. The Budget Council, last Conference, suggested "God's Acre" as one of the plans for raising the budgets. These women, led by their pastor, are thus planning to carry out this thought, and they are going to try it on three acres in cotton. Our missionary societies or C. E. societies, or Sunday school classes, or individuals, might plan to plant half an acre or more in whatever crop they choose, and give it all, or at least the net increase to the budgets.

Our women and girls might plan to give the price of from one to a half dozen chickens, or the price of a turkey to the budgets. All of us can lay our plans to do some definite thing for the budgets this year, and if we do we will raise far more than we have ever done.

The budgets mean to us what we are undertaking to to for the Lord's work beyond our own local communities. Let us pray and plan and work for big things for our Lord this year. Yours in His service,

A. G. Dixon.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

Four new names appear on the A. C. B. and two on the G. C. B. this week. We welcome these and say a hearty "God bless you." Glen Raven goes over the top on the college assessment. This too is a new name on the lists. Fine, Glen Raven! Last year this charge held a place always near the top and as soon as they get their breath from the effects of last summer's drouth they will be climbing there again. At present there was one fine thing they could do and they did it, paid in full on the college assessment.

At this time 49 charges have been heard from on one or the other of the budgets. In some instances the amounts are not large but it all shows a spirit to help and to do what we can. I know this is a hard year, but if we as individuals have a hard year we are not going to let our church have any harder year than we can help. We will take up the cross and bear it cheerfully for Him. Dear fellow workers, this is a cross and to many a heavy one, but will we falter and fail or will we take it up and bear it to victory? We love the old songs about bearing the cross; let this be a testing time for us and test ourselves as to just how gladly we bear the cross for Him.

According to last Conference we have 90 charges. So we have 51 yet to hear from. We are expecting to hear from every one of these within the next two weeks.

Some splendid gains were made this week. On the College Assessment Albemarle went from third to second and West Forsythe entered at five. On the A. C. B. Asheboro went from thirteen to four. Good work, Asheboro. Siler City made a gain equal to three points, but because of other gains and new entries seems only to have gained one point. That was a good gain with so much competition. Albemarle gained over Forsythe but because of other gains still stands 10. Tabernacle made a good gain, going from 22 to 12. Randleman entered at 16, Union Grove at 25 and West Forsythe at 26. Saxapahaw jumped from 29 to 23 which because of other entries is esual to a jump of ten points, while Rockingham held her own which is equai this time to making a gain of six points. Fine for these; there is a great deal of gain in holding the fort for Jesus, our Captain. On the G. C. B. Albemarle went from 13 to 8, Randleman from 26 to 13, Anderson entered at 20 and Union Grove at 33. This is fine work and as we get away from the handicap of the summer we are going forward rapidly. Every one who can help just now is doing double duty, for "He helps twice who helps first." Ministers and laymen, I am appealing to you on every charge, do your utmost to get all the Annual Conference assessment and all the colege assessment during February. This you will pay sometime this year, then why not get it off early in the year? You will be able to do more for the Kingdom if you get this off at this time. For as one brother said to me last year, "I can do more now to help out because I paid all my assessment early." That is the spirit that makes your church and your charge a "100 per cent. for the Kingdom" charge or church. God bless you all as you work for Him.

A. C. Dixon.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Pastors would render a valuable service to the church, and to all the Boards and greatly relieve the anxiety of the writer if they would secure as much of their church's budget as possible this month, and send promptly to their conference treasurer.

The most urgent need weighs upon us, and you alone can render relief.

Please read my article in this paper entitled "Face the Facts."

Very sincerely yours, Fred C. Klein.

The whole relation of discipleship is a relation of liberty. No one goes to his duty because he must, but only because his heart is in it. His inclinations are that way, for his heart is in the Master's love and he follows gladly.—Horace Bushnell.

PRAYER.

God's ships of treasure sail upon the sea
Of boundless love, of mercy infinite,
To change their course, retard their onward way,
Nor wind nor wave hath might,
Prayer is the tide for which the vessels wait
Ere they can come to port. And if it be
The tide is low, how then canst thou expect
The treasure ship to see?

THE CATBIRD THAT ATE THE CAMPERS' BUTTER.

Catbirds, as you may know, have ways of their own. They are delightful neighbors. The crossest man in the world must feel a little cheerful when he hears catbirds sing. Their songs are rollicking and merry because their hearts are full of joy.

It is true that they do say, "Me-ow, me-ow," like the most disagreeble cat that ever walked the jungle, and that is how their family came byt the name of catbird. But did you ever stop to think why the first catbird may have happened to say "Me-ow, meow?"

It has always seemed to me this way:

Catbird fathers must wish their children to be brave little birds, even while they are babies at home in the nest. Now it may be that away back in the beginning a nestful of catbird babies were afraid of a soft-walking, high-stepping, four-legged bobbed-tailed striped old tiger cat. Perhaps they peeped over the edge of the nest and saw him creeping along, creeping along, under their home bush. It may be too that thosse long-ago nestlings heard one of the first cats in the world say "Me-ow, me-ow."

Don't you suppose the catbird father felt sorry when he saw his babies so frightened that they didn't dare open their mouths for the worms that their mother brought for their breakfast? Of course he did; maybe too he felt cross about it.

But he must have thought that the best thing to do was to make the babies laugh. So perhaps he made fun of that soft-walking, high-stepping, four-legged, bob-tailed, striped old tiger cat. It may be that then and there he said "Me-ow, me-ow," exactly like the old cat that walked the jungle; maybe the catbird father was surprised to find how perfectly he could say "Me-ow."

Perhaps the children laughed, and perhaps they didn't; but father catbird must have had a good time saying "Me-ow, me-ow." He must have thought it was jolly fun, because, as we all know, father catbirds have been saying "Me-ow, me-ow," for hundreds and hundreds of years. Perhaps they are doing it now for fun and to make the children laugh.

Anyway, catbirds are never really cross and disagreeable. The truth is, they are as full of fun as school-boys.

Now the catbird that helped herself to the campers' butter lived in North Dakota. The wild mother catbird, with much advice from wild father catbird, built her nest in a thicket beside a beautiful spot where there were a few trees. She laid her eggs and hatched her little ones. Father catbird rose at dawn every morning and sang in the choir.

Then one fine day a family came to camp in the beautiful spot near the catbirds' nest. Mrs. Catbird immediately fell in love with the camp mother, and no wonder! Father Catbird liked her too; he liked her so well that he never once said "Me-ow, me-ow," at her, not even to make her laugh.

As soon as the camp mother was settled she called upon Mrs. Catbird, and Mrs. Catbird invited her to see the baby catbirds. The little ones looked pretty and behaved well; they were wearing rompers made of soft down just then, and when the camp mother spoke to them they lifted their heads and said, "Peep, peep, peep," most politely .

The next day Mrs. Catbird returned the camp mother's call. She hopped on the breakfast table and helped herself to butter. She took a whole scoopful. Then home she carried good butter to her babies. Scoopful after scoopful of butter the catbird took home to her family. She did the same thing at dinner time, and again at supper time.

Meanwhile Father Catbird sat in the thicket and sang rollicking songs.

Next day the same thing happeued again, and the next day and the next. Every one was happy about it except the camp mother. Mrs. Catbird was pleased to get such a dainty for her children; the babies grew and grew and grew, and Father Catbird sang thankfulness-for-butter songs from dawn until sunset. But the camp mother didn't like to have even the prettiest catbird in the world dipping into her butter.

She tried to keep the butter covered. Mrs. Catbird watched, and the minute the cover was lifted she came to get a scoopful for her babies. It made no difference if guests were invited to dine at the camp; Mrs. Catbird flew to the table just the same and helped herself to butter.

The guests had the fun of sitting at the table and seeing the mother catbird feed the butter to her babies, but the camp mother never could get used to having a catbird dip into her butter. She was so kind and polite, however, that she never said a word to hurt Mrs. Catbird's feelings.

It wasn't long before the butter-fed baby catbirds had all their feathers and learned to fly.

Now this is a true story, and the camp mother was glad when Mrs. Catbird stopped spoiling the butter, but she was sorry when Mrs. Catbird and her babies had flown away and Father Catbird no longer sang rollicking sons in the thicket.—F. M. Fox, in Youth's Companion.

WHEN SHE WENT SHOPPING.

"Have a good time, dear, and remember to tell us all about everything;" then Mrs. Parker's motherly voice was lowered—"here is some money for something you especially want."

An envelope was pressed into Katherine's gloved hand, and with a last, quick kiss she climbed into the car by her father's side, and "started for Fairyland," as she exultantly told her self.

The long thought of, long discussed visit was a reality, the visit to Aunt Harriet, who had a lively interest in the family and kept in pleasant touch with Katherine and her two younger sisters.

The envelope her mother had given her had been thrust hastily into her bag for safekeeping, and now on the train, twenty minutes later, with astonished eyes she examined the roll of bills. Thirty dollars in all! Oh, mother shouldn't have done it; she shouldn't. Mother, who had so little to spend. Thirty dollars! It seemed an immense sum. Why shouldn't flushed fifteen feel that the age of miracles was not yet passed! No milllionaire, riding off in his private car, ever felt richer than did Katherine that late spring day. Turning toward the window so she should not be observed, she securely pinned the precious token inside her blouse.

A moment after, when she leaned over to pick up the book she had brought along to read, the crackling of the envelope made music in her ears, and, at last, putting aside the cheerful story, she gave herself up to the joys of planning. Long, oh, very long, she had wished for a simple little silk frock, soft brown in tone, with a dainty lace collar and cuffs trimming it, and now, now, all her dreams were to come true. How lovely to appear at the class supper, thus arrayed, to come to the junior society at church, or to wear it at one of the concerts at the town hall! She could easily change it a little by adding ribbons or beads. She could almost hear someone saying, "Katherine Parker has very good taste in clothes. I never saw her looking better than she does tonight."

Oh, in the city, toward which she was fast traveling, there must be many, many shops, and in one of them waiting for her was surely a brown frock, a frock with creamy lace collar and cuffs. Already she felt as if it were hers. She hardly glanced out of the window at the swiftly flying landscape, which was new. An hour before familiar scenes had been passed unnoticed, so engrossed was she in her proposed shopping. Aunt Harriet would be a famous guide and advisor, her own clothes being always perfectly chosen.

And then Katherine looked up as they were drawing into an evidently large town, whose buildings loomed dark and forbidding on either side of the tracks. As they drew slowly out of the station, she spied on the platform a girl, looking not unlike herself, and oh, the fascinating sport coat she was wearing! A plaid mixture, whose comfortable looking, mufly collar gave the finishing touch. Why, she might get a coat instead of a dress. A coat could be so useful. So ran her thoughts almost as fast as the train, and then as the darkness fell she began to collect her small belongings, for at seven she was due to arrive at Bellburg, where lived Aunt Harriet.

It was that lady herself, smiling a welcome, both hands outstretched to the young traveller, who met her as she stepped off the train, and Aunt Harriet who drove her home in her own luxurious car.

Thus began Katherine's visit, and what a happy one it was! Certainly the sun never shone brighter, the flowers all seemed to burst into bloom at once, and the house that was to be her home for ten blissful days, was a constant joy to beauty-loving Katherine. Jolly young people were asked in to meet her, sensible, friendly young and out of door sports, and each day people, fond of wholesome pleasure that dawned brought its own especial interests. It was after a musicale at the Woman's Club one evening that Katherine rather shyly introduced the subject of shopping. Thus far they had not explored any of the stores, and now the young visitor confessed that she had an important purchase to make.

"You see, I feel very responsible," and Katherine's round cheeks flushed. "I've never had so much money to spend at one time. Perhaps thirty dollars doesn't sound very much to you, Aunt Harriet, but it does seem a good deal to me."

And I'm glad to say that Aunt Harriet did not even smile, only replying in her kind, understanding way: "I think it is quite an amount to expend wisely, and whenever you are ready, dear child we'll have a shopping trip. Just what do you want to get?"

"Well, here's the trouble," and Katherine sank down at the other end of the couch on which the older woman was sitting. "You'll think I'm foolish maybe, but I can't really make up my mind what to buy. One time I feel that a dress, a sort of brown-y one, is my very biggest need, and again I think a coat would be wonderful. Today," with half-ashamed little laugh, "today, Aunt Harriet I almost decided on two blouses."

"Well, I should say that the best way was to visit some shops and see if what you see there will not help you to make up your mind," and Katherine was suite ready to agree with her. But two days later as they walked into one of the largest department stores, Katherine announced and her tone was firm "I'm looking for the brown dress, Aunt Harriet. Where are they found?"

"I feel that you are wise to decide on a dress. Here, we take this elevator. Fourth floor, please," and holding her bag and its precious contents very, very tightly, and with a fast beating heart, the thrilled young shopper followed her guide.

Bewildering the display, varied the colors brought out dress after dress. With suddenly acquired dignity Katherine composedly surveyed the array.

"I believe that I want that one," she said, her finger on the soft folds of a silky garment, "yet I do like the other one, too. Will you please leave them there while I think a few moments? You might wait on another customer."

Interestedly, Aunt Harriet watched the girl. She had a look of her mother just now, the Katherine she had known and loved in school days. Just such a little puzzled pucker between the brows and a pursing of the full lower lip, and then as they stood, each lost in reverie, an absorbed pair came toward them.

Evidently a girl and her mother, and the girl's voice rose above the hum of the store:

"I am so glad that you are at last going to have a blue silk, mother, one of those sweet, dark blue ones. You never do think enough about your own needs, always of ours, and what we ought to have."

Now they were very near the unnoted shoppers, and the girlish voice was low and caressing. "You will look just dear in your new finery, mother, and how proud father and I will be."

"Oh, do you think so?" The older voice was tremulous with pleasure, and then the two passed out of sight.

As if fascinated, Katherine had watched the mother and daughter, her eyes wide, eagerness growing on every feature. Then her face sobered, and she gave a quick glance at the two brown dresses on the counter before her.

Suddenly, as if no longer in doubt, she started across the store to another department, and her voice was clear as she enquired of the woman who stepped forward: ' I want to see some dark blue dresses, navy blue. Yes, those are pretty, but I'm sure I need a larger size. No, it's not for myself," with a smile. "I'm shopping for my mother."

Surprised, silent, Aunt Harriet, who had followed Katherine, stood unregarding behind the young girl. No indecision now, picking out a dainty blue, well-made dress, she inquired the price.

"Thirty today, Miss," was the answer. "This is a special sale, and you are fortunate to have happened on it."

Out came the rather worn envelope, and with a little satisfied smile in which there was no hint of regret, the roll of bills was laid on the counter, the needful address given, and then a radiant Katherine turned to find her hostess, who, at a nearby counter, was looking over her shopping list.

"I'll 'fess right away," and the young visitor patted the bag that had long held the treasured roll of bills, "for, after all, I changed my mind again, and bought a dress for mother. A strange girl was passing and her words made me decide at once. Aunt Harriet, I'd been thinking of myself all the time, and what a stranger said brought me to my senses. Why, I didn't really need any dress; I just wanted it. And, oh, mother, she's never selfish, always remembering others. Self-forgetting just expresses my mothr. No dress, however beautiful, could make me half as happy as I feel now, when I've bought a surprise one for mother."

"I understand," and Aunt Harriet's keen eyes misted as she looked up at the tall girl

AN ARGUMENT FOR COMBINING DENOMINATIONS.

Editor Methodist Protestant Herald:

A minister of the Christian denomination, speaking in Greensboro recently, according to a report in the Daily News, suggested that the similiarity between the Christian, Congregational, Disciples, Free Will Baptist and Methodist Protestant denominations is so marked that these denominations can and should unite for the purpose of greater efficiency in work and economy in operating expenses. What follows refers to the effect of such union in North Carolina.

If these denominations all united into one denomination, the membership of the united denomination in North Carolina would be 97,700, and, instead of five small, more or less struggling denominations there would be one, financially and numerically strong.

The greatest obstacles in the way of denominational union seem to be a measure of pride, some degree of selfishness, the fear on the part of some that in a merger they would lose position, and a general failure to recognize the fact that denominational divisions are actually retarding the work of the church.

Suppose the above suggested union should be effected, what would be the result? Instead of five state organizations with five overheads, there would be only one—a great saving in operating expenses. Instead of two, three or even four small local churches with the same number of administrative organizations, there would be one, effecting a great saving in expenditure and increased efficiency in organization. This would go far towards solving the problem of scarcity of ministers, would do away with a great deal of overlapping and competition, and would divert into channels for which money is needed much money now used in perpetuating denominations.

I believe, and some may consider this drastic, that the greatest obstacle in the way of the church is its denominational divisions, and that the end for which the church is striving will not be realized until Christian people can ignore personal or group differences of opinion and bring into their church thinking the same sound, co-operative thinking and action that they put into their secular organizations. One church organization not only could, but would, meet all needs if the church would adopt as its only creed the two commandments which Christ said were the greatest—Love God with all your heart and your neighbor as yourself.

Think what it would mean in Greensboro if, instead of four financially handicapped and numerically small denominational churches with four sets of overhead we had one numerically and financially strong church, operated at not exceeding half the expense of the four, with a large, well-organized army of workers to carry on efficiently the work the four are now trying to do under their present handicap.

You who are strong for foreign missions, do you realize how much money you would have for this branch of the work? You who realize a lack of funds for carrying on all the church's activities, do you realize that you would have a great deal more money for these activities? Do you realize that the denominational system is wasteful? That non-Christian people in foreign countries are asking, Why so many divisions of the Christian church if all serve the same God and work for the same end?

Do you say, this is ideal but not practical? Some say this of the teachings of Jesus.

If the amalgamation of a large number of small manufacturing plants under one central management results in greater and better production and larger dividends for the stockholders, would not the same principle applied to the church work equally well? Do we give the same keen, inteligent thinking to our church work that we give to our business?

These are matters which are crying aloud for the attention of thoughtful men and women.

EASTER SERVICE.

We have sent sample copies of the Easter Services to the pastors and Sunday school superintendents of all our annual conferences, as far as we have their names and addresses. If any have not received them please write us at once. In a few cases they have been returned to us marked wrong address. Where there are so many widely scattered it is almost impossible to have them all correct. In some cases pastors and superintendents have changed, of which we have no notice. We have also addressed a letter to each of our Annual Conference Presidents, respectfully requesting their cooperation in having the service used in all of the churches and Sunday schools.

It will interest the members of our churches, particularly the young, in our mission work. The offering taken will help in payment of the General Conference Budget and at the same time greatly aid the Board of Home Missions with its financial problems.

I earnestly appeal to our Annual Conference Presidents, and through them, to the entire denomination to rally to our assistance in making the coming Easter Service a great success.

FACING THE FACTS.

Surely no one imagined when our church sent out its first missionary to Japan, in 1880, that we were thereby discharging our obligations to the heathen world, but all must have recognized that we had at last started an enterprise which was destined to grow.

The work of that lone woman could in no sense represent the service God requires our church to render towards the spiritual conquest of the world.

The entire church must have understood that ministers and other workers would have to be sent to establish churches and schools, to train students to be ministers, Bible women, teachers, etc, and that land and buildings would be required, and that natural growth of the work, for which the churches in America prayed and gave their money, would result. In no other way could Christ's Kingdom be extended over the earth.

To meet the calls for additional workers, and the increase of expenses, and to have direct oversight and management of all the work abroad, the Board and the Society—now merged for administrative purposes as the Union Board—were created.

As the sole source of both workers and money, the churches at home stood in great need of information, and to dispense it, to awaken interest, arouse a missionary spirit, and secure support the two organizations mentioned adopted suitable plans.

After forty-five years what is the situation? There is a Mission Conference in Japan, China and India, 25 American missionaries are now on the field, and 23 native ministers, 49 pastors and evangelists and 12 Bible women, and in round numbers 4000 church members, as many or more Sunday school scholars, several Girls' schools, and also Boys' schools, including Nagoya College with over 1100 students, 18 theological students, medical work, etc, etc.

For the number of workers and the amount of money spent, no other denomination can show better or larger results in those lands, nor a more economical administration.

Here at home we challenge any similar board in America to show less expense in administering such a work. We have tried no experiments and have adopted no extravagant policy or plans, but used such methods as all denominations employ, and the growth has been natural.

But great as has been the progress of the work in our three Missions, and despite the strictest economy of administration at home, there being no expense for office rent or stenographer, and earnest as have been the efforts to enlist the entire church, the work has not been sufficiently manned, buildings have been urgently needed, and insufficient income has hampered operations.

This fiscal year is no exception, for the church is not responding sufficiently, for the Budget receipts have been altogether too small for the Union Board's monthly expenses, especially at this time of year, as heretofore.

For the information of pastors and members, three of our very foremost annual conferences sent to general church treasurer last month, January, to apply on our Board's percentage one less than $10., another less than $20., another less than $40., and the strongest one of all sent in $692. as Children's Day offering, and that more was raised last summer.

It is utterly impossible for the Union Board to meet its monthly obligations under such conditions, and the overdraft at the bank is a serious embarrassment, for the Board has no collateral to put up for an outside loan and our general treasurer's borrowing limit has been reached.

The remedy is for the churches to pay their budget of which the Board receives its alloted percentage, and we most earnestly appeal to pastors to do their utmost to send to their conference treasurer this month as much of the budget on their charge as possible.

We have come to a critical stage, and relief must be afforded, and we can only turn to you and your members, so do not fail us. For all the other Boards are also vitally concerned.

TREASURERS! PASTORS! NOTICE!

Please remember that the offerings taken at Christmas when the program published by the Budget Council is used are not to be credited to any special board, but to the General Conference Budget. In spite of the fact that this information has been given wide publicity, many pastors and conference treasurers continue to send the Christmas offering to headquarters designating it for one of the boards. This error defeats the purpose of the Budget Council in trying to encourage a larger support of the full program of the denomination as comprehended in the General Conference Budget. The Christmas offerings are for the General Conference Budget and are not to be designated for any other cause or board.

SECRETARY WILBUR ON PRAYER.

In a recent address, Curtis D. Wilbur, Secretary of the Navy, disclosed a familiarity with the subject of prayer that should prove helpful to many. He said: "It is clear that every prayer cannot be answered by granting it, not only because different people would pray for exactly the opposite things to happen at the same time, but also because if a mere petition were sufficient to bring about a result asked for, God would virtually be yielding His sovereignty and jurisdiction to any and every one who happens to be interested enough to submit a petition, even if that request conflicted with His sovereign purpose.

"There is, however," he pointed out, "a law of prayer, and it is suggested that the statement of Christ, 'Ask and ye shall receive,' means that we must ask "according to His will;' that is, if we pray according to the will of God, we then will receive an answer. But we may well say, if we pray according to the will of God, why do we need to pray at all? If it is God's will that things shall come to pass, why do we need to concern ourselves about the result, or to pray for it to come to pass? I think there is a much deeper significance in the principle involved. It is clear that throughout all times, from the very dawn of creation, the laws which bring about radio communication were established, and if there had been creatures knowing enough to bring together the necessary material and to properly operate that material, there would at any time through all the centuries have been the same result as there is upon which our radio communication is based today. We may, therefore, say that it was always according to the will of God that men should be able to transmit intelligency through space. The thing necessary was to ascertain the plan or method of transmitting the voice, and, having done so, to follow that plan."

One of the fundamental requisites of prayer, he pointed out, is that we shall ask for the help, for the light, for the prosperity, for the health, for the preservation which we crave. It may be said, as Christ said, "Your Heavenly Father knoweth that you have need of these things." Some one who is rather skeptical may say: "If God knows that we need these things and loves us, why need we ask Him?" The question is a mere attempt to substitute our way for God's way. We must learn the law of prayer if we are to pray successfully, and the first and most clear requisite of prayer is that there shall be prayer; there is a relation between the asking and the receiving.

"Prayer," he held to be "the greatest problem of life, for in it is hidden the relationship between man and his Maker—the co-operation of the created thing with the Creator—in the working out of the complicated problems in the life of the individual and his relationship to other human beings. Christ said that we should pray without ceasing. It is clear, then, that our attitude, our lives should be one of prayer. We should live a prayer; and to live a prayer, one must seek to have his life and his purpose acceptable to God."—Selected.

"DEPART YE."

Sin brings separation from God. The word "depart," uttered to the workers of iniquity, is not an arbitrary one. It voices a law of God that runs through all his moral realm. Think it not strange, if man is driven from God and goodness who yields himself to sin. By a changeless law of moral repulsion, he is pushed away. Is it hopeless? Yes, as long as his back is turned toward God. But let him "come to himself," let him feel his sin and degradation, let him long for home, for forgiveness, for his Father's face, and the law of changeless love takes hold of him. The law of divine attraction draws him then to God and goodness.

Man-like is it to fall into sin,
Fiend-like is it to dwell therein,
Christ-like is it for sin to grieve,
God-like is it all sin to leave. —Ex.

UNSOUGHT HAPPINESS.

Try to breathe in the fragrance of the blossoming grape, or to smell it as the saying goes, and it is next to impossible to detect the delicate perfume. So it is with the trailing arbutus; its faint, elusive odor escapes the vigorous and determined effort to enjoy it. But in another moment perhaps, the sense is taken unaware, and perceives the exquisite fragrance that makes one say 'O-o-o!" with that long breath of satisfaction that cannot be mistaken.

Thus it is with happiness many and many a time. It eludes the too eager and premeditated search. The very pursuit seems to prevent the realization. But sometimes when one goes upon a sterner errand with no thought of finding pleasure, but simply of doing duty, suddenly the unsought joy may meet him on the way, with a breath as sweet as the strange delicious odor of the unobtrusive bloom upon the vine, or of the shy Mayflower that trails along the sheltered places in the spring.—Selected.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Rev. Roy Irwin Farmer, President of the Ohio Methodist Protestant Young People's Union, Steubenville, Ohio, who will be with us in the Young People's Conference, to be held at High Point College, July 19-26, and who will teach a course in "Vocational Guidance" and will conduct the Life Work Decision Service.

Young People's Conference.

The Board of Young People's Work is working out a program for a young people's conference far in advance of any we have ever had. The dates this year are Monday night through Monday noon, July 19th to 26th. The delegates and ministers will be entertained in the college dormitories and will hold their night sessions together, with an inspirational message from some outstanding worker.

The conference in session last November requested that, so far as might be possible, all churches try to keep these dates clear of revival meetings and other engagements so that their young people might feel free to attend. Also it is urged that all pastors be released from active duties during this week so that they might attend. WHY NOT plan to send your pastor and pay all his expenses? It would be a good investment for he would come back inspired for a greater work in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society and with a greater understanding of the problems of young people's work.

Among the speakers and workers who have accepted places on the program are: Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., Executive Secretary of our denominational Board of Young People's Work; Rev. R. I. Farmer, president of the Ohio Conference Union; Dr. Thompson, of Drew Theological Seminary; Dr. A. G. Dixon, president of the North Carolina Conference; Mrs. A. G. Dixon, president of the denominational Woman's Home Missionary Society; Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., former president of our Conference Young People's Board and now pastor of a church in Chicago; Rev. D. L. Fouts, associate pastor and director of religious education in Community Church, Thomasville; Rev. R. C. Stubbins, pastor of Enfield Charge; and Rev. Hewitt Cunningham field secretary of the All-South Christian Endeavor Extension Committee.

We have also invited the following and expect them to be with us: Dr. C. E. Forlines, of Westminster Theological Seminary; Dr. E. D. Brauson, of University of North Carolina; and Dr. E. D. Stone, of Baltimore, Md.

BEGIN PLANNING NOW to attend this conference. You will always look back upon it as a time when you walked closer to Christ than ever before and as a time when you had an enlarged vision of the possibilities of your life in Christian service.

A Wonderful Response!

Last year we asked the friends of our people over the state to help us pay the expenses of the conference by registering at a nominal fee of only 50 cents. A campaign was put on throughout the conference, asking everybody who was interested in our youth to register whether they could attend or not. Our goal was set at 1500 registrations. We didn't register 1500 folks—BUT ACTUALLY 1794! That was a wonderful response. The fact that 1794 folks in North Carolina are interested in the youth of our church means that we are surely going forward.

Again This Year?

We are asking again this year that all who are interested in training the leadership of our church for tomorrow register to help us take care of the expenses of the conference which includes advertising, postage, expenses of speakers and faculty members, material for class room work, etc.

The registration fees are: 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

There has been a contest used by one of our wide-awake young people's societies in order to familiarize its members with the names of our missionaries, both home and foreign workers. We are indeed fortunate in being able to get this contest for our department, and will suggest that auxiliaries use this in some monthly program soon, then will the president or secretary keep all papers in the contest and write me for the "answers" in order to grade their contestants? Those who get perfect answers, may I have their names to publish in this department? Later on, when many auxiliaries have used the contest, the list of correct answers of the contest will be printed also herein.

Let's give this a try. We will learn more about our missionaries, and it will do us good. Who will be the first secretary to write you have used the contest and wish the list of answers? Each question can be answered by either the Christian name or the surname of our workers at home and abroad.

THERE'S A LOT OF FUN IN LIVING.

There's a lot of fun in living,
  And we've found it, you and I,
In giving and forgiving,
  In passing thorns all by,
But picking all the roses
  Of friendliness and cheer,
In getting all the gladness
  While we're here.
There's a lot of fun in labor,
  And we've found it, I and you,
There's a lot of fun in labor,
  And we've found it, I and you,
In loving kin and neighbor
  As the day we hurry through:
There's fun in making sadness
  And worry disappear,
In giving people gladness
  While we're here.

ORANGES FROM HEAVEN.

People often exclaim: "Wonders will never cease!" And they say what is quite true. How can wonders cease with such a wonderful God in heaven, with whom nothing is too hard—nothing is impossible?

Miss Endicott was on board a ship bound for America. Tossed up and down and sideways at once by the big waves of the Atlantic, the lady in her berth nearly died from sea-sickness. She shuddered at the thought of food; yet something she must eat to keep alive at all; and after trying various things it was discovered that she could take oranges. So all the oranges in the ship were claimed by the kind-hearted stewardess for the benefit of this poor lady and day by day she was getting weaker for she could eat very little.

At last, one stormy day, when the vessel was pitching and tossing more violently than ever the stewardess came into the cabin with a troubled face.

"I don't know what we are going to do for you now," she said, "for this is the very last orange we have left;" and she showed her the treasure—more valuable at that moment than its own weight in gold.

Miss Endicott's face, however, did not reflect the cloud on that of her kind friend. She took the fruit thankfully. "What I have to do now," she said, "is to make the most of this. If I have to die, I am not afraid, but I know God can send me some more, if it is His will."

"Send more oranges in mid-ocean!" thought the stewardess, though she would not distress the invalid by uttering her thoughts aloud. They were something like those of the great man of old when Elisha promised that the next day there should be abundance of food in Samaria in a time of terrible famine. "Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be?"

"It is stormy enough," thought the good woman, as she went on deck; "if it would rain oranges the poor dear might be supplied—but hardly otherwise. No, no, I don't see how she can get more."

She eagerly cast quick glances over the

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FEB. 21.

Jesus Raises Lazarus to Life.

Lesson Text: John 11:32:44.

Golden Text: John 11:25.

The Central Truth: Jesus, who is the way the truth, and the life, has come into the world "that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly."

Scriptural Points.

1. It is recorded that "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus." He manifested this love by visiting them frequently. He made their home His home when He was in Judea.

2. The message that Lazarus was sick must have touched His heart deeply. But He permitted him to grow worse and die, not because He did not care, but that He might bring a greater blessing to that home by His being raised from the dead.

3. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of his sleep." That is Jesus' definition of death, asleep till the resurrection. Of the dead daughter of Jairus He said, "She is not dead but sleepeth." And this definition is true to fact. The spirit it is the real personality, the body is the vessel, or house, in which the spirit resides for the time being; the spirit does not, cannot die.

4. To strengthen Martha's weak faith Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." A most stupendous claim! none but God Himself could make and make good such a claim. Mark the present tense—"I am the resurrection and the life," not I am going to be.

5. Both Martha and Mary had faith that Jesus could have restored Lazarus to health, but not that He could now restore him to life. To each death was a long night of waiting.

6. "Jesus wept." Jesus' love for Lazarus was the least motive for these tears, for Lazarus was better off now than he had ever been, or ever could be, in this world. Down in His soul Jesus no doubt rejoiced that Lazarus had made a safe trip to glory. His tears were tears of sympathy, not of loss. He shared so deeply the grief of the two sisters He mingled His tears with theirs. His love for them made Him weep.

7. "Take ye away the stone." These were poor people, not able to have a sepulchre hewn out of the solid rock. It was a shallow cave, protruding into the Mount of Olives no doubt. A large stone closed the entrance. This command that others remove the stone sets forth the truth of human instrumentality, that God never does for us what we can do for ourselves.

8. "Thou shouldest see the glory of God." God is glorified more when He is seen what He does for mankind than in what men may do for him. The word glory is derived from the word glow. The glory of God is therefore the glowing or shining of God's goodness, love and power in this world of sin and sickness. The love and power of Jesus as the Son of God glowed forth in the raising of Lazarus.

9. "Lazarus, come forth." Jesus thus spoke not to the body, but to the soul of Lazarus. His eyes were still lifted to heaven, as mentioned in verse 41. It was the recall of the departed spirit that constituted the real raising from the dead. It was the miracle of reunion of soul to the body.

10. "Loose him, and let him go." It was not a restoration to the illness to which he had succumbed, but a restoration to strong, vigorous health. Doubtless every one was happier over his return to earth than Lazarus himself. To enchant the better world for the worse one surely could not appeal to him strongly. No doubt he was glad to be back and rejoice with the two dear old sisters.

Practical Points.

1. God permits many dark providences in order that He may bestow a great blessing. Material losses and physical tribulations are often the means to promote spiritual elevation. "Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept thy word," exclaimed the Psalmist.

2. Faith and tribulation give assurance of many benefits from the riches of His life. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." Rom. 8:28.

3. "If a man die shall he live again?" is a question as old as the race. The ministry of Jesus Christ is the all-sufficient answer to this question. "He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John 11:25,26.

4. Having set us glorious goal, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10:31.

5. But God is chiefly glorified in the exercise and [illegible] of His saints. In His intercessory prayer Jesus said: "And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them." John 17:10.

6. Holy living also glorifies the Father of spirits. "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." 1 Cor. 6:19,20.

7. Human prejudices, limitations to the freedom of the saving, uplifting and glorifying power of God. The unbelief [illegible] Christ is manifold. Others are indifference, self-satisfaction, unforgiveness, impenitence, and formalism. "Take ye away the stone." Gives God the right of way.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—FEB. 28.

Jesus Teaches Respect for Law.

Lesson Text: Matt. 22:15-22.

Golden Text: Matt. 5:17.

The Central Truth: The civil government [illegible] of God to be respected, upheld, and [illegible] loss.

Exegetical Points.

1. "That they might entangle him in their talk." Jesus had entered the world of thought. He was a [illegible] of other men's minds. He spoke with authority. He was a man with a message of His own. He was gathering a following. He was even becoming popular. Multitudes were waiting upon His ministry. The Jewish leaders were frightened. They feared a loss of prestige and favor. They proposed to match wits with this new leader and, discount Him before the masses, and drive Him from the intellectual field.

2. They proposed to impale Him upon either horn of a terrible dilemma. Aside from empty and insincere compliments, they asked, "Is it lawful to give tribue to Caesar, or not." Is Caesar or Jehovah the rightful sovereign of the Jewish race? Since paying taxes to the Roman government is an acceptance, endorsement, and support of this government, does not such payment repudiate the age-long claims of God? To answer this question in the affirmative Jesus would have offended the Pharisees, shown His disloyalty to social ideals, and become liable to trial and death at the hands of the Sanhedrin. On the other hand if He replied that it was not lawful to give tribute to Caesar, the Herodians stood ready to hand Him over to the Roman soldiers for summary punishment as a leader of sedition against the Roman government.

3. Jesus' usual method of answering a question was to ask another. So on this occasion He inquired concerning the penny that was brought Him: "Whose is this image and superscription?" He was promptly told that they were Caesar's. In accepting Caesar's money as their medium of circulation the Jews had accepted Caesar's government as their own government. And in so doing they had assumed full responsibility to that government.

4. "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." In this authoritative statement Jesus declared a separation of church and state. They should function separately, and be supported separately. Jesus also taught here that moral, personal, and financial support of the civil government was a bounden duty of all its citizens. He further more taught that the claims of God upon the individual and the masses were supreme, that faith, homage, prayer, thanksgiving, service and gifts should be rendered unto the Sovereign of all the worlds, and that immortal destiny hinged upon such faithful rendering.

5. This answer was a solar plexus blow. His enemies admitted their defeat at argument and withdrew in sore disappointment to formulate another plot against His life.

Practical Points.

1. All civil government, normally conceived and executed, represents "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords." "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. 13:1.

2. The stability and benefits of civil government depend upon the conscientious observance of its laws, loyalty to its ideals, and full support to its program. Lawlessness is an attempt at national suicide, and invites personal and national disaster. "Whosoever resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." Rom. 13:2.

3. The payment of taxes, the choice of rulers, and enlistment in defence of the country are patriotic duties. "Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honor to whom honor." Rom. 13:7.

4. Common honesty is a virtue of large value. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." Love is the supreme debt that each owes to his fellow mankind.

5. The Christian experience, life, and conduct are the claims of a just and merciful God. Be honest with God. "He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God." Micah. 6:8.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Golden Rule.

Text: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. 7:12.

The apostle Paul in his sermon on Mars' Hill set forth the fact that God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth," that "we are also his offspring," and that therefore God is "the Father of the spirits of all flesh." This fact of a universal brotherhood sets forth the truth that each individual has an equal standing before God and before each other. All government of the people, for the people, and by the people is based upon a recognition of this equal standing.

The Golden Rule of Jesus Christ also declares that man was created free and equal and possessing equal rights before the law of Almighty God. This is true despite the various inequalities that have arisen through the forces of heredity, industry, circumstance, and the social fabric.

The Golden Rule is first of all

A Rule of Justice.

"Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" The wise and merciful Sovereign of souls is not partial in His dealings with the children of men. In the ultimate and vital sense He gives to each an equal opportunity and responsibility. There are ample compensations arranged to offset any inequalities that may arise not of a moral character. But there can be no compensation granted for selling any God-given birthright.

The arbiter in the observance of the Golden Rule is not the fallen selfish nature, as some suppose, nor even the consensus of public opinion, but the enlightened Christian conscience. This rule of just, fair, and equal dealing was given to guide the conduct of Christians, not sinners. We are commanded to do to others and for others just what our enlightened judgment would approve being done for us if positions or circumstances should be reversed. The square deal must be reciprocated.

Justice is the fundamental virtue. We must be just before we are generous, or even merciful. For Jesus Christ was just in suffering the penalty of the broken law before He was merciful in forgiving the sinner. We must allow each the same rights that we [illegible] ourselves.

But the Golden Rule is also

A Rule of Love.

Self love of the worthy, commendable [illegible] is indispensable to the highest welfare [illegible] sus recognized the force of self-love in the second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The instinct of self preservation is strong in every [illegible] being. "For no man ever yet hated his own flesh."

A craving to be loved is a passion of the human race. And love is the cure-all of every ill of life. Love will make a saint out of a sinner, a friend out of an enemy a citizen out of a savage, and an heir of glory out of a pilgrim to hell.

Generous, unstinted love is enjoined by the Golden Rule. Abounding, unrestrained, and unconditioned love is the need of the time. Love, because it is great to love, so Godlike, so uplifting, so heavenly. Love the other fellow, though he may be a snake in the grass, though he may be entirely unworthy of love, and though he may be an enemy; yet love him in sentiment and in deed, because you own soul craves love from others. And love will win love.

And again the Golden Rule is A Rule of Happiness.

The inborn desire for pleasure is deep-rooted and imperative. To have a good time, without any compromise with sin, is a worthy aim of every normal being. And the wise and merciful Creator has made large provisions for happiness. There is beauty and grandeur to delight the eye, music to please the ear, fragrance to enrapture the sense of smell, and countless form of food to gratify the taste. And there is learning to give joy to the mind, religion to make the soul to rejoice, and immortality to glorify the hope of man.

To make others happy is the unfailing recipe of securing happiness for ourselves. A Shakespeare says: "Giving is twice blessed: it blesses him that gives and him that takes."

And the Golden Rule is lastly

A Rule of Destiny.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This applies to time and also to eternity. There is a partial reaping during the present life and a full harvest in the life to come. Sow justice, love, and happiness and you will reap returns of the same. "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

At the Judgment Jesus will say, "I was ahungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me..... Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

These services of loving kindness are the simple and inevitable observances of the Golden Rule. The record of every life will be compared and judged according to this rule of justice, love, and happiness. "Therefore Much sickness in the vicinity of the Harmony Church. In spite of this the crowds are good, and interest is increasing.

Our church at Cross anchor, known as Yarborough's Chapel, was well entertained last week by a body of people from Union who gave a beautiful program of music and song. We hope to be able to repaint our church his summer.

MYSTERIOUS SNOWBALLS.

By Florence Leninger.

Clyde and Edwin were next-door neighbors. The back doors of their homes opened together, and madet a fine place to play. They lived in a northern State where the ground is covered with snow for weeks at a time in winter.

One of the boys' favorite games for winter time was Snowball Tag. They had built a solid wall of snow almost six feet long and more than two feet high in Clyde's back yard, and another just like it across in Edwin's yard. It was great fun building these snow walls and making them firm so that they would stand almost the whole winter. All the boys and girls in the neighborhood helped build the walls, and played Snowball Tag from behind them every evening after school.

Clyde and Edwin would always choose sides, so that there was the same number of children in each team. Then each boy took his team behind his snow wall for a hiding-place, and the fun began. The children in each team tried to tag those in the other by hitting them with soft snowballs.

Whenever a head peeped over the snow wall or a body scooted away from it to get fresh snow, a ball would come flying from behind the other wall. When any child was hit he had to go over to the other side. Each team tried hard to get all the other team's players. Sometimes Clyde's team won and sometimes Edwin's.

Every noon Clyde and Edwin spent a little time making snowballs, to have them ready for the evening game. When they had a nice pile of white balls, they would carry half of them behind each wall.

One noon the boys got a great many snowballs made, and they divided them equally. That evening when they got home from school there were only three or four snowballs behind Edwin's wall, and all the rest were in Clyde's pile. When Edwin saw that his were gone he ran and looked at Clyde's and said, "You've been cheating; you took my snowballs."

Clyde was as surprised as Edwin, and said, "I don't know how these balls got over here. I was at school all afternoon."

They carried Edwin's share back to his side, and the boys and girls played until Clyde's team had all been tagged and taken by the other side.

The next noon the boys made snowballs again and divided them equally. That evening every ball was behind Clyde's wall. It was a mystery. No one could understand how they got there. The children carried half of them to Edwin's side and had a game. But Clyde did not enjoy it very much, because he was afraid that Edwin thought he had been trying to cheat.

Next evening the two boys ran home together as soon as school was out. When they got in sight of the snow walls they saw something that made them shout and laugh.

There was Clyde's little three-year-old brother Bobby, in his red cap and sweater and leggings, trotting across the yards from Edwin's snow wall to Clyde's. In each chubby hand he was carrying a white ball.

"Bobby, what are you doing?" cried Clyde.

"Bobby giving brother all the nice balls," said the little fellow, smiling happily, as if Clyde should be greatly pleased.

"Well, that tells the story," said Clyde as the other children came, ready for their game.

Edwin laughed at Bobby's happy smile and said, "I am glad we caught you, little red man. And I'll not say again that Clyde isn't playing fair."—Our Little Ones.

The seventh-grade room was terribly ex-cited. Marjorie [illegible] was giving a party — a big, grand party, and she was inviting seventeen girls.

"You are going to come, Marjorie," asked one of the girls in the playground.

Marjorie looked around and then, leaning over to the girl answered: "I am going to invite every girl in this seventh room except Lois Brown. She hasn't a decent thing to wear."

The excited girls. "Are you sure?"

"Every one in the room," cried Marjorie, and each dimpled face, "except Lois."

And Lois was not invited.

"LET DOWN YOUR NETS."

Launch out into the deep,
The awful depths of a world's despair;
Hearts that are breaking and eyes that weep,
Sorrow and ruin and death are there.
And the sea is wide, and the pitiless tide
Bears on its bosom away—away,
Beauty and youth in relentless ruth
To its dark abyss for aye—for aye.
But the Master's voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!
He stands in our midst on our wreck-strewn strand
And sweet and royal is his command.
His pleading call
To each and all
And wherever the royal call is heard,
There hangs the nets of the royal Word,
Trust to the royal Master's will:
Trust to the nets and not to your skill,
Let down your nets each day, each hour,
For the word of a king is a word of power;
And the King's own voice comes over the sea,
"Let down your nets for a draught" for me!

LIGHT ON OUR PATHWAY.

Read Galatians 5:16-26.

Life is perflexing; its ways are not always clear. Yet remember this: we do not need to see life as a whole in order to walk straight ahead. There are problems which do not need to trouble us too greatly because their solution is not essential to this day's life, or tomorrow's. We can walk by the light we have. God's Spirit is sufficient for our present needs. Ask God for direction for each day, seek for the Spirit's direction as each occasion arises, and the road will be light as we advance. Half of the trouble of life arises from anticipating difficulty. God's leading is sufficient for the present day; leave the future to the leading of His Holy Spirit.—Living Church.

whose face was glorified by her sacrifice. "You'll never regret what you have done today, dear, and self-forgetting is what we all need."

As Katherine slipped into her simple, pleated skirt and blouse that evening, which costume she feared was growing rather familiar to her young friends here, she felt strangely satisfied and at peace. In her trunk, carefully folded away in its gay flowered box, lay a blue dress, the dress that was for mother, and somehow she felt far richer than as if it were the soft-toned brown frock that she had almost purchased a few hours before.

It was three days later, and Mrs. Parker was helping Katherine unpack her trunk.

Almost every garment, as it was lifted out, recalled some pleasant experience or happening, and they lingered long over their task. But it was not until a certain box was reached did the young traveler grow silent.

"Open it, mother," she burst out; "please open it. Inside is something I want you to take, for I bought it for you."

So open it Katherine's mother did, lifting carefully out of its tissue paper wrappings the dainty blue dress, studying it with puzzled eyes.

"For me, you say, Katherine," looking at the lustrous blue folds and then at her daughter's transformed face. "Why, how did you have money enough, child! Katherine, Katherine, you bought this lovely dress for me instead of using that thirty dollars for yourself. It touches me very, very much; it's just what I need; but, oh, it makes mother

"It needn't," and Katherine dropped a kiss right on the soft coil of hair in which a few gray hairs were shining. "It made me happy, perfectly happy, to bring home this present to the best mother a girl ever had, and now you must try it on right away. You see, I remembered your size. Oh, here is the girdle; we left it in the box. Why, why," for her quick eyes had spied an envelope directed to herself in Aunt Harriet's firm hand, and the envelope was pinned to a package, a flat package, which, all unheeded, had lain all the time under the blue dress. Tearing open the note, Katherine read aloud this message: "I loved you or your willing sacrifice, Katherine, and it makes me happy to just tuck in the brown frock you fancied; for a little good-bye gift to my guest. Wear it, dear child, and think of Aunt Harriet."

"Oh, mother, it's too wonderful," and Katherine clasped the precious gift in eager arms. "I hope, I do hope, that I deserve it."—Alix Thorn, in Presbyterian Banner.

DEATH OF DR. C. L. WHITAKER.

High Point.—The community was shocked l saddened on Thursday evening when the ws was flashed over the city that Dr. C. Whitaker, popular and beloved instructor l Librarian at High Point College, had succumbed to a heart attack at his home on College Circle drive at a few minutes past 7 lock. He was making preparations to come the First Church to the monthly supper of Men's Club, and started to drive out m his garage in his car, which became ck in the mud. He made an effort to excate it when the attack came on, and he l prostrate on his back porch, where Mrs. hitaker found him. He never spoke again, d passed away before a physician could ch him.

Rev. Clifton Lawrence Whitaker D. D. was rn near Enfield, N. C. in May, 1863, and ceived his education at Oak Ridge Institute d Yadkin College. From early boyhood the ea of preaching the gospel obsessed his nd, and was his greatest ambition. At the e of 20 this ambition took definite form: began to study to that end, and joined the C. Conference in 1887, being assigned to e Mocksville circuit. He served numerous arges in the eastern and Piedmont sections the state, was elected President of the nference in 1900, which position he filled ceptably for two years. In 1905-'06 he serv- as pastor at High Point, then for three ars at Enfield and Whitakers, his old home. om 1909 to 1914 he was pastor at Asheboro, ere he was exceedingly popular and beved. His last pastorate was on North Davidn Circuit, and when High Point College ened its doors in September, 1924, Dr. hitaker came as Instructor. For the past mester he was Librarian and taught two asses in Bible. The degree of D. D. was bowed on him by Western Maryland College.

Rev. Whitaker married in early young manod Miss Clara Peebdes of Davie Co., who s been a most faithful and congenial companion through the years, entering into and aiding him in every phase of his work as minister. She has been an ideal preacher's wife in the truest sense of the word. Three children were born to them, one having died at a tender age while the family was living in Greensboro. The two surviving are Mrs. Lewis White of Greensboro and Clifton L. Whitaker, Jr., of Gastonia.

Dr. Whitaker was devoted to his church, and gave the best years of his life unstintedly to service for its advancement and upbuilding. Socially he was affable and sweet-spirited, and drew many friends to him. Since coming to High Point College he endeared himself to faculty and stadents, and exerted a most wholesome Christian influence on the young people within its walls. They are stunned and grief-stricken today. In addition to his wife, son, and daughter, Dr. Whitaker is survived by his brother, Rev. C. H. Whitaker and a sister, Mrs. W. C. Whitaker of Enfield.

Funeral services were conducted in the First Church on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. and a large concourse of relatives and friends assembled to do honor to his memory. Dr. Geo. R. Brown read extract from the Scriptures, Dr. A. G. Dixon made a touching prayer, and Dr. Andrews delivered a beautiful eulogy. A quartette, composed of Prof. Dan W. Smith, Mr. Carey Davis, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, and Miss Ruth Vuncannon, sang "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," "Asleep in Jesus," and "Abide with Me." The active pall-bearers were members of the Faculty of the College, W. F. McAnless, P. S. Kennett, J. H. Allred, N. P. Yarborough, J. H. Moraine and P. E. Lindley, and J. D. Hardy. The honorary pall-bearers were the ministers present. The unusually beautiful floral designs were carried by members of the student body of the College, Nat Bethea, Fred Hauser, Elwood Carroll, Harris Meador, Fred Love, Chas. Brooks, Floyd Garrett, Grover Angel, James Rogers, Jabey Braxton, and Bruce Yokeley. The body was taken to Greensboro where interment was made in Green Hill cemetery. Classes at the College were suspended on Friday and Saturday, and the students attended the funeral services in a body. Among the out-of-town ministers in attendance were seen; Rev. Messrs. J. H. Moton, S. W. Taylor, L. W. Gerringer, Edward Suits, R. S. Troxler; S. K. Spahr, and many others. A number of relatives of Mrs. Whitaker from Lexington also attended, among them being her aunt and uncle, Capt. and Mrs. Chas. M. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Lowe, Mrs. Cliff Thompson, her sister, Mrs. John C. Hunt, and Mr. and Mrs. R. N. Hadley of Lynchburf, Va.

—Hope thou in God!

—The editor spent last Sunday and Monday in Pittsburgh, Pa., visiting in the family of his older son who since his graduation from the University of N. C. has been in the employ of the Westinghouse Company. On Sunday we attended Sunday school and church services at the Fourth Church of which our friend, Brother Leland, is pastor. Four years ago the congregation was worshiping in a temporay wooden tabernacle. Now they have a substantial stone building, well planned and well furnished. Brother Leland is a great worker and knows how to induce others to work. Among the Sunday school teachers are twe or three Jewish converts to Christianity. The church has also built a parsonage, "The Duplex." The name indicates that the house is built for two families. The upper portion is rented for about enough to pay the interest and taxes on the whole. The church is paying itself out of debt. On Monday morning we were permitted to meet the Pittsburgh preachers of our church (most of them) in their weekly meeting. The death of Rev. A. R. Seaman was reported there and the hopeless illness of Dr. B. W. Anthony, former president of Adrian College. The new publishing agent, Bro. Darling, was introduced. The principal address of the meeting was by a representative of the National Reform Association which has headquarters in Pittsburgh.

We found Dr. Davis and Dr. Johnson very busy with their editorial work, but not too busy to be kindly courteous. We also found Brother Stephenson, Educational Secretary, at his desk. Other friends and acquaintances of former days we also met, including Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur. Our stay was full of interest. We are indebted to Dr. A. J. Allen for special kindnesses during our stay. He bears a striking resemblance to our brother, J. M. Millikan, of Greensboro.

—We must insist on matter for publication being sent in earlier. In the case of church reports, we do not expect the matter before Tuesday or Wednesday, but other copy might be sent in by Friday of the previous week. It is impossible for our machine to set all matter the first part of the week. It takes all the week to set up our type. Please send in your matter as soon as possible.

—The editor regrets that his prearranged trip to Pittsburgh prevented his attending the funeral of Dr. C. L. Yhitaker.

—There is much sickness in the land and many are dying. If you are well, be thankful and remember kindly and helpfully the ones that are sick.

—Exalt your purposes to the level of God's plan for you.

DON'T BE A KNOCKER.

Don't knock when a brother has had a downfall,
Don't knock when he makes a mistake;
You know not how soon you yourself may fall,
Or a far worse error may make.
Don't judge when you feel a sister has sinned
Of how great her sin may be,
For you yourself may also have sinned,
Your own sins you may fail to see.
Don't listen to tales of slanderous tongues,
For many in this take delight;
You know not how soon they may lie about you,
Then to you it won't seem quite so right.
Don't tell all the scandals you daily will hear—
Too many mouths have told them before.
And when they reach you they are nothing but lies—
Don't add to the tale your "one more."
Don't think no one else could be right in his views,
Just because you with them don't agree;
Stop and reason that they, too, could be in the right
And much in the wrong you could be.
Don't think that you're better than anyone else,
Don't try all their failings to find;
Remember, if others should do this to you.
You would think that they were more than unkind.
Don't pick and don't knock, don't slur and don't judge
Of others, for this often is true
That those whom you're sitting in judgment upon Undoubtedly are better than you.

GEORGE WASHINGTON: GREAT UTTERANCES REVEALING GREAT CHARACTER.

By H. H. Smith.

William Roscoe Thayer, describing Washington's personal appearance and bearing at the beginning of the Revolutionary War, closed with these words: "Most men, after they had been with him a while, felt a sense of his majesty grow upon them, a sense that he was made of common flesh like them, but of something uncommon besides, something very high and very precious."

Woodrow Wilson, speaking of Washington's acceptance of the commssion of commander-in-chief of the armies of the Revolution, says: "Washington accepted his commission with that mixture of modesty and pride that made men love and honor him. 'You may believe me, my dear Patsy,' were his simple words to his wife, 'when I assure you in the most solemn manner, that, so far from seeking this appointment, I have used every endeavor in my power to avoid it, not only from unwillingness to part with you and the family, but from a consciousness of its being a trust too great for my capacity..... But, as it has been a kind of destiny that has thrown me upon this service, I shall hope that my undertaking it is designed to answer some good purpose.....It was utterly out of my power to refuse this appointment, without exposing my character to such censures as would have reflected dishonor upon myself and given pain to my friends.'"

He spoke in the same tone to the Congress, and in closing said: "As to pay, sir, I beg leave to assure the Congress, that, as no pecuniary consideration could have tempted me to accept this arduous employment at the expense of my domestic ease and happiness, I do not wish to make any profit from it. I will keep an exact account of my expenses. These, I doubt not, they will discharge and that is all I desire."

Thayer says: "We should not overlook the fact that Washington declined all gifts, including a donation from Virginia, for his services as General during the war. Unlike Marlborough, Nelson, and Wellington, and other foreign chieftains on whom grateful countrymen conferred fortunes and high titles, Washington remains as the one great state-founder who literally gave his services to his country."

At one time, during the French and Indian wars, Washington's task was "the hopeless work of keeping 350 miles of frontier with a few hundred men against prowling bands of savages, masters of the craft of swift and secret attack." The heart of the great man is seen in this trying situation. "The supplicating tears of the women, and moving petitions of the men," cried the young commander, "melt me into deadly sorrow that I solemnly declare, if I know my own mind, I could offer myself a willing sacrifice to the butchering enemy, provided that would contribute to the people's ease.....I would be a willing offer to savage fury, and die by inches to save a people."

"Virtues That Animate Remotest Ages."

In his address to Congress, resigning his military commission at the close of the war, he said:

"Happy in the confirmation of our independence and sovereignity and pleased with the opportunity afforded the United States of becoming a respectable nation, I resign with satisfaction the appointment I accepted with diffidence; a diffidence in my abilities to accomplish so arduous a task, which, however, was superseded by a confidence in the rectitude of our cause, the support of the supreme power of the union, and the patronage of heaven.".....

"I consider it as an indispensable duty to close this last act of my official life, by commending the interests of our dearest country to the protection of Almighty God, and those who have the superintendence of them to His holy keeping."

General Mifflin, President of the Congress, in giving the answer of Congress, said: "Having defended the standard of liberty in this new world; having taught a new lesson useful to those who inflict, and to those who feel oppression, you retire from the great theatre of action with the blessings of your fellow-citizens; but the glory of your virtues will not terminate with your military command: it will continue to animate remotest ages."

When it was suggested by some officers, after the surrender of Cornwallis, that a monarchy be set up with Washington as king, "he was cut to the quick that his own officers should deem him an adventurer, willing to advance his own power at the expense of the very principles he had fought for." "Be assured, sir," said the indignant commander, "no occurence in the course of the war has given me more painful sensations than your information of there being such ideas existing in the army.....I am much at a loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which to me seems big with the greatest mischiefs that can befall my country. If I am not deceived in the knowledge of myself, you could not have found a person to whom your schemes are more disagreeable.....Let me conjure you, if you have any regard for your country, concern for yourself or posterity, or respect for me, to banish these thoughts from your mind, and never communicate, as from yourself or any one else, a sentiment of the like nature."

Washington's Opinion On Profanity.

A General Order of the Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army, issued at New York in July, 1776, reads: "The General is sorry to be informed that the foolish and wicked practice of profane cursing and swearing, a vice heretofore little known in an American army, is growing into fashion. He hopes the officers will, by example as well as by influence, endeavor to check it, and that both they and the men will reflect that we can have little hope of the blessing of heaven on our arms if we insult it by our impiety and folly. Added to this, it is a vice so mean and low without any temptation, that every man of sense and characer detests and despises it."

Only six months before Washington's death, when the clouds of war again seemed to be gathering, he was appealed to by McHenry, the Secretary of War: "You see how the storm thickens, and that our vessel will soon require its ancient pilot. Will you—may we flatter ourselves, that in a crisis so awful and important, you will accept the command of all hearts and all hands, if it is possible that they can be united." Washington's reply to President Adams was: "As my whole life has been dedicated to my country in one shape or another, for the poor remains of it, it is not an object to contend for ease and quiet, when all that is valuable is at stake, further than to be satisfied that the sacrifice I should make of these is acceptable and desired by my country."

"A Consolation Within."

The best of men have their traducers and the noble Washington was no exception. Happy man who can meet his adversaries with such words as Washington met his. When a scurrilous attack was made upon him by his enemies, writing to Henry Lee, he said: "But in what will this abuse terminate? For the result, as it respects myself, I care not; for I have a consolation within that no earthly efforts can deprive me of, and that is, that neither ambition nor interested motives have influenced my conduct. The arrows of malevolence, therefore, however barbed and well pointed, never can reach the most vulnerable rt of me; though whilst I am up as a mark, ey will be continually aimed.''

Paul Leicester Ford, in his book, ''The ue George Washington,'' says: ''Both his emies and his friends bore evidence to his nesty. Jefferson said, 'His integrity was st pure, his justice the most inflexible I ve ever known, no motives of interest or nsanguinity or friendship or hatred being le to bias his decision. He was indeed in ery sense of the word, a wise, a good, and great man.' ''

DUCATION AND RELIGION—A COMING REVIVAL.

Near the end of ''The Outline of History,'' enry G. Wells, its author, is deeply stirred he contemplates the next stage in history. e Great War ended a period, we are in a nsition state, what is to follow? Mr. Wells ys:

''Education is the preparation of the indivi- al for the community, and his religious ining is the core of that preparation. With e great intellectual restatements and expan- ons of the nineteenh century, an education- break-up, a confusion and loss of aim in ucation, was inevitable. We can no longer epare the individual for a community when r ideas of a community are shattered and dergoing reconstruction. The old loyalties, e old limited and narrow political and so- al assumptions, the old too elaborate reli- ous formulae, have lost their power of con- ction, and the greater ideas of a world state d of an economic commonwealth have been nning their way only very slowly to rec- nition. So far they have swayed only a inority of exceptional people. But out of e trouble and tragedy of this present time ere may emerge a moral and intellectual vival, a religious revival, of a simplicity and ope to draw together men of alien races and w discrete traditions into one common and stained way of living for the world's ser- ce. We cannot foretell the scope and power such a revival; we cannot even produce idence of its onset. The beginnings of such ings are never conspicuous. Great move- ents of the racial soul come at first 'like thief in the night,' and then suddenly are scovered to be powerful and world-wide eligious emotion—stripped of corruptions d freed from its last priestly entangle- ents—may presently blow through life again ke a great wind, bursting the doors and nging open the shutters of the individual fe, and making many things possible and sy that in these present days of exhaustion em almost too difficult to desire.

''If we suppose a sufficient righteousness d intelligence in men to produce present- , from the tremendous lessons of history, effective will for a world peace—that is say, an effective will for a world law un- r a world government—for in no other shion is a secure world peace conceivable— what manner may we expect things to ove towards this end? That movement will rtainly not go on equally in every country, or is it likely to take at first one uniform ode of expression. Here it will find a con- nial and stimulating atmosphere, here it will find itself antagonistic to deep tradition or racial idiosyncracy or well-organized base oppositions. In some cases those to whom the call of the new order has come will be living in a state almost ready to serve the ends of the greater political synthesis, in others they will have to fight like conspirators against the rule of evil laws. There is little in the political constitution of such countries as the United States or Switzerland that would impede their coalescence upon terms of frank give and take with other equally civilized confederations. Political systems involving dependent areas and 'subject peoples' such as the Turkish Empire was before the Great War, seem to require something in the nature of a breaking up before they can be adapted to a federal world system. Any state obsessed by traditions of an aggressive foreign policy will be difficult to assimilate into a world combination. But though here the government may be helpful, and here dark and hostile, the essential task of men of goodwill in all states and countries remains the same, it is an educational task, and its very essence is to bring to the minds of all men everywhere, as a necessary basis for world co-operation, a new telling and interpretation, a common interpretation, of history.''

WORSHIP.

You can worship God in your home Sundays—But do you?

You can worship God in the woods and in the fields—But do you?

You can worship God on the road in the auto or train—But do you?

You can worship God by the lakes and rivers—But do you?

Without a church of your own, you can worship God in a different church each Sunday—But do you?

Without making a subscription, you can worship God with as large gifts as though you contributed regularly—But do you?

You can gladden our hearts by bringing your family and worshiping with us in God's house—We shall expect you next Sunday.

TOBACCO "DISINFECTANT" DEFENSE RIDDLED.

Will H. Brown.

Dr. Alexander D. McConachie, M. D., of Baltimore, read a paper at a union meeting of the Maryland State Dental Association and the District of Columbia Dental Society, held at Baltimore, in which he made this statement:

''W. D. Miller, of Berlin, isolated more than one hundred different kinds of bacteria from the secretions and deposits in the mouth. and strange as it may seem to those who believe in the antiseptic properties of tobacco, found them to be MOST NUMEROUS in the FILTHIEST MOUTH, that of the TOBACCO-CHEWER.''

The Irish Tobacco Trade Journal, in its November, 1924, issue, reporting the experiments of Dr. George Wolff, the well-known physician of Frankfurt, Germany, with tobacco in relation to germs, quotes him as saying: ''Tobacco smoke hinders the growth and expansion of germs, though it DOES NOT destroy them.'' During the experiments Dr. Wolff exposed various germs to tobacco smoke, and put them together with ''unsmoked'' germs, into an oven generating a heat of 37 degress centigrade, and found that ''the unsmoked germs grew more rapidly than the others.''

Let us remember, also, that ''unsmoked BOYS grow more rapidly than the SMOKED or smoking boys.''

Dr. William Brady, in answer to the question, ''What cures are obtained through inhaling and smoking cigarettes?'' says: ''It cures the habit of concentrating, and in many cases where there is a hereditary tendency to amount to anything, it seems to overcome that tendency.''

WOW! The doctor knows He's telling the world some of the things tobacco does.

Abraham Lincoln said, ''Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in the schools, in the seminaries, in the colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation.''

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

My first thought was not to write another letter until after sight-seeing in Madeira, but there are so many interesting things happening, thought best to report them as they come.

Last night was called Christian Herald night and Mr. Graham Patterson told us many interesting things about the magazine. One was when asked the terms of a life subscription, that he discouraged that, while they could use the money, he wanted each person to feel that they were getting the worth of their money each year and that they wanted the paper to keep coming —that endowments in most cases encouraged laziness.

Then we had a talk from Judge Arthur J. Baldwin who owns seventy thousand reindeers in Alaska. He predicted that the time would come when Alaska would furnish the United States with meat. And by the way we had reindeer steak yesterday for dinner (supper) and it was very good. The fact is, I am trying some of all kinds just to see what some of the things are that are billed. Have plenty of time and a great variety. He told us that the reindeer was the oldest domesticated animal on this continent. Just a few years ago the United States government through the recommendation of a missionary in Alaska brought over from Siberia 1060 reindeer and loaned them in fives to the Eskimos with the understanding that they pay back that number in a given time and now there are over five hundred thousand there. They live mainly by getting the moss from under the snow. There were many interesting travels that he gave which I have not time to enumerate here, but may in a later paper.

Rev. George Switzer was also introduced.

A very old man who was the pastor of Mrs. Geo. Lew Wallace, the wife of the author of "Ben Hur." Gen. Wallace was not a member of the church but a great friend of Dr. Switzer. This minister was pastor of the family at the time Gen. Wallace wrote "The Prince of India."

It was stated last night in the meeting that this was the first trip to cruise the Mediterranean without a bar. All on board who have travelled before are proud that they are not bothered with the drinkers.

During our meeting one brother arose and stated that seven hunded miles north of us an S. O. S. call was being sent out, "Come at once we are sinking fast." But our ship was out of reach so we did not change our course, but Dr. Sheldon led in prayer that the crew might be rescued. This caused us all to think of the possibility of the peril that might come to us at any time.

This morning on the bulletin boards was stated that the "S. S. Roosevelt" had gone to the rescue of the "S. S. Antinoe" and had rescued the entire crew at 4 A. M. If there were people on that vessel who were skeptical I wish they knew that the prayers of five hundred Christian people were offered for them.

Many problems are being discussed on board by our leaders, and these discussions are being led by Drs. Clark and Sheldon. One is that much discussed question, "Are our young people worse than in other days?"

Dr. Sheldon told us this morning that some forty or fifty years ago a student at Yale dared go to communion, the only one to go; that when he came back a table was laid in his room by the students in his absence and on his return there was a mock service held and he was forced to take part in it. "Do you think such a thing possible today?" the question was asked.

The general opinion was that because of a lack of worship in the home, no Bible taught or even read in many public schools, by the time our boys and girls go to college in many cases there was no love for the holy taught and that caused many to neglect the things worthwhile.

This vessel is very interesting. They only take on twenty-one thousand barrels of oil for fuel. The engine room is a world within itself. While being shown through yesterday I met a man in the work by the name of Bethea. He told me he would meet me on deck later and talk over our kinship. The chief engineer is from Washington, N. C.

Tomorrow, Friday night, we will dock at Funchal, Madeira and spend Saturday sightseeing, and all the letters I have written and posted aboard will start back toward America. Then it will be six more days before I hear from loved ones which will be at Naples

On Board S. S. Republic, Jan. 28

Friday night about nine o'clock was the first sight of land we had gotten since leaving New York the twenty-first.

We were gathered in the Social room when some called out that land was sighted. The light-house was first sighted and the hazy moonlight gave us our first view of the mountains on Madeira. Everybody was anxious to see the anchor cast. But being tired I never waited for that performance, but retired so as to be ready for landing Saturday morning.

We have ten groups of fifty each and I am in group B. One. That saves the necessity of having to be the first or being last. So by the time I awoke this morning the first thing I heard was the cry of the Portuguese boy divers who had lined up on the sides of the vessel where we were to disembark—the front side.

They were there calling for money to see them dive. Deep enough for a ship—that draws thirty-six feet of water. These boys with thin bathing suits on, some not over eight, it seemed to me, would dive right off by the ship's side from their little boats and catch a dime—nothing less,—they would not jump for anything less—before it would get ten feet under. They could swim likefrogs and of course it was new to the tourists and quite a good deal of money was thrown over before we started ashore.

To describe this city in all of its beauty nestled up against the side of this great mountain which is three thousand three hundred feet above sea level would take a word painter with rare gifts. Many of our company, in fact all I heard describe it, said it was one of the finest views they had ever seen.

Landing, we walked to the railway station where we boarded a cog wheel train that took us to the top in about forty-five minutes—four miles. On top, at a very fine up-to-date hotel we ate dinner, or luncheon as they call it. By this time it was raining and our view of the ocean and the city was cut off. We saw it looking up, but not looking down.

Soon after eating we started down on a sled, for we had our choice either sled or train. This is something like a settee with a slide arrangement underneath. Two natives with ropes would guide it, hold back when it got too fast, pulling when it got slow. We came very near being upset once as the trail down is laid with small rock across the road in ridges about like sweet potato ridges. These are made so these men would have a brace to either pull or put on brakes—the latter generally. One of these projected up and whirled us around. Brother Ballard from Greensboro and Brother Corn from Adrian, Michigan, were with me. So the good Lord took care of us and kept us from being spilled down the mountain-side.

These men who were running our slide got mighty tired over half-way down and said we would have to let them rest. Their rest was at a wine shop. They wanted to be tipped off with a drink. Whn assured that we were not in that business they pulled on.

They landed us at the railway station and then we three set out on a tour of the town, without a guide. I felt secure as these folks like myeslf were all stunned somewhere when growth was in order, and Brother Corn being so large I felt that they would be afraid of him.

As soon as we started the fun began. Every store of every order keeps wine to sell, other things are a side line. Corn being a big red faced, two-hundred-pounder, they always tackled him to sell the wine. We went in all kinds of stores and the wine was ever there. One man, when we wouldn't buy, brought out some samples to get us to try it. On being told we were ministers and did not drink he said, "Oh, de priest, he drink wine." We saw one big fat priest with his red sox and white collar with a red band, and a long black frock on, smoking a cigarette. One man with only one shoe and it nearly worn out, smoking a cigarette.

And the beggars! They beggar my description. One hundred and eighty-five housand on the island, ninety thousand in this city of Funchal, and it seemel to me half of them were beggars. Poor priest-ridden people. What dissipation doesn't get from some of them the priests do. If you did not see the city till you got on the filthy narrow streets you would not think it beautiful. But the narrow streets walled in keep you from seeing all. This is one place where distance lends enchantment. There are many beautiful castles on the mountain side.

Promptly at five we sailed and our next landing is Gibraltar. Many pathetic and many amusing sights today but I must desist.

The Board of Young People's Work of the Methodist Protestant Church has prepared a Christian Endeavor wall chart covering the new Fidelity Campaign of he United Society, adapting it to the use of Methodist Protestant Christian Endeavorers. It covers the entire program and can be used in conjunction with the United Society chart.

If you desire a real program for the development of your Christian Endeavor, here it is. We will mail a copy to each Christian Endeavor president whose name and address we have on file.

We do not make any charge for the chart, however, if you desire to send us fifty cents to cover expenses, it will be appreciated, but do not let this stand in the way of using the program. We want your society to receive the benefits derived therefrom.

Please send to Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., 516 N. Charles street, Baltimore, Md., the name and address of your Christian Endeavor president and you will receive a chart.

E. A. Sexsmith, Executive Secretary.

—On Feb. 15 a monument erected by the government of Cuba at a cost of three-quarters of a million dollars was unveiled at Havana, Cuba. The monument is a memorial to the 260 Americans who lost their lives in the sinking of the U. S. battleship Maine in Havana harbor, Feb. 15, 1898. Representatives of our State, War and Navy Departments, and of the Senate and the House of Representatives attended the ceremonies.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

The workers fall by the way, but the work must go on.. May God help all of us to be more faithful to Him and to each other.

Rev. Clifton Lawrence Whitaker, D. D.

I am sure you were shocked, as I was, when the sad news came announcing the sudden going home of Dr. C. L. Whtaker of the High Point College. Dr. Whitaker was president of the North Carolina Annual Conference when I joned it in 1901 at Henderson and certainly during my 25 years in the conference, he has been an outstanding figure among us. He has been our conference lawyer since the passing of Rev. W. A. Bunch. All of us delighted to turn to him concerning points of church law, feeling that when we had his opinion we had the last word on it. He was a broad-gaged man, always big enough to rise above differences of opinion.

We never know just how badly we will miss a man like Dr. Whitaker until we are called upon to give him up. We shall miss him in the counsels of our church. I counted him my friend, and as such I shall miss him.

After a full day's work as librarian and professor of the High Point College, while the evening shades were gathering about him and while he was preparing to go to a Brotherhood supper at the First Methodist Protstant Church in High Point, the summons suddenly came and his spirit went back to the God who gave it. We loved him and we shall miss him.

An obituary committee will be appointed soon, so I will not further anticipate what the committee shall say in a more lengthy statement concerning the life and works of this our fallen comrade.

Welch Memorial.

Sunday morning, February 21, was spent with Brother T. E. Pierce and his people at Welch Memorial, and it was delightful to be with them both in the Sunday school and the preaching services. This church is in fine shape at this time. They have had a most wonderful meeting since conference, and the pastor tells me that he has received over 80 members within the last few weeks. They had 165 in Sunday school and the interest is such as to make one feel good to be there. If they keep growing like this they will soon need more room to house their people. The pastors holding about four shop meetings per week besides his regular church services. They are planning to pay 50 per cent, or more, on their A. C. B. by the first of March.

English Street.

At the evening service last Sunday it was my pleasure and privilege to be with Brother W. M. Pike and his people at English Street. Brother Pike seems happy in the work, and his people are delighted with him. The position there was not an easy one to handle when Brother Pike took it, and a less careful man would not have handled it so well; but the church now seems to be in fine condition. The Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Society as well as the church services are all well attended. These people are planning to pay thir A. C. B. in full by the first of March.

Lebanon.

On Monday evening, March 22, I had the pleasure of accompanying Rev. J. R. Hutton to Lebanon to attend a revival being held there by "The Gang" of High Point. This is a group of young men which was organized for Christian service during the Stephens meeting in High Point. An older man who was present last night told me that there had been something like 2,000 conversions in and around High Point since the Stephens meetings closed last fall. This is not our old-time way of holding evangelistic services. and some who desire to move true to form may find many things to criticise about these meetings, but the thing we are after is to get men and women converted, and to get them into our churches, and to get them to work for the Master. The meeting last night was a good one and held in a most enthusiastic way The people of Lebanon are ready to pay their A. C. B. in full by March 1. If it were not anticipating our treasurer's report to me, I would report Lebanon out this week.

Church Extension Once More.

In the field of Church Extension we have done some of the best work within North Carolina that we have been able to do at all during the last few years. We must not let this work lag. And yet our work for this year, according to conference action, depends upon our collections for Church Extension during February. It is encouraging to know that so many of our charges are doing so well in raising the annual conference budget during this month; but there are a number of the charges not yet heard from. Surely every charge will report by the first of March. The first day of March is Monday, so please send in all the conference money you have that day. And if more is to follow soon it will be helpful if you will report that fact. We are just depending upon every charge to respond to this appeal for Church Extension funds, and if any one charge, or if any one church fails to respond then the cause of Church Extension suffers just that much. So please report to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., next Monday.

Not Forgetting the General Conference Budget.

According to conference action we are pressing for the A. C. B. during February. We have not forgotten, and we would not have you forget that every opportuniiy should be seized to pay every dollar possible on the G. C. B.

Easter will soon be upon us, and for some years now the Easter offering has gone to Home Missions. Order your Easter programs and supplies from Rev. J. M. Sheridan, D.D., 516 North Carles Street, Baltimore, Md., and begin getting ready for the Easter services. and lay it upon the hearts of the people that this affords a good opportunity to pay up all claims for home missions.. Tweny-three per cent of the G. C. B. goes to the Board of Home Missions, and Easter is a good time to raise that much of your apportionment for the G. C. B.

Every pastor will do well to make much of Holy Week as a time of ingathering into the church, as well as a time to collect for home missions. Decision Day should be planned for that time, and all Sunday school pupils who are not Christians should be led to accept Christ, and brought into the church at this time. Lay your plans to put across a great program for the Lord and His church at Easter. Easter comes this year the first Sunday in April, so there is just about one month to ge ready for it.

Rev. R. E. Andrews.

For some reason the name of Rev. R. E. Andrews was left out of the last Conference Journal. No one is to blame for it that I know of. It is a matter for the Conference Faculty to straighten out next fall. In the meantime Brother Andrews tells me that he has his credentials showing that he was received into the conference at its sessions in Concord. I gladly make this statement that his friends may know that we hold nothing against the character of Brother Andrews, nor did he withdraw from the Conference.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G Dixon.

REV. E. G. COWAN AND HIS FAMILY.

You will be glad to know that Brother Cowan is much improved in health though still under the care of physicians. But this last Sunday evening Mrs. Cowan was ordered to the hospital by her doctor, and underwent a rather heavy operation early Monday morning. The doctor thinks she will have to remain in the hospital for about three weeks. The doctors are very kind in not charging any fees, but hospital bills and living expenses must be met.

Letters have gone to all Sunday school superintendents in the conference asking for a free-will offering. Many have responded, and we thank you. Others are planning to respond, and we also thank you.

One superintendent in replying said, "I want to apologize for not giving attention to this sooner; for if our Sunday school training does not cause us to give in a case of this kind then our teaching is in vain."

If all Sunday schools which have not responded to this call would respond right away, I would not have to urge this again.

A few individuals have sent offerings, and we thank these. I am sure others would send donations if they realized the need, and if they knew how much these dear people appreciate this help. The oldest son is at work making all he can.. Please send contributions to me at 126 Tate street, Greensboro, N. C.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

—John D. Rockfeller, Jr., has offered to give the sum of 10 million dollars to the Egyptian nation for the ercetion and upkeep of a big museum at Cairo. However, he lays down certain conditions that King Faud, of Egypt, has not yet accepted. He would have the museum under the control of American directors. King Faud, on the other hand, would have the museum under full control of the Egyptian government.

ON BOARD S. S. REPUBLIC JAN. 25.

My trip from Lexington to New York was of no interest more than the fact I got no sleep. The Pullman conductor claimed that the agent at Lexington had no right to sell me the berth he did. The reason as I saw it was that he had a claim to sell it before I got on. So he put me on a lower in the rear of the Ford Pullman and one of the fenders was loose so that kept up such a racket that by the time I got used to that, one of the wheels had a puncture or a blow out—anyway the wheel bumped like a flat tire with the check valve hitting the hard surface roads. Any way it was too early to call on Mr. Coolidge when we reached Washington and as I was traveling on a Southern permit I changed there and took the "Colonial Express" which took us along at a rapid rate.

I boarded a car in Washington that looked good and nice looking men were getting on it; but just before the train pulled out a man called out "This is a smoker, car for ladies in the rear." So I grabbed my hand bag and so did the ladies and so did most of the negroes on board that car. Yes, they have no color line so far as the race is concerned, but I notice that those same people who criticise our "Jim Crow" cars will hunt around lots before they will sit down by a colored person.

One of the things that impressed me was the vast amount of unreclaimed land lying along the Penn. R. R. No ice when I left home but there was ice in the Delaware, but we didn't have the trouble Washington had when he surprised the British.

I have been in the North several times before, but this was my first time to see the Mason and Dixon line sign that made me feel just a little different, though not a feeling of prejudice.

Well, after landing in New York and having my trunk carried over to the Pier of the Republic in Hoboken I began to try to locate my friend Mr. Bullen, representative of the London Times, for he came to meet me and my train was twenty-five minutes earlier than I expected. But I found him at his hotel, the Albert, naturally, he's an Englishman and his wife a very genial Scotch lady. They showed me every courtesy and left off nothing that would give me comfort and pleasure. I even went to the Times Garden Theater with them to see charming Pollocks play—"The Enemy," which I am sure if everybody could see it would arouse them against war. We went sight-seeing then till 12:15 A. M.

Early next morning we were out and free then till time to get to boat at 2 P. M. We were on the go.

Visited New York Public Library, sat down in George Washington's pew where he worshipped while in New York City, visited "the Little Church around the Corner" took luncheon 34 stories up in the Bankers Club, of which my friend is a member and visited many other places of interest that the average American knows about if he has never seen. Then we were loaded in a "Tribe" and shot clear under the Hudson River and on landing on the pier I was besieged by newspaper men with their cameras and I thought I had become famous over night—I can tell you why later. I wonder if those machines are working now.

In my next I can tell you whether I was charitable with the fish or not. N. G. Bethea.

BUDGET COUNCIL ACTIVITIES.

Inquiries sometimes reach the Secretaries of the various denominational Boards regarding the activities of the Budget Council. "We see nothing about it," they say, and are inclined to feel nothing has been accomplished.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee and Budget Council this matter was discussed, and it seems advisable to give a brief account of some of our activities. Briefly stated, the following are specific features of the Budget Council work.

1. Articles were formulated and presented to each of our annual conferences for distributon. These articles contemplate the organization of Annual Conference Budget Councils composed of the President, Secretary and Treasurer, and as many more as the local authorities feel may be necessary. This Annual Conference Budget Council forms a point of contact between the denominational Budget Council and the local congregations. Wherever this plan has been followed gratifying results have taken place.

2. The Budget Council meets monthly at which time reports are made by the several Secretaries, the situation canvassed, further plans made, and attention given to any oher matters directly related to our work.

3. Since the cost of the programs for the special days is paid out of the undesignated funds of the Church instead of by the Boards interested, all programs and essential plans for the special days are reviewed by the Budget Council. An effort is being made to reduce the cost of the programs to as low a point as may be consistent with the largest service to the causes represented.

4. The denominational territory has been divided into four areas, over which each Secretary has been placed as special Councillor. He is not a supervisor or commander-in-chief. His functions are primarily advisory and co-operative.

5. Each Secretary has endeavored to make his correspondence with the pastors of his area a personal contact that would secure the largest possible response to the denominational program. The practice of writing letters indiscriminately and showering them upon the pastors has been studiously avoided. Letters go out only when it is necessary.

6. A number of leaflets have been published by the authority of the Budget Council. These have been very brief and strictly to the point. They have been sent to the pastors with an accompanying letter urging them to use the utmost discretion in distributiug them to their people. The Budget Council is seriously in the dark as to the value of this feature of their work.

7. Group meetings have been held by each Secretary in one or more of the conferences of their area. These have proved very helpful in many ways. It has brought the Secretaries closer to the people and encouraged the pastors. The Budget Council considers this one of the most effective phases of t activities.

8. Coupled with the usual visitation of t Secretaries to the sessions of the Annual Co ferences each one has endeavored to bri to bear upon our leaders the whole progra of the Church. They have not gone out representatives of their particular enterpri but as representing the unified program the denomination.

9. The most successful single service we ha rendered the Church is in the distribution the Christmas program. The last General Co ference had discontinued the Christmas se vice known as Educational Day, leaving on three special days, Rally Day, Easter, a Children's Day. The requests from our pe ple were so numerous and urgent the Budg Council felt justified in offering the Chri mas service again. Their suggestion was sar tioned by the Executive Committee. Secreta E. A. Sexsmith, in whose charge this matt was placed, reports that 446 orders were r ceived. A number of our annual conferenc had special programs or campaigns under w which interfered with a larger support this plan. However, the response of the chur has been most gratifying, and generous fi ancial returns are anticipated. To Februa 1st the church Treasurer had received $15 from the Christmas offerings.

Needless to say the Budget Council has m a number of hindering circumstances, pr venting them from accomplishing their obj tives in as large a way as might be hoped f In the first place, many of our Annual Co ferences have adopted such intensive and bu densome programs that the denominatio program is inadvertently crowded out. has seemed impossible to break through a give the denominational program a fair o portunity to succeed. Again many of our pa tors are so preoccupied with local programs debt paying, improvement, remodeling, or e largement of their equipment that it is ph sically impossible for them to carry any mo responsibility. They do not feel justified asking their people to contribute to anythi which seems so remote as the denominatio program in the face of pressing local respo sibilities. Furthermore, our annual conferen executives are themselves over-burdened. Th are responsible for the success of the Ann Conference program. They have recalcitra pastors with which to deal, trying local co ditions, and with other responsibilities th find it frequently most difficult to comp hend the General Conference plans within realm of their own concern.

It should be remembered also that ea Secretary is responsible for a phase of Ch tian work of the utmost importance, to justly by the causes they represent. To ca the work on successfully and with increas usefulness to the Church and Kingdom, e ly absorbs every minute of time and ev ource of energy. In spite of the fact t the success of the Budget is inextricably olved in the success of their work it been found most difficult to coordinate b ctory rises, without injuring the special t for which each is held responsible. One of hindrance might be mentioned, and that is fear of adding further expense without a commensurate return. We are all profoundly interested in the success and continued growth of our beloved Zion. It is a pleasure to make any sacrifice that will promote our vital interests. To be penny wise and pound foolish is suicidal, but it takes a discriminating judgment to know when one is guilty of such an attitude. To be comservative and yet progressive has been the policy of the Budget Council. Frank W. Stephenson.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

It is not an exaggeration to say that the entire Methodist Protestant Church is proud of Western Maryland's success in raising $375,000 for her endowment. Dr. Ward, and all your loyal helpers, we heartily congratulate you! It is a magnificent achievement. The college will be able to render a still larger service for the church and the nation.

Of the $135,000 that Kansas City University is attempting to raise to liquidate its obligations and prepare the way for still larger things over $17,000 has been provided for. Practically all of this has been contributed by the United Brethren people of Kansas. The university Methodist Protestant church has pledged $775.

The effort being made by High Point college to liquidate its obligations as well as build up a substantial endowment is being watched with intense interest throughout the denomination. Surely we have no people more heroic. They have been sacrificing to the limit and evidently intend to continue to do so until the college is on a solid financial foundation. If those who have done little would do half as much as those who are carrying the load, the problem would be solved without delay.

Dr. Elderdice is on the last lap of the campaign for funds for the home of the president of the Seminary. Hardly a Sunday goes by that does not find him speaking from one to five times promoting the cause of ministerial education and the interests of the Seminary. If the alumni and friends respond as they usually do the entire indebtedness will be wiped out by the close of the present school year. It is a consumuation devoutly to be wished.

The mid-year meeting of the trustees of Adrian college will be held some time in March. At that time the Commission appointed by the last General Conference will make its final report in which will be found their recommendation not to remove the college. A detailed outline from the administration of the contemplated campaign for endowment and new buildings will be submitted also for the consideration of the Trustees. It promises to be one of the most interesting and important meeting this body has ever held.

The returns from the Rally Day offerings for January were anything but encouraging. The amount received to January 30 is $1524.08 less than durirng the same period a year ago. The returns by the conferences are as follows:

1. Ohio	$3,224.58
2. Maryland	2618.88
3. Pittsburgh	1224.21
4. Eastern	787.92
g. Indiana	605.85
6. West Virginia	576.47
7. Onondaga	370.72
8. No. Carolina	308.26
9. Kansas	305.58
10. Illinois	251.13
11. Michigan	250.00
12. Alabama	125.00
13. Iowa-Mo	88.36
14. Arkansas	77.63
15. Texas	75.00

Like the other Boards the Board of Education is facing a very discouraging situation. Our income during the first nine months of our fiscal year is nearly $11000 less than last year. This means that it will be impossible to make the contributions to our colleges and seminary that we planned. Expenses have been cut to the very limit, but that cannot create budget returns. It simply emphasizes anew that endowments are essential to make certain the continuance of our institutions. The support from the Board of Education enables them to operate with little or no deficit, and as they grow their income must somehow be increased. Discouraging deficits this year are certain unless the Budget receipts take a big jump before April 30.

Visits to our schools always send the Secretary away greatly encouraged. A few days spent at Adrian recently were an inspiration. Such an earnest and enthusiastic group of young people industriously preparing for life's responsibilities give hope for the future of the church and the Kingdom. Yes, and the nation as well. Leaders with the Christian viewpoint are needed as much if not more than ever. Adrian, as well as our other schools are sending out scores of the finest kind of young people every year. If a church college had no other result to commend it that is enough.

Special efforts are being made by the Secretary to secure extra large repayments of the loans made to former beneficiaries of the Board. The response so far has been very encouraging. Those who have not responded with cash have indicated checks would be forthcoming before the close of our fiscal year, April 30. Over $50,000 is due the Board on loans to ministerial students and some of this has been running for many years. If half of this amount could be collected and placed with our invested funds it would enable the Board to treat the present beneficiaries more generously and lessen the necessity of depending upon the budget for assistance. Nearly $7000 is required this year to take care of our ministerial students. We must secure $3800 from return payments or draw on our budget receipts.

Responses to our appeal from friends for the Student Loan Fund are coming in at a moderate rate. One young man has found it necessary to leave school but we have accepted another so our number remains at 17. We need $2550 to take care of these young people. All but about $1200 of this is reasonably sure to come in. We are on the search for that.

Sec'y Board of Education.

CHILDREN'S CHURCH IN CHINA.

The following will be appreciated by those who are interested in church services for children, etc. It is a report by Mrs. Maude Lawson Soderbom of the work in which she has great interest.

"Our Tungkuan chapel—the chapel in Kalgan, the Mission's properties are outside the city wall—was so overcrowded that there was not room for the people who attended, so it became necessary to do something at once. In order to make room for the older folks, we kept 75 of our smallest boys and girls on the compound instead of sending them to Tungkuan each Sunday. Still we felt that they too should have their services of worship, so out of the overcrowded condition of our downtown chapel has come the children's church and prayer meeting.

"The children's church is held in the girl's school chapel Sunday morning at the same time as our service at Tungkuan.

"It is under the joint supervision of Mr. Ts'ui, a teacher in the boys' school, and Miss Hu, a teacher in the girls' school.

"The little ones are now having a service adapted to their years, and one in which they too can fully participate. The children march into chapel in an orderly way and take their seats, the boys on the right side and the girls on the left side of the room.

"The services usually open with a hymn selected by the teacher in charge. This is usually followed by one chosen by the children, after which there is a prayer sometimes made by a teacher, sometimes by one of the children. Then the children choose and sing another hymn, and like all Chinese sing with all their heart and all their lungs as if they thoroughly enjoyed it, so our little folks fairly make the room ring with their singing.

"Next in order comes the lesson of the day. Mr. Ts'ui is a great lover of children, and knows how to hold their attention. Sometimes the lesson will be in story form, sometimes it consists mostly of questions and answers, and sometimes the children are permitted to tell the stories themselves. So in every way possible everything is done to make them feel that this is their service, and that they are a part of it.

"After the lesson the collection is taken up, although very few have anything to contribute. At the conclusion of each service each child is given a picture post card. These cards are treasures to them. Our use of these cards is constantly increasing, and we would appreciate all the used postcards and picture cards that would be sent to us from the homeland, as we not only use them here at Kalgan, but in the outstations as well. Mrs. C. G. Soderbom, Kalgan China.

Children's Prayer Meeting.

"While the regular prayer meeting is being held in the girls' school chapel on Wednesday afternoons, our little folks gather in the boys' school chapel for their prayer meeting. The leaders are mostly teachers from the girls' school. This meeting is a little varied from the Sunday service. Two stories illustrating the same Bible truth are usually told, the children usually singing a hymn just after the first story. This service concludes with the Lord's prayer. No collection is taken at this service, and no cards are distributed.

"The children's services are new to our workers, and it is almost impossible to obtain any Chinese books or helps along this line. Some of the workers read and understand English very well.

"We ask your prayers for this work among our smallest children." Fred C. Klein.

P. S. During the month of March my weekly article will not appear in this column, as our church papers will carry a full page advertisement in behalf of the Budget Council with whose work all the secretaries are identified.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

Four new names appear on A. C. B. list this week, Calvary, Glen Raven, Davidson, and Midland. These are given a most hearty welcome. We prophesied last week that Glen Raven would be coming in and here they are at 12. Fine. Calvary went over the top so early last year they did not give us time to know where they were going to stop until they were over, and they make their appearance now at 7. The other two charges held good places last year and are coming in fine this year.

Four new names added to the lists this week leaving 47 yet to hear from. These we are expecting to report next week. For we believe that ever charge will make a successful effort to raise the Annual Conference Budget and the College Assessment this month. If not all then a good percentage of it.

Good gains were made by Flat Rock, Littleton and Saxapahaw on the A. C. B. and Siler City on the G. C. B.

It is interesting to note how close some charges come to going ahead of the one above, —note Fountain Place and Pleasant Grove, Thomasville, 1st and Orange. But to get it down to the finest note Lincolnton and Glen Raven and Randleman and Saxapahaw. "By such slender threads do destinies hang."

Endowment Insurance Fund.

Amount previously reported, $3,886.86.

Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Lindley, $5.

Total, $3,891.86.

Since my last report I have received from Rev. J. B. O'Briant check for $300. Brother O'Briant has handled a note for that amount indorsed by some of his good members. There are a few other notes still out, for which we are hoping to receive the money before long. A good brother has just made a contribution. He stated that he might have paid the amount before, but from what his pastor said he judged that the college was just about gone, and he did not see any need of paying out more money if it would not accomplish anything. This will give an idea of the dilemma in which we are placed. If we emphasize the value of our property and appear to be prosperous, folks will think we do not need the money, and if we explain how badly we do need it, it may be inferred that the college is about to fail. The simple truth is that we have property in Greensboro and High Point valued at nearly Six Hundred Thousand Dollars; we owe a large amount of money, and we need that which has been promised us, in order that we may meet our obligations. It is not conceivable that the Methodist Protestant Church, having gone this far, would consider withdrawing support, and allowing the college to fail.

High Point has been engaged in a campaign to raise the balance of her pledge of One Hundred Thousand Dollars. Five thousand dollars has recently been paid in cash, and an obligation of that amount to the contractor, on account of the dormitories, has been cancelled.

We are anxious to have increased collections. Payments are few and far between. The first of the notes will be due in about one month, and it is hoped that the friends in the communities which have used these notes will pay in their subscriptions to their banks, so the money can be applied against the notes when due.

THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

Something less than two hundred years ago, Augustine Washington married a young woman of wealth named Mary Ball. Four children had been born to him by his first wife, and by this second marriage six others were of whom the oldest was George. When he was but eleven years old his father died, leaving the responsibility of training this large family to the mother. She was a woman of great beauty, remarkable for her hospitality, her good sense, her efficiency in household matters, but especially for the depth and sincerity of her Christian life. She had a habit of reading aloud daily to her children from one of her favorite books, "Contemplations, Moral and Divine, by Sir Matthew Hale, Knight, late Chief Justice of the King's Bench." The following sentences are from this book:

"Whatever you do, be very careful to retain in your heart a habit of religion, that may be always about you, and keep your heart and life always as in His presence, and tending toward Him."

"Be obstinately constant to your devotion at certain set times."

"Sincerity, uprightness, intergrity, and honesty are certainly true and real wisdom."

"But on the other side, an humble man leans not to his own understanding; he is sensible of the deficiency of his own power and wisdom, and trusts not in it; he is also sensible of the all-sufficient power, wisdom and goodness of Almighty God, and commits himself to Him for counsel, guidance, direction, and strength. It is natural for any man or thing that is sensible of his own deficiency to seek out after that which may be a support and strength to him, and as Almighty God is essentially good and perfect, so He is (if I may use the expression) most naturally communicative of it to any that seek unto Him for it in humility and sincerity."

South Davidson.—Sunday was a good day for us. It was the pastor's privilege to be in Sunday school and preach at West Lexington church at 11 o'clock. We had 135 present for Sunday school and a good congregation for the preaching service. The people received the word gladly and always listen attentively.

Work on our Sunday school rooms is progressing nicely. We have the frame up and a part of the weather-boarding up and are hoping to be occupying them within a few weeks. The necessary funds are already in hand and nothing will hinder the work.

We were glad to have a group of students from our High Point college, accompanied by Miss Mary Young, Dean of Women, and Prof. and Mrs. J. D. Hardy, with us at Mt. Carmel for the afternoon service. The following students were present and rendered a good program occupying the preaching hour: Misses Spencer Cutchin, Effie Keck, Lelia Wagner, Ruby Isley, Blanch Ingram, and Miss Butler; Mr. J. Elwood Carroll, Glen Madison, Jabus Braxton, and Mr. Angel.

Each of these young people spoke in the interest of the Christian Endeavor work, bringing to us messages of inspiration which each one present enjoyed. After completing the organization of the Christian Endeavor Society which was in charge of Mr. Carroll. Prof. Hardy spoke very briefly in the interest of C. E. work and the opportunity that a society had in the Mt. Carmel church. We were fortunate in having these young people with us and hope they will come again soon.

The evening service at West Lexington church was given over to the interest of Christian Endeavor and we enjoyed having in this service Mr. J. Elwood Carroll, Misses Spencer Cutchin, Ethel Keck and Lelia Wagner. Miss Cutchin spoke, telling what Christian Endeavor has meant to her as an individual. She told us how C. E. work has helped her in her work and in many ways in which she has been benefited since becoming an Endeavorer. Miss Wagner spoke of how Christian Endeavor helps the young people and Miss Keck brought to us a message telling how the C. E. work helps the church as a whole. Mr. Carroll was the concluding speaker and in a very forceful way brought us a message pointing out the opportunities of a C. E. society and how it will help the church in making progress for the Kingdom. These young people are real C. E. workers and real Christian workers. We were glad to have them with us in the two services and invite them back any time they can and will come.

It is the opinion of this pastor that if the pastors that have no C. E. societies or young people's societies of any kind in their churches will invite a group of our college students to visit your church and let them render a program, it will be a means of bringing into our church and Sunday school more life and greater desire to work for the Master. Not only to those mentioned above but you will invite a group of the students from our college it will stir your people to action as they have not been stirred before. So many of our people have little or no idea about the fine group of young people and the work they are doing is why they are loyal to rally to the support of the college. The young people of your church and community will be more anxious to visit our college and be there when they are ready to enter college. Our pastors will bring a group of the present student body into their churches and give their people some idea of what is being done there, of the fine group of teachers and the knowledge of their excellent training which they are giving to those who go to our college.

To the young people of the Methodist Protestant Church and any one who may read this article: before you decide where you will go to college, enquire about High Point; visit the college, attend some classes and then I am sure you will have a desire to study there under the well-equipped faculty and with the fine group of Christian young people that make up the student body.

M. Ivey Crutchfield, Pas.

Thanks to Sandy Ridge Church.

The pastor of Kernersville charge last year had to report a considerable deficit on pastor's salary. This deficit was at Mt. Pisgah Grove and Sandy Ridge. We are glad to report that Sandy Ridge has paid the deficit for that church since Conference. We feel that such faithfulness and loyalty deserves special mention, and we desire to thank the good people who made this possible. E. W. Suits.

JOY.

Joy is the very essence of the Christian faith. It is the bud of hope bursting into full flower. To say that a Christian is somber and melancholy, as Thomas once was, is to say that he has lost his faith, and that the rainbow of hope has ceased to mirror itself on the clouds that have cast their shadows over him. What is needed in our preaching, what is needed in our daily walk and conversation, is the joy that triumphs over all life's ills—the joy "which no man taketh from us"—the joy of His Resurrection.—Selected.

HUNG ON AND PRAYED.

By A. F. Holt.

The storm at Galveston, Texas, Sept. 8, 1900, was the greatest calamity that had ever befallen that city or that state. It was said that in round numbers ten thousand homes had been destroyed and ten thousand lives lost in that storm. So soon as Dr. R. C. Buckner, the "Great Heart," heard of that calamity, he took the first train from Dallas to Galveston, and was on the first boat that land. He went at once to the Mayor of the city and proposed to take every child who had been rendered parentless and homeless by that flood to the great Buckner Orphans' reached the desolated island from the main Home of which he was the founder and manager. He secured over a hundred and took them at once to the Home.

While seated on the train beside one of the rescued lads, he asked that boy to tell him the story of his escape. The following is the story:

"My father and mother and three children of us lived in a two-story house in Galveston at that time. When the storm came my father hoped that our house, being built high and strong, would not be washed away. There was, too, a stack chimney which father thought would anchor the house. But the flood came up and drove the family to the second story. There we huddled close to the fireplace, my father giving us warning to keep away from the windows. We had just eaten a hasty supper when I felt the house going over and I rushed for a window and leaped out, the house going over the other way. I never saw father or mother or sister or baby brother again. When I plunged into the water my head struck some object which I found to be the roof of a floating house, and I grasped it and climbed upon it. The storm roared fearfully, and the cries of drowning and dying people all around me frightened me fearfully."

"How long were you on that roof?" said Dr. Buckner.

"All night," replied the boy.

"How did you manage to stay on that house-top so long?"

"I do not know, I just hung on and prayed," said the boy.

"Where did you learn to pray?" said Dr. Buckner.

"I learned at the Sunday school of the Second Baptist Church, which I attended."

"Who was the pastor of that church?" said Dr. Buckner.

"Brother Lane," said the lad.

It may be recalled that Brother and Sister Lane were disdovered after the storm, leashed to a mesquite tree away down on the island, being bound together by a belt, and each holding in arms a child; all had been drowned. But all that horrible night, that lad, having been taught in that Sunday school, "just hung on and prayed."—Selected.

AS UNTO HIM.

By Charles Arthur Vandermeulen.

("Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matthew 25:40.)

If my poor house today could hold as Guest
The glorious Christ of Galilee,
How richly should my humble home be blest,
How Highly Honored I should be!
But would I welcome in that way I should
The Wonder-Man of Galilee?
Ah, I'd do just everything I could
To entertain such Royalty.
I'd give him welcome due a Saviour-King
So famed beyond mere Galilee;
To him my best of gifts I'd gladly bring—
For man had ne'er a Friend like he!
But when some honest beggars at my door
In name of him of Galilee
Some simple gift or aid of me implore,
Oh do I hear and heed their plea?
And when a friend meets trouble or defeat,
As friend of him of Galilee
Seek I with helpful hands and eager feet
My friend's good friend-in-need to be?
"For inasmuch as you, my friends, have done,"
Thus spoke the Man of Galilee,
"This deed of Kindness even unto one
The least, you've done it unto me!"

LOVE.

By John Milton Samples.

Love is the greatest thing in the world. It is mightier than the theories of kings, and holds universal sway over the hearts of men. It is eternally sacred and divine, and is the choicest bouquet in the beautiful garden of God. It is the law, both in heaven and earth. It can know no evil. It is wholly unselfish, long-suffering, and unceasingly kind.

Love is the universal language. It speaks in the silence of the calm and in the thunder's roar. It sighs in the breeze and whispers in the sighing of trees and the gentle murmur of rippling waters. It is heard in whirr of wings and the melodious notes of singing birds. It lulls the infant to sleep on a mother's bosom, and whispers consolation to the heart.

Love is the ruling passion of God and is seen everywhere in the handiwork of the Creator. It beams in the sunlight, from the portals of stars, and in the soft mellow radiance of the moonlight. It is the breath and color of the rose, the glow of the maiden's cheek, and in the delicate hues of the rising and setting sun. It looks happily out of the far-seeing eyes of innocent children and the calm serene countenances of the pure-hearted. It robes the mountains in its purple richness and crowns its proud crest with a diadem of eternal snow. It draws down the darkening storm clouds and paints their ebon linings with silver and gold. It calms the tempest and whispers peace to the sad-hearted. It comforts the dying soldier on the field of conflict, and gives to the departing soul the hope of heaven. It kisses away the tears from burning cheeks, and heals the wounds of cruel and thoughtless words. It cheers the heavy-hearted and scatters sunshine along life's pilgrim pathway. It plucks away the thorns and plants sweet flowers beside the way. It smooths the pain-racked pillow of the silk and suffering and invests the long, lonely hours with roseate visions of hope.

Love is not lacking in faith. It is implicitly trustful and wholly unafraid. It harbors no doubt, nor imagines evil. Love understands and sympathizes in the changing circumstances of life. It is patient, long suffering and kind. It may be wounded but cannot die. It hopes and endures when all else has changed and passed away. It is eternal and immortal. It is always the same.—Selected

LEAVES AND LIVES.

By C. E. F.

Life, like the year, has its cycle of seasons. Childhood and youth make its spring. Maturity is its summer. Middle life is its autumn. Old age is its winter. Growth, endeavor, fruition, and departure—each has its place in the story of life. Yet all are beautiful, and a leaf is most beautiful just before its passing. Nor is winter any tragedy, for there is always another spring.

We think a faded leaf pitiful because it is a thing of memories. For it every voice speaks of the past. Yet it has lived and served its purpose. The very fact that it has done its work is beautiful. Its every scar is a testimony of duty done, a mark of battle, a sigh of achievement. It is like Jacob who halted upon his thigh. Paul who bore the branded marks of the Lord, or Jesus whose hands and brow were scarred with the testimony of love.

How lovely are the drifted leaves of autumn! How gentle they are, and how pensive! They are the symbols of the season of mists and mellow fruitfulness. Among them is a good place to think, to breathe the spirit of the Divine in nature, to look upon a woodland picture of the story of life and death—for it is the same story. Life and death are so intermingled that each is necessary to the other.

While some leaves lie drifted on the ground, some of them having fallen in early spring, and others but lately, still others remain late upon the trees, bearing the marks of red and gold the frost brings—for even the frost beautifies—and waiting for the gust of wind that is finally to bring them down.

The transitoriness of things should be remembered often enough and seriously enough to keep us humble. We do much boasting about the power of the human mind and the achievement of the human hand. But let us remember that with all our pride we are nothing but fading leaves.—Selected.

A CLEVER LETTER.

I find it in a recent issue of the Philadelphia Presbyterian. It seems the Outlook had offered a prize for the best brief letter on "What the Church is to Me." The prize was won by a sixteen-year-old girl, and I can well believe that she deserved it. She says: "I am a high school girl, just sixteen, and my candid opinion is: the Church is queer. The queerest thing about it is, it is trying so hard to amuse us! It is like my grandmother trying to play basketball. We young people do not want the Church to find amusement for us; we can find plenty of that for ourselves. When I was a very small child, I thought our Church was the place to learn to be good—they taught me that in Sabbath School. Now all we do is to belong to a big class, work to make it the biggest and its contributions the biggest, go to conventions, where we eat, sight-see, go to committee meeting, and vote. Of course our bunch have a wonderful time, but we could have that anywhere." This is the first paragraph. It is all exceedingly spicy and interesting, but is rather too long to quote. She winds up by saying: "The Church is like 'The Blue Boy,' hanging in my room—ornamental but not useful. A room-full of paintings without mother and dad would be nothing. I think it is God that I need. I learned that when I got up at 4:00 A. M., and watched the sun rise and heard a meadow lark. I wish the church would come down out of the picture, help me to live right, so I could say to 'Bill'—my best friend: 'You cannot afford to miss going with me to church.'" (

It has long been borne in on me that the Church is going decidedly too far in the matter of amusements. It is trying to sugar-coat religion with amusements so as to make it palatable to the young people. It is to be feared that many of them get the sugar-coating without swallowing much of religion. The amount of reverence is dying out. Young people enjoy their meetings in proportion to the amount of fun they have. He is the most popular speaker for these meetings who has the best of stock of anecdotes and the greatest skill in telling them.

Many years ago an English preacher by the name of Archibald G. Brown wrote a tract with the title, "The Devil's Mission of Amusement." In his day and time he thought his Satanic majesty was getting in some telling work by inducing the Church to bait with amusements. Here is the way he puts it: "The devil has seldom done a cleverer thing than hinting to the Church of Christ that part of her mission is to provide entertainment for the people, with a view to winning them into her ranks. The human nature that lies in every heart has risen to the bait. Here now is an opportunity of gratifying the flesh and yet retaining a comfortable conscience. We can now please ourselves in order to do good to others. The rough old cross can be exchanged for a 'costume,' and the exchange can be made with the benevolent purpose of elevating the people."

Despite Dr. Brown's earnest protest the idea has persisted, and it is finding manifold expression in our day. It is quite a common thing to hear sober-minded Christians say that the Church should provide entertainment for her young people. Many sobersided Christians spend much time in devising ways for the Church to provide entertainment not only for the young but for all classes of people.

Be it said with emphasis that I [illegible] objection to entertainments. They are [illegible] things, provided they are good. But with [illegible] emphasis I would say that it is not the business of the Church to provide entertainment. It has received no such commission from Christ or the Apostles. The sixteen-year-old girl had it about right—the business of the Church is to make people good, and to make them good by acquainting them with the Lord and His will.

There are several reasons why the Church should be chary about catering to the desire for amusement:

1. It does not need to. As the clever girl of sixteen says: "We can find plenty of that for ourselves."

2. The Church is not an expert in this line. It cannot compete successfully with those who make a business of providing amusement. "It is like my grandmother trying to play basketball."

3. If meant to take the place of objectionable entertainments it fails of its object. It does not even check the ceaseless current to the movies.

4. Above all, it tends to cloud the one great supreme mission of the Church. The young people should be made to understand that the one mission of the Church is to bring them into fellowship with God through Jesus Christ and to help them to "live soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world."—Selected.

WHAT THE KING HAS.

By Ethel Romig Fuller.

What the King has
So have I:
Rose-gold of dawn,
Bejeweled sky,
A wealth of days
Slipping by.
What the King has
So have I:
Hopes deferred,
Ambitions high,
Hungerings
To satisfy.
What the King has
So have I:
A crown of love
Naught can buy,
One life to live—
Once to die.

THE WISHING GIRL.

She wished she were a princess—
Or, better still, a queen;
She wished to see strange countries
That she had never seen.
She saw the wealthy ladies
And wished to take their place;
She wished for their fine jewels,
Their satins and their lace.
She wished that all her duties
Were changed to play and fun,
Or that, by merely wishing
Her duties could be done.
But strange, with all her wishing
She never wished to be
The helpful and unselfish child
That others wished to see.

THE STORY OF A BIBLE

The following story is told by Rev. Paul [illegible] of the American Bible Society, who was recently in Chile on [illegible]:

HEARTS TRUE.

If there be one who is one
Give me a word, help him on;
If a blind road should be,
Let me guide him to victory.
Let my prayer come true
With the work I do would be;
Clothe with Thy strength infant,
Let me be the thing I want:
Let me find in the conflict
Power that my way is then joy:

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Rockingham, Chase City and Melton's Grove.—Our preaching appointments are at Rockingham the first, Chase City the second, and Melton's Grove the fourth Sunday in each month. In addition to our regular preaching appointments we are holding other services in the interest of Bible study. At Rockingham we are holding these services on the third and fourth Sunday nights, at Chase City beginning on Monday after Christmas we held these services for one week, taking up one chapter each day. At the close of this week forty pledged to read the New Testament through this winter. We are continuing these services, in the afternoon of our regular preaching days at Chase City. We are expecting to hold some of these services in the interest of Bible study at Melton's Grove soon. If we can only get the people to read and study their Bibles we need not be afraid of the results.

The Sunday Schools.

The Sunday schools at Rockingham and Chase City are doing good work. The school at Melton's Grove is not doing anything at present, though we are hoping to get this school going again soon.

New Members.

So far this year we have only received three new members, these all at Rockingham, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Gardner and Mr. Carnell. Brother Gardner is chairman of our Rockingham board of stewards and is doing splendid work. We are asking the good Lord for fifty new members at Rockingham, fifty at Chase City and 25 at Melton's Grove this year. Will you join us in this prayer?

Our Church Debt.

This year found us with a debt on our Rockingham church amounting to about $400 and our Chase City church with one amounting to $200, though $70 of this has been paid since the first of the year, and this debt is now $130.

We are praying and working to raise the full amounts that both these debts may soon be paid and these two church buildings dedicated to the Lord.

On Sunday, February 7, we held special prayer meeting, that the Lord may help and lead us in this work of raising this debt.

Our plans are to raise the Rockingham debt by the last of March and the Chase City by the last of June.

Remember us in your prayers.

James H. Trolinger, Pastor.

Rockingham, February 23, 1926.

First Church, Burlington, Items.—There has been no report from Burlington for some weeks, and so many things of interest and importance are happening that we feel our friends in other places may be interested in reading of them.

First we would mention the fact that all services of our church are being well attended and the interest in the work is good in all departments. Sunday school attendance averages around 350 all the time, occasionally going to 400.

The pastor, Rev. S. W. Taylor, has been preaching at the morning services on Sunday in his usual forceful earnest way, recently, but for the night services we have been having visitors with us. On the first Sunday night in this month Rev. G. W. Holmes, well known was a former president of the Annual Conference and ex-pastor of some of our best charges, preached a most excellent sermon, using as his subjet, "God's Growing Fields." He was greeted by a capacity house, and his discourse was greatly enjoyed.

On the second Sunday evening, Rev. B. M. Williams, pastor of Orange circuit, was the speaker and delivered a good sermon on the subject, "A Christian Home." Despite the inclement weather the church was almost filled at this service.

Last night, the service was the Thank-Offering Service of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and they presented the pageant, "Converting Aunt Jane," which was greatly enjoyed by the audience which filled the church auditorium and Baraca room. The offering was about $32, and goes to the budget of the society.

For next Sunday night, the men of the church have secured Mr. Earl S. Rogers, of the Ham-Ramsey evangelistic party, which is conducting a meeting in Danville. Mr. Rogers was much liked by the people of Burlington during the party's campaign here last spring, and we expect another large audience at that time.

On the first Sunday night in March, we will have with us a former pastor, Rev. George L. Curry, and arrangements are being made for other speakers during March and April at the evening services.

Last month a social for the adult young people of the church was held in the hut, and was so much enjoyed that another was planned and had on last Tuesday night, February 16, and still another is scheduled for next month. These socials bring the young people of the church together in a social way and give them the opportunity of having a good time under the supervision of the pastor and other older people. They are opened and closed with song and prayer, and nothing not in keeping with the place and event is permitted.

The monthly business meeting of the church was held on last Wednesday evening following the prayer service, and was very well attended. One item of special interest perhaps was the report of the treasurer of the church in regard to the every-member canvass for pledges to cover the church budget. This report revealed that we have 598 members in the city and 84 out of town. Of the 598 in town 489 have made a pledge to the budget This is 82 per cent of the total. The total amount pledged is $4,510.96, an average pledge of $9.22 per member, or about 18 cents per week. Last year the total amount pledged to the budget was about $2,800, although the church paid all claims. This is accounted for by the fact that many of those who did not make pledges for one reason or another, later made payments. The report for this year reveals that the stewards have made a more thorough canvass than formerly. We also used the "Honor System" on one Sunday afternoon in October, and at that time about 20 members came to the church and made heir pledges. The plan worked so well that it will doubtless be used again next year.

Yesterday morning the pastor used as his subject, "Our Church—Its Origin and Progress." He told us many things of interest and traced the origin of the church from its inception, along with the history of the mother church, and told us of the withdrawal of the fahers of our church from the mother church, and te organization of the Methodist Protestant Church.. Lack of time prevented his touching on the progress of the church, but he has promised that he will later tell us more of this, and we are hoping that he will touch not only on the progress of the church, but will also tell us of the various church organizations, our literature, our laws, and other things of interest. We have recently received about 150 mmbers into our fellowship on profssion of faith, and there must be many of them who do not know much of the church's history, its institutions, missionary activities, etc., and those of us who are older in the work will be helped greatly by hearing it.

Since January 1 we have been publishing a weekly bulletin, in which is carried each week the program for the day, the announcements for the following week, and other information of interest to the church.. The membership seems to appreciate the bulletin.

Lack of time prevents our giving more items from Burlington now, but perhaps we may tell you more later, and will try to make it shorter next time. C. T.

Asheville.—The Asheville church feels keenly he passing of Mrs. Harriet Swain of Weaverville Wednesday, February 17. She and her daughter, Miss Estelle, were visiting in the home of her son, J. E. Swain, in Asheville. Mrs. Swain was stricken ill, and after about two weeks of intense suffering, she was released. Funeral services were held at the residence of her son February 18, conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. D. Cranford of Weaverville and Rev. J. S. Williams of Asheville. (Rev. C. W. Bates was out of the city.) Hymns were sung by a trio: Mrs. J. S. Williams, Miss Wenonah Joyner and E. H. Pratt. Miss Virdie McIntyre played the accompaniments. Dr. O. J. Chandler of Central Methodist Church offered prayer. Many friends and relatives were present. The flowers were beautiful. The body was tenderly laid away in the family plot at Democrat on the topmost point of the knoll in the middle of the village. Everyone was gentle and sympathetic. The procession from the road to the top of cemetery made a beautiful picture. Mrs. Swain has meant much to our church in Western North Carolina. Her husband, who passed away more than 40 years ago, was a pioneer minister in this section. She loved the church and was always interested in every department.. She prayed constantly for its success. Her home was a home for the ministers always.. Her three living children are W. A. Swain and J. E. Swain of Asheville, and Miss Estelle Swain.

Saturday afternoon, February 20, many of our membership attended the funeral services

r Brother W. C. Pickens, father of Mrs. W. Bates. The church was filled with sym-athizing friends. Two old-fashioned hymns ere sung: "When I can Read My Title lear" and "God's Children Are Gathering ome." These hymns were favorites of rother Pickens. The casket was covered th beautiful flowers from loving friends. ie services for Brother Pickens were con-ucted by his pastor, Rev. J. D. Cranford, sisted by Brothers Dendy and Brown of eaverville and J. S. Williams of Asheville. rs. Bates and her mother and brother have e profound sympathy of our church

Mrs. Robert Greenwood is steadily recov-ing from an illness that has kept her in-ors several months. Mrs. G. P. Younginer also confined at home with illness. Mrs. M. Joyner is spending the winter in Flor-a nursing Mrs. M. D. Council, another of r members who has been ill more than a ar.

Pastor Bates never fails to give his hearers most helpful sermon. We are counting uch on our newly organized Church Club.

Concord.—The attendance at Sunday school r the last two Sundays has been good. Last nday the number present was 252 and the llection amounted to $35. This Sunday the tendance was 225 and the collection was 4.09. The attendance at the church servic-was unusually good. The subject for last nday morning was "The Church Which Is is Body." It was a very helpful sermon d was enjoyed by the entire congregation. ie subject for this Sunday was, "A Mov-g Providence;" this was also well received. Before the sermon the officials of the church ported that they had agreed on a building ogram, which was unanimously accepted. ie plan calls for a new auditorium with nday school rooms. This is to be built to near the old church building.

Also, before the church service the treas-er was instructed to send $50 to the High oint College, which is the assessed amount r our church on the running expenses of e College.

On the first Sunday of February the Senior ristian Endeavor Society observed the an-versary of Christian Endeavor by render-g a program at the regular evening church our. At that time an offering was taken for r. Francis E. Clark's Recognition Fund.

The Christian Endeavor held its regular onthly business meeting and social with the riter at the Teacherage of Rocky River hool. About 25 members were present. It as decided to hold the next meeting at the me of Miss Maggie Mann on Kerr street.

Since the last report three deaths have oc-rred in the membership of the church. Mrs. . H. Steele's death occurred in the early rt of January. She was one of the oldest d most loved women of our church. The fu-ral service was held at the home of the de-ased, conducted by the pastor, and inter-nt was made at Oakwood cemetery.

Mr. John Clark, also a very active member the church, died on January 24, at his home on Depot street. The funeral was held at the church on Monday afternoon. Interment was made at Smith's Chapel cemetery. The pastor was assisted by Rev. M. L. Kester and Rev. P. E. Lindley of High Point.

Mrs. Mary Long, wife of Mr. Charlie Long, died at her home on Allison street, Monday, February 8. Funeral was conducted at the home by the pastor. Mrs. Long was a member of the Young People's Class in the Sunday school, and took a great interest in the class. She was also a very active church member.

Pine Bluff, Midland Charge.—Our pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, preached a most excellent sermon at the morning hour. He used as his text Dan. 6:10, "Now, when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime."

In this discourse the brother showed how every one would meet with trials and besetments along the road of life. He also showed how helpless we are, unaided by God, to overcome those hard trials and difficulties, and how blessed it is to meet and overcome them with God as our director. In conclusion the importance of prayer was stressed, which showed very clearly that it was absolutely necessary for every one to commune with the Father.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society will give a pageant, "The Royal Way," at the church March 7, beginning at eight o'clock P. M. This promises to be instructive in a religious way. The pastor will be with us and have some important part in the program. The offering will be used for world-wide missions.

Concord, Saxapahaw Circuit.—We have not been heard from in some time. not because we have been idle—just almost too busy to report. Last first Sunday our pastor, Rev. H L. Isley, filled his regular appointment at Concord. A large crowd was present and inspired by the sermon. Our Sunday school is progressing and seems to be growing every Sunday. There will be preaching at Concord every third Sunday afternoon throughout the year by the pastor. With best wishes to the Herald.

Charlotte, First Church.—The pastor and wife acknowledge the pounding on last Thursday evening, February 18, just prior to the second quarterly conference. Many came and left evidences of their intended desire of pounding the inmates of the parsonage. The gifts were both useful and acceptable and we wish to express our deep gratitude for them. So far the people of this church have been successful in entirely surprising us in their pounding expeditions.

Quite a number of our people have been sick, and several are sick now. We are hoping that all will soon be well again.

We shall leave any other news to be reported by the church reporter.

H. Freo Surratt.

Tabernacle Charge.—Considering the unfavorable weather and the fact that so many are sick, we think our work is moving along nicely. The attendance at preaching services has been real good through the winter months. I do not believe I have ever served a charge where the attendance held up better through the winter. And now that the weather is getting better we are looking for more people at all of the services.

Since our last report we have been kindly remembered by some of the good people of Julian. They pounded us with canned fruit, dried fruit, jelly, pickles, and a fine ham. We appreciate these tokens of kindness more than we can express in words. Edw. Suits.

Halifax.—Yesterday was a very good day with us; we had a very good congregation at Harmony church for the morning service, and a very good congregation at Eden for the afternoon service. The congregations and interest on the work are very good for the winter months.

We were very sorry to see Mrs. Edwards, our faithful reporter and steward at Hollister, leave us. She has moved to Franklin, Virginia.

The people at Hollister keep moving away, and it makes it rather difficult to those who are left, but we are determined to go forward with work of the church here, hoping that others will come in to take their places.

There isn't any kind of work going on at Hollister now, it is comparatively a dead place.

We want to thank the followng persons for the nice things they have sent us since we last wrote to the paper: Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Harrison, Mrs. E. C. Harrell, Mr. and Mrs. Willis Hull, Mrs. Thomas, Frank Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Avent, Mrs. C. S. Smith, Edgar Whitley, Mrs. W. R. Neville, Mrs. M. J. Hunter and Mrs. Street.

With best wishes to the Herald.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

Ai, Kernersville Charge.—Pastor Love filled his appointment yesterday at 11 A. M.; he always brings a helpful message. Yesterday was a beautiful day and many were out to hear Bro. Love's wonderful sermon. During that hour all gave him prayerful attention.

Preparations are being made to build some more to our church in order that our Sunday school classes may have more room. We are glad to say our Sunday school is improving nicely and hope the attendance will be larger by spring. We were very glad indeed to have with us yesterday morning Mr. Broom of the High Point College. Pastor Love and Mr. Broom took dinner at the home of Mr. Frank Stafford.

Mrs. R. S. Peebles and sons, Zeno and Paul, spent last week end with their Aunt Jane Page near the Battle Ground. She is seriously ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Nichols. We all hope for Mrs. Page a speedy recovery. Reporter.

—Sickness has robbed us of our linotype operator two days this week. If you do not see your report, you will understand that it could not be got in type in time.

We are glad to say that Mr. John Mitchum is better. Miss [illegible] one of our faithful ones at Sunday school.

Gibsonville.—Time has been of premium importance to us since conference, so we have not made a report thus far. Things have been moving on, however. The Hut has been ceiled. Church lawn has been worked up and grassed and we are now getting ready to paint the church. The parsonage movement has been delayed but we hope to revive that and have it finished soon after Easter.

All departments of the work continue lively and functioning. Sunday school, with an enrollment of about 350, has an attendance for the quarter of around two hundred. We have a Children's Missionary Society that has recently earned $10.60 selling candy, and now these boys have set themselves the task of securing a steel interchangeable letter bulletin board for the church lawn. To do this they have undertaken to raise fifty feet of dimes. The W. H. M. S. has recently sent sent in an offering on G. C. B.

The third Sunday in February is "Annual Conference Day" with this church, with a goal of 50 percent of the A. C. B. and all of the college assessment.

The attendance upon the preaching services has been good all during the quarter, but in looking about we found that others might also find room to worship with us, so that having secured [illegible] we worked out a series of "Revival Services" to be held Sunday evening [illegible] February and March. Sunday night, January 24th, we held what we called "Automobile Night." Had a female chorus to lead the [illegible] Miss Fisher, head of the voice department of Elon College, sang a solo. We also had an illuminated cross. This drew a capacity audience which filled the church and [illegible] by actual count 276 persons. Sunday night, January 31st, we put on another such night, calling it "Family Night." Had a male chorus for this service, and it also drew a full house. We are to continue these special services indefinitely.

Fountain Place Church.—We are just about to get settled down to keeping house in this new church. All is going well. The Sunday school is doing the best work in its history. The services are all well attended.

The W. H. M. S. of this church, which is a new society, has recently sent a nice offering in on G. C. B. We also have a Children's Missionary Society in this church that is doing good work. This church is also putting on a special series of services after the fashion of those at Gibsonville. The first of them will be held February 7, 7:30 P. M., and is known as "School Teachers' Night." The Burlington City School Teachers have all been invited and a special musical program and sermon is provided for the occasion. The Graham Quartette will also sing.

This church will observe "Annual Conference Day" the fourth Sunday in February. The college assessment will be paid at that time. The Annual Conference Budget is paid in full.

First, Last.

In both of the churches very fine programs were rendered at Christmas time, and a treat was given by each of the churches to the Sunday school. An old fashioned Christmas tree with a visit from Santa Claus was a feature of the children's night Christmas eve at Gibsonville.

It would be a most unwise thing for a preacher to write to the paper and not mention a pounding, would it not? So I do not want to establish a precedent and will therefore make reference to one that for duration outlasts any I ever knew. Soon after conference they began by some one or other bringing something to the parsonage almost every day and finally when Christmas came around I got the surprise of my life to get a barrel-full of groceries and some $40.00 in cash off the Gibsonville tree. Also at Fountain Place we got groceries but no barrel, perhaps they had burned theirs for wood. But Christmas set no boundary for their giving to the preacher, they kept it up every few days at both of the churches. Only today it appeared that we had enough, so when I sat down to write, the very first interruption was Brother Isley from the country with a ham that must weigh no less than eighteen to twenty pounds. Well, "every position has its advantages."

Cordially, G. H. Hendry.

Mrs. Emma Bowman.

Words fail us when we try to express our grief at the passing of our friend and co-worker, Mrs. Emma Bowman, wife of Brother W. P. Bowman, one of the charter members of our little church at Midway, Guilford circuit. We can't see how we will get along without her help. She was always present if possible not only present but ready to help in any way she could to carry on the Master's work. Oh, how we will miss her and how Brother Bowman and her dear ones in the house miss her pleasant face. Not only does the church and home miss her, but her neighbors mourn the loss of a true friend. We know our Heavenly Father makes no mistakes, but why He called her home just when we needed her so badly we can't understand. To say she is missed is putting it very light, but God knows best and I believe some time just beyond we will understand. We will ever cherish her memory and feel her Christ-like life will inspire us to be more ready to do the Master's bidding. While we can't see her face present with us we will expect to see her life exemplified in the lives of hr children she taught to love and adore her Heavenly Father. Then we can say, Sister Bowman is not dead but just crossed over and left the work for us to do that she so faithfully began. While we write these few lines we stop to wipe the tears from our eyes at the thought that we must say goodby to this good sister and mother. Yet we feel sure our loss is her gain. She is ever happy and free from the toils and cares of this world. We can't mourn as one having no hope, for we feel sure she is just across the river beckoning us to come. May we all be faithful and meet er in the home beyond where there will be o farewell tears. W. A. Lamb.

Ida McCulloch.

Ida McCulloch was born November 1, 1872, nd died February 9, 1926, age 53 years, three onths and eight days. She was the daughter f David H. and Margaret Hunter McCulloch. he is survived by her father, two brothers, letcher and Flavius McCulloch, two sisters, Irs. C. L. Tucker and Miss Georgia McCulch.

Miss Ida had been a great sufferer for eight ears, but those who knew her well say she ore her suffering with patience. And not ithstanding her own afflictions she did much cheer others and make their lives happier. he did this in part by writing letters to hers, having among her correspondents peole in several states.

Years ago Miss Ida attended college at drian while Dr. J. F. McCulloch, her uncle, as teaching there. After that she taught hool for a number of years. But for a numer of years she had remained at home with er father and sister. She was devoted to both er father and her sister. A neighbor remarked iat she had lived a most unselfish life.

She professed faith in early life and united ith Tabernacle church where she held her embership until she was called home. Her eighbors and friends and relatives testied to her beautiful Christian character.

The funeral service was conducted at the abernacle church Thursday the 11th at elen o'clock by Rev. L. W. Gerringer, assisted y Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Rev. Ewd. Suits, nd Rev. C. E. Hodgin. Interment was made the Tabernacle cemetery.

Hearts are sad and lonely because of her go-g, and yet our Christian faith enables us to ook beyond the bounds of time and see and now that all is well with her. Mrs. Crosby dams gives us a thought in a few lines of erse that is worthy of our mediation as we ink of our loss.

I watched a ship until it sailed from sight ver the rounding sea; a gleam of white, last far-flashed farewell, and like a thought,
lipped out of sight—it vanished and was not.
ut to the helmsman standing at the whee' road seas still stretched before the shining keel isaster? Change? He felt no slightest sigh or dreamed he of that dark horizen line.
o may it be perchance, as down the tide ur dear ones vanish; peacefully they glide
'er level seas, nor mark that unknown bound.
Ve call it death—to them 'tis life beyond.''

CLOSING ARGUMENT.

My dear "S. R. H.:"

Your valued favor, in the "Herald," of the eleventh inst. was very much appreciated. I am at a loss for words with which to express to you my great joy in receiving this very pleasing communication. Seriously, my dear "S. R.," I laughed till I cried. Is it not really fine that we understand each other so well? and that there is such an affinity existing between us? and too, the harmony of thought. My! my! it's glorious! You cannot imagine how grateful I am to know that we think so much alike and that we see things from the same view-point, and best of all, we understand each other so well, oh! it's great, my dear S. R. "no getting mad," "no insinuations," "no sarcasm," "no irony" "no slang," no any other "tommy rotten" things. No misunderstandings, no anything that would mar the good fellow-feeling that binds us in the bonds of friendship. I thought that this would be the situation when I wrote at the first: but I must say that the pleasant result has very far surpassed my most sanguine expectation. It seems that a brother, a minister—pastor of the Pageland Circuit in S. C.—did not fully understand your first letter. Possibly he took your letter as he probably did mine—for a joke. At any rate it's likely that he failed to understand the full import of what we wrote. Perhaps he got "the letter" but did not succeed in catching the "sperrit" of our communications. I hope he did not become a victim to the result that might be expected to follow by receiving the "letter" only. The thing that puzzles me most is this, the fact that any reasonable minded person could possibly misunderstand your first letter especially after reading mine in connection with yours: I think he must have overlooked the importance of doing this, but alas! so it is. I'm reminded just now, of a hard time I once had in getting a shoe-maker to understand how I wanted him to make a pair of shoes. I told him as plainly as I could speek, and in the most pronounced manner, I could, as to how I wanted the shoes made. The charge I gave him was as follows: "Be sure," said I, "to make one shoe a little larger than the other." He said he would certainly do so. Believe me, when I went to the shop for those shoes im-

[illegible] disappointment and chagrin when I discovered that [illegible] had made one of the shoes a little smaller than the other, so [illegible] to get folk to understand you every time, but I guess we will have to put up with things like this. I notice that [illegible] the only [illegible] this: [illegible] I have [illegible] stopped [illegible] and [illegible] my pencil and [illegible] my dear S. R.—pardon me for [illegible] part of your name. I am doing this to the end that space [illegible] "Herald" may be needed for some brother who wishes to inform the public of the fact that he has just been the happy recipient of a number of such things as three yards and a quarter of [illegible], two pecks of shucks to feed his [illegible], half cord of hot corn, two gallons of stove wood, and one and one half cubic feet of corn in the ear with which to feed his pig, etc., etc. You spoke of saving a proposition for me, good, thank you. Can it and seal the can, and some day we will cut the can, bust a pumpkin, knock an egg in the head, put a keg of nails, roast a box of tacks and stir the whole outlay together and season with your bowl of "pot liker" and have the time of our lives.

I extend to you my very best wishes and kindest regards and wish to conclude by saying that I am yours fully as much as I was the last time I wrote—and then some.

Tobe Shepherd.

I do not ask that men with flattering finger
Should point me out within the crowded mart,
But only that the thought of me may linger
In one glad heart.
I would not rise upon the men below me,
Or pulling at robes of men above;
I would that friends, a few dear friends, may know me,
And knowing, love.

—Thomas A. Edison, "electrical wizard" and the world's most famous inventor, was seventy-nine years old February 11. His home and the big Edison laboratory where he does his work are at West Orange, N. J., but Mr. Edison is spending the winter at Fort Myers, Fla. On his birthday he said: "I feel nowhere near seventy-nine years of age. No, no I couldn't retire." Mr. Edison comes of a long-lived family. His father, grandfather and great-grandfather lived to be 94, 103, and 102, respectively. Seven uncles on his father's side all lived to be over ninety.

As an inventor, Mr. Edison has taken out more than a thousand patents in the United States, and even more abroad. Besides the incandescent light, some of the most wonderful of his inventions are: The phonograph, the mimeograph, the moving picture machine and the nickel-iron storage batteries used in motor cars. He also perfected the telegraph and telephone, and improved the first typewriter so as to make it practicable.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 7.

Jesus Washes His Disciples' Feet.

Lesson Text: John 13:1-15.

Golden Text: Matt. 20:28.

The Central Truth: Jesus, the Son of God, has stooped to such lowly sacrifice and service in order that He might lift the foulest sinners to the most exalted sainthood.

Scriptural Points.

1. "Jesus knew that his hour was come." The hour of betrayal, trial, and crucifixion was near. It was also the hour of parting counsel and loving devotion to His chosen apostles. And it was also the hour of the total eclipse of His Father's face, in which He would have to tread the winepress alone.

2. "He loved them unto the end." The love of Jesus is an everlasting love, as persistent and constant as the sun shining in its strength.

3. Beyond the dark chasm of Gethsemane and the darker mount of Calvary Jesus viewed His exaltation to His Father's right hand, where He would assume Lordship over "things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth."

4. Jesus had three good reasons for washing His disciples' feet. First, their feet needed washing after the day's travel, and there was no one else to do it. The disciples were not sufficiently humble to wash one another's feet. Secondly, Jesus wished to teach the lesson of lowly service as the pathway to the glory world. And thirdly, Jesus would impress the truth that constant cleasing was indispensable in order to maintain purity of heart and purity of life.

5. "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." Peter thought Jesus was sacrificing His dignity and self-respect by washing His disciples' feet; but under the new dispensation he would come to know that there is no soul so fallen, so corrupt, or so damnable but that the Holy Spirit will be glad to wash, to cleanse, and to renew, in Jesus' name.

6. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in me." A clean heart, a right spirit, and a holy life are necessary to full discipleship with Jesus. A pure Christ must have a pure following.

7. "And ye are clean, but not all." This is a thrust at Judas who had already bargained with the chief priests to betray Him. It was also a personal appeal for Judas to repent, and forego the damnable transaction. But Judas' heart was hardened by his love of money, and he turned a deaf ear to this entreaty.

8. "Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am." These are not empty honorary titles. They represent a supreme relationship. This wonderful and far reaching claim of Lordship has been fully established through the centuries of the Christian era. Millions have shared the untold benefaction of this King of kings and Lord of lords.

9. "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet." The formal service of feetwashing cannot be anything out of the way. If the spirit of lowliness attends it the service will do much good. But Jesus would have us to learn that there is no human need so low but that we should stoop down to meet it. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Practical Points.

1. There are moments in each one's life upon which eternity is hung. They are moments of opportunity, moments of privilege, and moments of destiny. Happy is the man who enters these open doors to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Josh. 24:15.

2. Let us magnify the love of Jesus. The sweep of descent from the throne to the manger was the first lap of its measure. Thirty-three years of earthly poverty, living, teaching and serving deepened and broadened this love. In the garden and on the cross it shone with resplendent light. From the mediatorial throne it beams with dazzling and most penetrating brillancy. And throughout eternity it will be the supreme luminary of the glory world. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Rom. 8:35.

3. A clean life is the outflow of a pure heart. "Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord." Ps. 119:1.

4. "It is not in man to direct his way." Nothing short of God's wisdom and strength can maintain a sinless life. And this God can do, for there is nothing too hard for the Lord. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this. To visit the father and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1:27. "Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed at the last time." 1 Pet. 1:5.

5. The example of Jesus is a most delightful inspiration to worship and devotion and a most powerful incentive to conduct and service. "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Heb. 12:2.

Moreover, priests and ministers who are not citizens of Mexico are being arrested for deportation to their native lands. The motto of the Calles government seems to be: Mexico for the Mexicans!

THE SUPREME PASSION OF DEITY.

To make saints out of sinners is the supreme purpose of the Triune God. All creation and providence are made to contribute to this end. Jesus Christ died and rose again that fallen men and women might be transformed into the image and likeness of God. The church has been commissioned to undertake and consummate this work of redemption.

The body of believers is expected to be the channel through which the blessings of the kingdom may flow. Preaching and prayer are the two keys that will unlock the door of the Kingdom of redeeming grace. And these keys, under the power of the Holy Spirit, will also unlock the doors of rebellious human hearts.

These keys must be operated under the God-given authority of faith. Jesus was asked, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" And He replied, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." It is our part to believe, and God will do the work of salvation.

To the seventy, just returned from a tour of successful ministry, Jesus said, "Notwithstanding in this rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Spirituality is more well-pleasing to God than service. It is what we are rather than what we do that concerns Him the most.

"Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, forever." To make men holy as He is holy is the quenchless passion of the heart of God. And He craves fellowship with such. "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

EXPERIENCES.

Every man who exercises the power of God must have a devotional training. This is only another name for the old word "experience." A conscious effort to make real the presence and fellowship of God alone can develop a real Christian erperience. The courage of life comes from an assurance of faith. —Selected.

THE FEET OF JESUS.

By Dr. Henry Burton.

O sacred feet, so sweet a burden bearing
Along the common dusty roads of earth!
Bringing new hope and life to the despairing,
Turning man's grief and sorrow into mirth!
O weary feet, which at the well-side staying,
Saw the lone stranger won for truth and love,
Which heard the fount of living waters playing,
Sending its music to the realms above.
O feet, love-winged, which o'er the waters glided,
Light as the seabird on the passing wave.
When at His word the angry storm subsided,
And in the calm the fearful hearts grew brave!
O feet beloved, with fragrant nard anointed,
Ere yet they moved along the dolorous way!
Which shrank not from the path by God appointed,
Though death lurked there, and all the beasts of prey.
O pierced feet, which felt the nail and hammer,
Through quivering nerves, cut deep into the wood!
Which heard the mocking and the people's clamor,
And saw the red line of atoning blood!
Thou risen Christ! What offering shall I give Thee?
Hot tears of mine, or spikenard for Thy feet?
I have not these; but I can love Thee, live Thee,
And this my love shall be as spikenard sweet!

THE BIBLE STANDS FIRM AND FINE.

Under the influence of the growing conception of historical development, and the widening range of spiritual sympathy which mark our age preeminently, men are coming more and more generally to recognize the Bible's permanent and incomparable spiritual worth.

Though the whole modern world has transcended it at many points, it remains a unique record of developing religious experience, aspiration, and reflection, and it contains the highest gift of God to man, the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Christians have never found it more helpful and inspiring than now, and outside the Church the characteristic attitude of the present day toward it is not, as it once was, in revolt against the extravagent claims everywhere made for it, contempt and hatred, but growing interest and respect.

All lovers of the Bible may well rejoice and take heart from the existing situation. For distress and discouragement there is no room where the past is known and today's relation to it comprehended.—Professor McGiffert in Religious Authority.

HIGH POINT COLLEGE DOING A-GRADE WORK.

My Dear Doctor McCulloch:

You kindly gave the following letter front page space in the Herald on July 23, 1925, and I hope you can give it the same kind of space this week. Thank you.

"High Point College Recognized by the State Board of Education.

"As there have come to us a numbber of inquiries concerning the admission of a student from High Point College in other colleges in the state, the letter which follows will be of interest to all prospective students at High Point College. In order that I might speak with assurance, I wrote to the President of the University, asking him if credit would be given there for the work done at High Point College by our students, and the following letter was received:

'Dear President Andrews: Your letter to the President, dated July 15th, has been re-referred to me for answer. It is our custom to follow as nearly as possible the ratings given to colleges by our State Department of Education. I have just received from Mr. James E. Hillman a letter that gives me the impression that his department is willing at this time to recognize the work done at High Point College as far as it has gone—namely, two years.

'Therefore, our practice will be the same as to applicants from your institution as it is in cases from any other college—that is, we will allow tentative credit, in the curriculum chosen by the applicant, for all work certified as completed satisfactorily at High Point College, insofar as that work applies upon the requirements of the curriculum chosen. Credits become permanent if the applicant does good work here.

'With best wishes, I am

'Very truly yours,

'Thomas J. Wilson, Jr,

'Registrar.'

"It is plain from the above letter that no student who does good work at High Point College will find it difficult to get recognition at other colleges in the state, since the State Board of Education recognizes the work done here. Dr. Hillman and Dr. Highsmith visited High Point College several months ago, and their recommendation is the result of that investigation. Very truly yours,

"R. M. Andrews, Pres."

Some of our friends in North Carolina seem to have mighty good forgetters, or they are just wilfully misrepresenting us.

High Point College is new and modern in every way. It is well equipped with a splendid faculty and with the very best of school furnishings. It is placing about the boys and girls the very best of Christian influences, and one of the happiest groups of people to be found anywhere is housed in our High Point College buildings. Right here our boys and girls who are going to college anywhere can get the very best. Ask the young folks who are there.

The standardizing agencies of North Carolina tell us that we are doing A-grade work, and that they will give us credit for A-grade work.

Any one who tells a different tale about it is simply ignorant of the facts, or they wilfully misrepresent. And it seems to us that those who do it, do it because they are willing to injure a young and rising college.

Yours for fairness, A. G. Dixon.

TOM WATSON'S DESCRIPTION OF A SAM JONES REVIVAL.

By H. H. Smith.

In 1896, just after the failure of his candidacy of the Vice-Presidency, Thomas E. Watson wrote a very spicy account of his first attendance at a meeting conducted by Sam Jones. After reading it, it will be easy to agree with an editor of a religious paper who wrote just after Sam Jones' death: "No man had such sharp wit, such force of apt illustration, such terrible denunciatory powers as the Rev. Sam Jones."

Mr. Watson wrote:

"We did not yawn the day we went to hear Sam Jones.

"There he was, clad in a little black jumptail coat, and looking as much like the regulation preacher as we look like the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

"He was not in the pupit. He was right next to the crowd, standing within the railing, and almost in touch of the victims.

"His head was down, as if he was holding on to his chain of thought by the teeth, but his right hand was going energetically up and down, with all the grace of a pump-handle.

"And, Lord! how he did hammer the brethren. How he did peel the amen corner. How he did smash their solemn self-conceit, their profound self-satisfaction, their peaceful co-partnership with the Almighty, their placid conviction that they were the trustees of the New Jerusalem!

"We sinners looked on, listened, grinned. It was all we could do to keep from saying, 'Sick 'em, Sam!'

"We knew some of those men. We sinners knew their failings. We wondered where Jones had learned it all. We rejoiced exceedingly, and the amen-corner brethren sweated in their great agony.

"After a while, with solemn, irresistible force, Jones called on these brethren to rise in public, confess their shortcomings, and kneel for divine grace.

"And they knelt. With groans and sobs and tears these old bell-wethers of the flock fell on their knees and cried aloud in their distress.

"And the little man in the short-tail coat was master of the situaion.

"Then what?

"He turned his guns upon us sinners and he enfiladed us. He raked us fore and aft. He gave us grape and canister and all the rest. He abused us and ridiculed us; he stormed at us and laughed at us; he called us flop-eared hounds, beer-kegs and whisky-soaks. He plainly said that we were all hypocrites and liars, and he intimated, somewhat broadly, that most of us would steal.

"Oh, we had a time of it, I assure you. For six weeks the farms and stores were neglected, and Jones, Jones, JONES was the whole thing."

When Sam Jones died, just ten years after this article was written, Mr. Watson paid the great evangelist the following tribute:

"Against vice in all its forms he brought every weapon known to the Armory of Right, and he used them, with a force and skill and tireless energy which made him the most powerful evangelist of Christ that recent history has known.

"'Brilliant, witty, wise, eloquent, profound in his knowledge of the human heart, no man ever faced an audience who could so easily master it.

"From laughter to tears, from indifference to enthusiasm, from levity to intense emotion, he could lead the multitude at his will. Under his magnetism and will-power the brazen libertine blushed for shame, the hardened criminal trembled in fear, smug respectability saw its shortcomings, sham Christians forgot to be self-complacent, social hypocrites fell upon their knees, and the miser opened his purse."

THAT THEY MAY BE ONE.

Helping to Answer The Prayer of Our Lord.

By Luther K. Long.

More than 700 years before Christ, Isaiah wrote "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

This idea of a warless world—inspired of God—came to the prophet in the midst of wars and rumors of wars and preparations for future wars. War has not yet been abolished. But we believe it will be; and people are planning and working as never before, in the faith that this greatest crime of society against society shall come to an end.

That Jesus prayed for the oneness of his followers is sufficient warrant for us to work for church union. Our faith need not waver. In the face of adverse winds of prejudice, past icebergs of sectarian bigotry, the good ship Church sails on; and it will, we believe, some day gain the port of Union.

I was much interested in a communication from E. S. Wills—"An Argument for Combining Denominations"—which appeared in the Herald for February 19. That was a gracious response which he made to the following suggestion of a minister of the Christian denomination; "The similarity between the Christian, Congregational, Disciple, Free Will Baptist, and Methodist Protestant denominations is so marked that these denominations can and should unite for the purpose of greater efficiency in work and economy in operating expenses."

In addition to the economy and efficiency already given, I should like to suggest this other reason for bringing these five denominations together: This union would provide for those going into it a larger, finer, and richer fellowship than is possible in their present isolated condition. I know all these denominations and at the present time I am enjoying quite intimate relations with three of them.

Mr. Wills refers only to the results of union that would follow in North Carolina. I am not sure whether the union contemplated by the minister of the Christian denomination is nation-wide, or only state-wide. However that may be, it seems to me that state wide union is a good proposition to discuss.

Is it not possible that union of denominations within the borders of a state can be handled more effectively than in the larger unit? Leaders and churches and problems are closer to each other, and details can be worked out more satisfactorily. The prohibition movement developed locally and many state laws were passed before the eighteenth amendment made prohibition nation-wide.

Haven't the denominations made a mistake in each one endeavoring to cover our entire national territory—and even the whole world, They get spread out so thin in many places that they make but little impression. There is, of course, some localizing of denominationalism. In Boston and New Haven Congregationalists are strong. In Pittsburgh Presbyterians dominate the situation. Episcopalians are numerous and wealthy in New York City. Quakers abound in Philadelphia. Methodists are in power in Cincinnati, Chicago, and many other places. Methodist Protestants give an especially good account of themselves in Maryland.

I am wondering if it may not eventually come about that the church in each state, or half of a state, or two or three small states combined, will be so organized and managed as to express the thoughts and feelings of the people of that unit, and to do the work that appeals to them as the wise enterprises to undertake. This would give a pleasing variety of religious life and effort. The Christians of one state could not impose their theological opinions and customs on the Christians of a neighboring state. Ideas, however, could freely circulate. Books, papers, and preachers would readily pass back and forth across state lines, and great conventions of various sorts would provide means for acquaintance and fellowship.

Of course puzzling problems can be suggested: These five denominations do not believe exactly alike. They do not manage their churches in precisely the same way. How would they carry on their missionary and educational enterprises? What would become of their relations with their several denominations outside of North Carolina?

These things do not greatly trouble me. Mr. Wills wisely says: "If the amalgamation of a large number of small manufacturing plants under one central management results in greater production and larger dividends for the stock-holders, would not the same principle applied to the church work equally well? Do we give the same keen, intelligent thinking to our church work that we give to our business?"

To say that the Christian people in these five denominations in North Carolina can not solve these practical problems—if they want to—is to discredit their intelligence, their business sagacity, and their Christian spirit. To say that they cannot be led aright—in case they want to be thus led—is to discredit the wisdom and power of God's spirit.

I should very much like to see this movement started. Any two of the five denominations could begin it. That the other three would come into the arrangement—one at a time, or all together—seems quite likely.

ROSITA'S FINGER.

Now who would have supposed that a fin- could cause things to happen; just one ger? Yet it all came about because of Ro- a's finger, the first one on her right hand. Rosita was a dark-eyed Porto Rican girl. r mountain home was one of the poorest the little cluster of houses not far from city of Ponce. The place was called Corral ejo, which means Old Back Yard. That is t exactly what it was. The house was a y shack, the door opening on the mountain d. The house was raised on sections of e trunks, which made the floor quite even l left room for the pigs to play under- ath. Pigs? Oh, yes; and chickens and goats well. Why, the goats came and went in the use with as much freedom as your best dog ends in this country.

In spite of her poor home, Rosita was a ppy little girl; but there was just one thing wished for more than anything else in world. Sometimes she whispered it to the nana tree and her pet goat. "If I could y go every week to the school of the mis- nary! She had so sweet a smile, and the ls who go say she tells wonderful stories."

"I would like to go, too," said a voice ide her, and she turned quickly to face playmate, Maria.

Rosita clapped her hands. "Would you?" asked eagerly. "I have wanted to go, but y will not let me," and here she motion- toward the house. "But baby Raul is eep now and we can play."

"I know what we can do!" exclaimed ria. "We can go down and listen outside school. That would not be going in, and will not tell a soul."

Rosita nodded agreement, and taking hold her friend's hand started down the road. "hat is right," she said. "If we do not go surely my father can not be angry, though will not say anything about it," she added iously. One could never tell, and perhaps father would not even approve of listen- outside.

They hurried along the path, and in a minutes were creeping quietly under the ndows of the school, and listening to the nds coming from within. They were in time hear a beautiful story; that is, part of it. seemed they had listened no time at all; en they heard the teacher say, "Why, I not know it was so late. I shall finish the y tomorrow."

They crept quickly away and ran up the . "It was wonderful, Maria," said Rosita, en they stopped for breath. "We must go en."

"Yes," answered Maria. "We must go to- rrow and hear the rest of the story."

"Yes, indeed," agreed Rosita. "I will hur- and get the work done so there will be no son why I should not play. I shall wait you under the banana tree; and remem- , it is our secret."

"Of course—our secret," and Maria nod- as she took the path that led to her own le home.

The next day they went again, and the next, the next. They heard the rest of the story, ny stories, and a song. To learn that they had only listened carefully when the other children sang it, then joined in very softly. They often sang the song when they were to- ether, and they were sure no one could hear. In fact, it seemed to Rosita that her heart was singing it most of the time, and that some day it just must come out without her knowing it. Which is exactly what it did, much to her father's surprise.

"What is that you are singing?" he asked.

Rosita was so surprised that she jumped but she told the truth. "It is the song that they sing at the missionary school," she re- plied.

"What!" shouted the father. "Have you been going there? Did I not tell you never to go?" and he was very angry.

"I did not go into the school," answered Rosita quickly. "I only listened outside to the stories and songs. They are beautiful—"

Her father would not listen. "I know! I have heard! I tell you to stay away! You are not even to listen outside! The missionaries come with strange customs and ways that are not good. You are not to sing that song again, either." And indeed Rosita did not feel like singing that or any other song.

It was the next day that it happened. The mother called from outside, "Rosita, bring me the black pan, and hurry." Rosita ran to get it. The pan was hidden behind the big cans of water that had been carried half a mile from the mountain spring, and as she leaned over to get it, she put her hand against the wall to keep from falling. As she did so a rusty nail pierced her finger and she jumped back. "Ouch!" she said, and then reached again for the pan, taking care to avoid the nail. The matter was soon forgotten, because there was so much to keep her busy, and she was too tired at night to let a little pain in her finger keep her awake.

In the morning, however, Rosita held a council with her pet goat and the banana tree. "It still hurts," she confided to them. "But of course it isn't much, and I won't say a thing about it to anybody."

That was not the last of it. The finger grew worse and Rosita became quite ill. Then it was that the missionary lady herself appeared. Rosita looked up from her little bed on the floor and saw her standing in the doorway like a bit of sunshine. "It is the missionary lady!" she called gladly. It was not long before the mother had told about the finger.

"I heard about it," was the answer. "That is why I came. I knew Rosita used to listen outside the window and I missed her. She must have care; she is very sick."

The mother shook her head. "There is no money," she said sadly.

"That makes no difference," said the missionary lady. "I will take care of that. I will take her to the hospital."

Just then the father came in. He was not at all glad to see the company, but the Sunshine lady did not seem to notice and was as nice as ever. In the end she had her way and planned to take Rosita away to get well.

A few days later the little Porto Rican girl entered another world, a world of beautiful beds and clean, soft sheets and kind nurses. Never had Rosita enjoyed so much attention. And indeed she needed it at first, because she was very sick. One day even the father was only allowed to look in at the door without speaking. Then he forgot his pride and went to the missionary lady for comfort. After that he never spoke any but kind words about the missionary and her school. In fact, one day when Rosita was well enough to sit up, he came in the hospital ward in time to hear her lead the rest of the children in singing, "Yes, Jesus Loves Me."

And he only smiled. With that happening you can guess the rest: and not only did the happy little Rosita walk proudly into the school of the missionary, but Rosita and her whole family walked proudly into the church of the missionary every Sunday. And all on account of a finger.—Ethel Demont, in Junior World.

It may safely be said that the growth of a Christian is, in the great majority of cases, exactly proportioned to the real, applied knowledge of the Word of God. "Is it not for this cause that ye err, that ye know not the scriptures nor the power of God?" And so the Word becomes the greatest and most rational means to personal acquaintance with God. We may as certainly and truly come to know Him through His Word as we may come to know a correspondent whom we have never seen through his letters.—Selected.

A GROUP OF POEMS.

By Frances Barker.

(Miss Barker is 13 years old; she lives in Berkeley, California, and has just begun high school).

Spring.

Spring is in the air,
It is on the hill.
Joy is everywhere,
Everywhere goodwill.

Sunset.

Sunset's colors are soft tonight,
And as beautiful as the dawn,
The sun, from its shining height,
Into the ocean has gone.

A Spring Day.

The hills are clothed in beauty,
The sky is brightest blue.
I long to be out in the sunshine
And the open air, don't you?
But here in school we labor,
When we would like to be
Learning the beauties of nature.
And seeing things pleasant to see.
When the bell has finally sounded,
And we are free at last,
Straight to the hills we journey,
And we surely do travel fast.

Rain.

Yesterday the sun shone:
Now it rains.
It is dark and dreary
O'er the plains.
Where once sun shone brightly,
Dull rains falls.
But the earth is thankful
For it all.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

This Monday morning finds me at home, having returned from a very pleasant trip to Mt. Hermon charge, with Rev. W. F. Ashburn. His second quarterly conference was held in the Belmont church on Saturday, the 27th ult. The attendance was small, but the spirit of the meeting was fine. Reports indicated that they were a bit more than fifty per cent. behind with the finances for the year.

On Sunday morning at 11 o'clock we were at Belmont where I preached to a good congregation of earnest listeners. The Lord's Supper was administered following preaching. This church has a wonderful opportunity in this community, and we believe they are trying to measue up to it. They need a good C. E. Society and a more active missionary society. Following the morning service the stewards paid pastor's salary in full to date.

The afternoon found us at Friendship. It is always a pleasure to go to this church. These people seem to have great pride in their church and community. It is a fine group of workers, and the future is securee if all their young people develop into good Christian workers. They too have a fine opportunity for service. They did not do so well financially as Belmont, though they did pay the pastor some.

At the evening hour we were at Mt. Hermon, and found a splendid audience waiting for us. We were tired, but they were such good listeners that it was easy to preach to them. The congegation here was largely of young people. A fine opportunity for service. If the people at all these churches will just adopt the monthly payment plan and will live up to it they will make much better progress in Kingdom service.

Bro. Ashburn loves his people and they love him, so they are working together beautifully.

February Collections.

All pastors and church workers have been urged to collect for the A. C. B. during Feb. Many have responded to this call, and really we hope every church in the Conference has responded. Whatever amount of money is in hand, let it be sent to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point, N. C., at once. Please don't hold it. Send it in.

Easter Services.

Are you planning f or Easter? This is a great time in the year to get much done for our Master. For years now, our church has been called upon at Easter to lay its offerings upon the altar for Home Missions. The Board of Home Missions provides the Easter programs and supplies free of cost, with the understanding that an offering is taken for Home Missions. If you have not already done so, write to Dr. J. M. Sheridan, 516 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md., tell him the size of your Sunday school, and ask him to send you the supplies.

A Request t o Young People.

My dear young people, if your Sunday school superintendent is backward about doing this, I am asking that some of you in each school offer your services to help get up this service, and have some one order the programs at once. All that is raised that day will count on your General Conference Budget.

The High Point College.

Concerning this institution, Rev. F. W. Stephenson said last week, "The effort being made by Hgh Point College to liquidate its obligations as well as to build up a substantial endowment is being watched with intense interest throughout the denomination. Surely we have no people more heroic. They have been sacrificing to the limit and evidently intend to continue until the college is on a solid financial foundation. If those who have done little would do half as much as those who are carrying the load, the problem would be solved without delay."

The eyes of the entire denomination are upon us as we stadily march up the hill of progress with our financial load, which is just a great load of opportunities our Father, God, has placed upon us.

Please read also this clipping from what Mr. Wills said last week.

"A good brother has just made a contribution. He stated that he might have paid the amount before, but from what his pastor said, he judged that the college was just about gone, and he did not see any need of paying out more money if it would not accomplish any thing. This will give an idea of the dilemma in which we are placed. If we emphasize the value of our property and appear to be prosperous, folks will think we do not need money, and if we explain how badly we need it, it may be inferred that the college is about to fail. The simple truth is that we have property in Greensboro and High Point valued at nearly $600,000; we owe a large amount of money, and we need that which has been promised us, in order that we may meet our obligations."

Pardon this repetition. I have repeated Mr. Wills' statement for the sake of emphasis. WE HAVE DONE WONDERS DURING THE LAST FOUR YEARS. And by the help of the same God who guided us through these four years, WE WILL DO GREATER THINGS THAN THESE IN THE YEARS TO COME. But, brethren, it is a crime for any pastor, or any layman, to add to our burdens by giving out periodically his broken doses of pessimism. In answer to the prayers and the constant efforts the faithful ones are putting forth, God, our Father, will lead on to success in this great undertaking. We believe His smile of approvai is upon the High Point College, and because of THIS, WE WILL SUCCEED.

Student Body.

The student body there at present is a fine group of young people. It will be just as fine next year, and the numbers must be greatly increased.

We are laying our plans to put 250 boarding students there next fall and 125 day students. This can be done if all those who love High Point College will help. Do you know young men or young women who ought to go to college? Then help us to get them to High Point College. Pray for the college. And work for the college and pay every dollar you can to the college.

EASTER SERVICE.

I am pleased to report that the number of orders received for programs for the Easter Service is most gratifying.

Up to Saturday, February 27th, we have 343 orders, calling for 24,269 programs and 38,321 envelopes.

Many are expressing themselves favorably in regard to the character of the program and declaring their purpose to make the coming Easter Service the greatest in the history of their churches. While Easter is still five weeks off and there may seem to some to be abundance of time, it is wise to begin early.

Brother Pastor, or Sunday School Superintendent, kindly send in your orders. If you have not had sample copies write naming the number of programs and envelopes and they will be sent you at once. Be sure to order enough to supply your school.

Now, all together for a great Easter service.

PRAYER.

At early, fairest blush of day,
That tranquil hour---I bid thee pray.
Thy soul in sweet communion there,
Finds comfort, peace and joy in prayer.

Again, at blaze of noon-tide hour,
Sweet solace find, and strengthening power.
To cheer each task, to banish care,
Go, seek ye then, the Lord in prayer.

Is any hour more calm and sweet,
Than twilight at the Mercy Seat?
Then blessings ask, at hush of day,
On all, when reverently we pray.

Then evening, morning and at noon,
O burdened heart, seek to commune.
"Ask what ye will," and trust it all Unto the Lord, on whom we call.

--Mrs. C. V. Hardin has passed away. She died on Friday of last week. The funeral was at Tabernacle church on Monday at ten o'clock. Rev. L. W. Gerringer conducted the service, assisted by Dr. Johnson, Rev. Mr. Hinkle of the Friends' church in Greensboro, Rev. Edward Suits, and the editor of the Herald. A large number were present. She had reached almost 89 years of age. She was a woman of fine Christian character, and God has taken her somewhat as He took Enoch.

Results in College Library Campaign.

Miss Blanche Hardee, of Enfield, has the nor of sending the first shipment of books the High Point College Library since the Board launched its campaign two weeks ago. These have been properly credited to her and placed in the library this week. We are expecting to receive a large number from the friends of the college throughout the denomination.

Prof. J. D. Hardy, who is serving as pastor of the Lexington church while Brother Bethea is abroad, took the matter up with the folks in Lexington and secured about 50 volumes which were placed at once in the library. Prof. Lindley was able to secure 75 volumes from a book-distributing agency to which he wrote for co-operation.

Brother Pritchard writes that the Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society of Asheboro, under the leadership of Miss Esther Ross, will act as collecting agency in Asheboro and they expect to send in a large number soon.

A number of pastors, including Rev. B. M. Williams, Rev. C. L. Spencer, and Dr. Geo. R. Brown, have written letters expressing their interest and co-operation. The High Point churches of course will send their books direct to the college in order to save postage in sending them here to Greensboro and then back to the college.

Mrs. J. J. Crawford, of Hillsboro, will try to secure a number from her friends in the faculty of the University at Chapel Hill.

Friends of the college are urged to collect books as rapidly as possible now and ship them to Rev. Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade St., Greensboro, N. C. An attractive slip has been printed on which the names of all contributors will be written. The slip will be pasted on the fly leaf of each book and then the book will be taken to the college.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Attention, Intermediates!

The following letter from the Intermediate Superintendent of the State Christian Endeavor Union will be of interest to all Intermediate Endeavorers everywhere. LET'S GET INTO THIS CONTEST AND SHOW MISS CRISP WHAT Methodist Protestant Intermediates can do!

Dear Superintendent:

I have a big and important piece of news for you and your Intermediates. Mr. Evans has just written me about it and I can hardly wait to pass it on to you. When the All-South Christian Endeavor Convention meets in Daytona Beach, Fla., on July 1-5 there will be at one of the evening sessions an Intermediate Oratorical Contest, in which each of the southern states is entitled to have one representative. The subject for the oration will be "Why every teen-age boy and girl should be a Christian Endeavorer." The requirements are that each contestant must prepare his own oration, must be between the ages of 12 and 17 inclusive, and must be an active member of a Christian Endeavor Society.

The orations will be judged as follows: There will be possible ten points, divided in this manner:

5 points, originality of thought and expression.
2 points, greater number of reasons.
2 points, forcefulness of presentation.
1 point, oratory.

The award for the contest will be a Gold Christian Endeavor Intermediate Oratorical Medal, bearing the winner's name, date of convention, and the wording, "Intermediate Christian Endeavor Oratorical."

Now of course North Carolina must have a representative in that contest, and every Intermediate boy or girl in North Carolina has a chance to be that representative. Our plan for selecting our representative is this: Each superintendent is to inform his or her Intermediates about this contest, urging that each active member write an oration and enter the contest. Then each Society is to have a local contest to which all those interested in the young people of the church should be invited. At that time, the best from those entered is to be selected by a group of competent judges, of which the pastor should be one wherever possible. Then the contestant thus chosen shall send his or her oration to me, together with the contestant's name, the name of the society, and the superintendent's name and address.

I shall then with the help of a committee of competent unbiased judges chosen from C. E. ranks, seeclt from the orations sent in the one we judge best, using the points given above as a guide in making the selection. The winning orator will be requested to give his or her oration at the North Carolina State Convention meeting in High Point on June 18-20, and then will go to Florida to repreesent North Carolina Intermediates there. One more important thing: These orations must be in my hands by March 15th, or they cannot be entered in the contest.

Now let us see what great things North Carolina Intermediates can do. Set your boys and girls thinking, working, writing, "orating"—and let me know the result. This is a great opportunity to arouse interest in Intermediate C. E. in your church and community, and I'm counting on you not to let such an opportunity pass. If you need more suggestions, write me. And believe me always, Sincerely yours, Lucy Cherry Crisp, Int. Supt.

N. C. C. E. Union.

Notice.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Executive Boards Meet.

At Calvary church, Greensboro, on Wed., Feb. 17, the Executive Boards of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies met. This was an unusually well attended meeting and much interest was manifested by such a large attendance. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown presided over the morning session. Reports were heard from many officers and secretaries. Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell, Cor. Sec., gave report. If we did not hear her give report from your auxiliary, it is not Mrs. Harrell's fault because she sent your secretary blanks to be filled out and returned to her before that meeting—just blame your own Cor. Sec. for not replying to Mrs. Harrell's letter. She does her part—gives much of her valuable time, but we, who do not co-operate by writing Mrs. Harrell the necessary data are failing to do our duty.

The Treasurer, Mrs. S. W. Taylor, shows efficient work, but she can't raise the budget unless we send her the cash. Friends, do we realize that the Branch meeting is only a few weeks off? That budget must be met—yes, we'll raise it, of course we will. Suggestions were made. The tithe will be the best method. Each society can best work out their own plan. Have you held a public thank-offering service? Give a pageant. "Canton Pearls" is a good one and it will please, for it is a charming little story of a Chinese girl in a Christian school. With a packed house and an explanation about the thank-offering no doubt there would be a very generous offering. This would count on your budget.

Mrs. J. W. Boyles and Mrs. A. H. Ragan extended a hearty invitation for the N. C. Branch to meet at the Community Church in Thomasville, April 20-23. Let's work earnestly, prayerfully, to go to this meeting with our budget raised in full. When you send in names of delegates let these ladies know how many days or nights you will be present. Since so many go back and forth each day in autos, it is essential we let our hostesses know if we will be with them over night too.

After a delighful luncheon served in the hut by the Calvary ladies, the joint session of both societies was conducted by Miss Pearl McCulloch, district chairman. Mrs. C. W. Bates was asked to prepare a leaflet of information for our work. Several district meetings were reported. It was decided that a joint nominating committee for both auxiliaries be appointed at this time which would save confusion at time of branch meeting. This committee is Miss Velna McCulloch, Chmn., Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, and Mrs. J. M. Stone.

The Home Missionary Society was called to order with Mrs. W. C. Hammer presiding. Cor. Sec. Mrs. J. M. Mebane in her report stated that she had mailed 92 letters and had reply to 16. Sorry, our secretaries are so very busy they cannot find time to answer a few questions four times a year to an executive officer! Mrs. Garrett, our treasurer, gave report. There is a shortage in this budget. If we pull together it will be raised. We are confident it will be! It was a pleasure to have so many of our ministers present.

Dr. Dixon made a strong plea for the High Point College Scholarship Fund. There are several students who will be unable to stay in college this spring unless they can get a Scholarship loan. This is our biggest work right now, assisting a worthy boy or girl to get a higher education.

Have we been resting on our oars and peacefully gliding along without sending to Mrs. Garrett that money our society pledged to a Scholarship Fund? The need is most urgent now! Don't rest, dear sisters, until you know that a check has gone to State Treasurer, Mrs. Garrett, for this loan fund.

An easy thing for all to chip in and help raise this scholarship money at once. If we fail them, what then? There are three girls and one boy, Dr. Dixon stated, that must have immediate help or leave the college. Home Missionary women, would we permit such a thing to occur? No, we exclaim. May we again ask you to raise that part of your budget at once. We are hoping several districts will raise a $100 scholarship where a society cannot by itself.

It was recommended to open the "Blessing Boxes" in March for Pine Ridge. Mrs. A. C. Dixon made an interesting talk on the work at large.

Plans were discussed for the Branch meeting in April and also the General Board Meeting in May after which the executive board meeting adjourned, feeling that the day had been well spent and grateful to the Calvary ladies for their hospitality.

Mrs. Stone.

Randleman.—On last Sunday afternoon Mrs. Wm. C. Hammer and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard of Asheboro accepted the invitation of Mrs. W. H. Neese to come up and help us organize a Home Missionary society in our church. The following officers were elected: Mrs. J. L. Hall, Pres.; Miss May Caudle, V. Pres.; May Parsons, Sec., and Miss Opal Hughes, Treas.

May Parsons, Secy.

Dear Co-Workers:

For some time I have been thinking of writing to encourage you in your work, and to congratulate you on the success you have had in promoting the Kingdom of God.

In spite of the fact that many of our churches are organized to do mission work, we do not seem to realize how small is the number of women in the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society as compared with the actual number of our church membership.

I am asking if you will not comply with the request of our Board and get your auxiliary to secure one new member for each member you have on roll. If we will all do this we would double our membership by the time of Branch meeting, April 20th.

I am also asking that you get your pastor to give you a service during March at which time you may have a special Thank-Offering program and take an offering for the work of Foreign Missions. If possible, have readings, a pageant, and music suitable for the occasio If it is not possible to do this, ask the past or someone else to preach a missionary se mon, or make a missionary talk and take a offering.

Our budget is far short of being raise Someone said that we should plan in the b ginning of the year to raise the full amoun We did plan to do this by apportioning among the various auxiliaries according the membership.

If each one will do her part, we will sure raise the budget, and it will be that much count on the General Conference Budget the church.

Will you not see to it that your auxiliar does its best during the next month to g new members, secure a good offering, and o fer definite prayers for the success of the fo eign missionary work of the Methodist Pr testant Church.

Do not fail to send representatives to th Branch meeting at Thomasville on April 20t

Wishing you abundant success in the wor and in your own personal affairs, I am

Sincerely your friend,

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown,
President N. C. Branc

This was followed by praye led by Mrs. L. P. Foust. We were favore with a number of special missionary selection by the choir. Mrs. W. C. Mis Esther Ross of Asheboro was with us with group of young people from the Asheboro M. P. Church who presented a missionar pageant entitled "The Song They Sang." The young people carried their parts ou nicely. A thank-offering was taken and th amount will be sent to the Branch Treasure at once. Our society at Worthville is ne and we appreciate very much the kindness o the good people of Asheboro in lending thei assistance. We say "thank you" and als "come again."

We feel sure that greater interest will b taken in the Society there now.

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

We were delighted to have a call recently from Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., of Greensboro, N. C. Dr. McCulloch is known throughout the church not only for his devoted services as editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald, but as a teacher in Adrian College, his Alma Mater. He is one of the leaders in the North Carolina Conference whose faith in the ultimate success of High Point College is unwavering. He reports a splendid year there and with the outlook continually brighter.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Westminster College, Tehuacana, Texas, the situation of the school was given thorough study. The financial situation has not improved although splendid progress has been made in other features of the work. The state examiner made his annual visit a few weeks ago and his report was very encouraging. President Phipps was instructed to continue his work in the field in the interest of students and funds and to make plans for the session of the summer school.

The followng report was made by the Texas College Examiner regarding Westminster College:

"At this time the College Examiner found the work of Westminster College in better condition than ever before. The student body seemed earnest and hard-working. The faculty is better qualified than heretofore. Commendable progress has been made in enlarging and cataloguing the library. Suitable additions have been made to the laboratory and class room instruction was found to be good.

The difficulties of this institution appear to the College Examiner to be largely, if not entirely, financial. It is a difficult matter to conduct an institution with the number of pupils attending in a manner that justifies the expense, for the cost of instruction per pupil is unusually high. However, the quality of work does not suffer and the college authorities are commended for their energy and activity in placing the college on a better basis than heretofore."

Rev. C. L. Daugherty, D. D., President of the Board of Trustees of Adrian College, and Rev. J. E. Tripp, Secretary of the Board, have issued a call for a meeting of the Trustees to be held in Pittsburgh Tuesday, March 15th, at 10 A. M. At this meeting the Commission appointed by the last session of the General Conference will make its final report and plan for an endowment campaign will be considered. These two matters alone make this one of the most important meetings the Board of Trusttes of Adrian College has ever held. The presidents of the supporting conferences have been invited to discuss the questions involved with the Trustees and interested officials. A joint meeting with Pittsburgh alumni and friends is planned for the same day.

The progress being made at Adrian is indicated by the increase in the number of Methodist Protestant students now attending the college. Eight years ago there were 16. This year over 60 are enrolled. In order to cultivate a better acquaintance between the local Methodist Protestant people and those in the college a George Washington party was held at the church. A splendid representation of both groups made the evening one of delightful fellowship.

Another application has been received and accepted for help from the Board of Education. This makes a total of 38 ministerial students in our colleges and seminary who are being supported this year by our Board. It raises the amount required to nearly $7,200. Since the income from our invested funds is barely $3,200 it means $4,000 must be secured from former beneficiaries or from the budget. We do not like to depend upon the budget for this money as whatever is taken out means so much less for distribution to our schools. They must have every cent we can spare.

One of the most encouraging features about the work connected with the Student Loan Fund is the promptness with which former beneficiaries are making their payments. Of the 43 young people the Board has assisted since its inception only two can be classed as actually delinquent. This is really a remarkable record and encourages us to go forward even more energetically with the effort. The usual testimony of teachers and presidents is that our beneficairies are among the finest class of students in the college. Their class recirds are excellent, and they are found among the leaders in every college activity.

Repayments of beneficiaries of former years are coming in steadily. The amount received to date from the ministerial group totals $1,366.50 with two months yet of our fiscal year. The total for all of last year was but $1,673.50. We have good reason to exuect this will be greatly exceeded this year.

The Student Loan repayments amount to $375 with much more in prospect. For all of last year it totaled $473. Interest payments amounted to $17.15. Since the amount of the Student Loans outstanding are but one-sixth of those of the Ministerial Loans, this is a favorable comparison.

Sunday, February 21, was spent in Newcomerstown with Rev. L. C. Momberg and his splendid people. We were permitted to speak at the morning service in the interests of the board and the denominational program. This is Rev. Mr. Momberg's seventh year as pastor and he is the dean among local ministers. He has led his people in a successful program of remodeling the church with which the basement is now well adapted to a broad visioned church program. F. W. Stephenson.

WASHINGTON EDUCATED HIMSELF.

There were no public schools when Washington was a boy and he had few of the opportunities that boys and girls have today to secure an education. But at the age of thirteen with the aid of tutors he had become, according to one historian, "a good cipherer, a bad speller and a still worse grammarian." But Washington continued his education throughout his whole life. He studied surveying learned the value of accuracy, read good books. As President Coolidge says, "his experience, his powers of observation and absorption finally overcame his lack of early training, so that in his later days his writings, correct in form and taste, adequately revealed the great strength of character that he had developed." Washington was a firm believer in education and even advocated a great national university.

PRAYER.

God's ships of treasure sail upon the sea
Of boundless love, of mercy infinite,
To change their course, retard their onward way,
Nor wind nor wave hath might,
Prayer is the tide for which the vessels wait
Ere they can come to port. And if it be
The tide is low, how then canst thou expect
The treasure ship to see?

LIGHT ON OUR PATHWAY.

Read Galatians 5:16-26.

Life is perflexing; its ways are not always clear. Yet remember this: we do not need to see life as a whole in order to walk straight ahead. There are problems which do not need to trouble us too greatly because their solution is not essential to this day's life, or tomorrow's. We can walk by the light we have. God's Spirit is sufficient for our present needs. Ask God for direction for each day, seek for the Spirit's direction as each occasion arises, and the road will be light as we advance. Half of the trouble of life arises from anticipating difficulty. God's leading is sufficient for the present day; leave the future to the leading of His Holy Spirit.—Living Church.

HOW DO YOU TREAT YOUR SISTER.

"It is the easiest thing in the world," says one of our exchanges, "for a boy to be polite to some other fellow's sister. Then, why is it that some of them find it so hard to remember to be equally courteous to their sisters? Many a boy is rude to his sister without really realizing it; in other words, he forgets to be polite. Then, again, he is afraid of being dubbed a 'sissy' if he should be caught paying some attention to his sister. It is a bad habit for any one to get into—that of saving one's polite ways for ontsiders.

"If she asks you a question, don't answer her in a rude or careless manner, as if you thought she did not know what she was talking about, and wasn't worth listening to.

"Don't tease her, and make fun of her in any way to hurt her feelings. And wouldn't do that to some other girl.

"You can just bank all you have on the boy who is kind and thoughtful to his own, for you may be sure he will develop into the right sort of a man, and is bound to win the respect and admiration of every one."—Selected.

Playing the Fool.

Text: "Behold I have played the fool, and erred exceedingly." I Sam. 26:21.

Many have played the fool in various ways, but few have been brave enough to confess it. Saul was the prince of fools, and playing the fool was his daily pastime. He entered the lists of battle folly in the early part of his reign when he deliberately disobeyed the Lord's command. He was foolish to disobey the divine command. He was foolish to seek his life so malignantly and so unreasonably. And he was foolish to forsake the counsel and guidance of the living God.

Millions have followed in the footsteps of this royal fool. Millions have reaped the same sad harvest of failure and misery he reaped. And millions in our day are playing this same dangerous and deadly game. To warn these and if possible, to save them from loss, shame, and disaster, let us consider very prayerfully some of the ways in which this game is played.

Let us first consider

The Folly of Insincerity.

Many foolishly imagine that they can gain something by putting on the appearance of goodness as good as really is. Falsehood is the heart that is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." Many have hearts and conduct so [illegible] sepulchres which indeed appear beautiful outward but are within "full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness." They pretend what they do not possess. And they have a name that they live but are dead.

It is exceedingly foolish to engage in this game of hypocrisy. The [illegible] wise words: "For nothing is [illegible] the people some of the time, and [illegible] people all of the time, but you can't fool the people all the time." Sooner or later the most intricate scheme of insincerity will be laid bare, and its perpetrator brought to disgrace. For it is written in the sacred page: "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish." And the great Teacher has said in unmistakable terms: "There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known."

This game of make believe is played in every relationship of life. The lover often puts on a good appearance to hide a character he is really ashamed of. The husband or wife sometimes leads the double life. The child deceives the parents and the [illegible] with dalliance towards [illegible]. The student turns his face to doubtful success, but at heart is afraid of failure. The business man puts on a mere show of transaction. And the church member conceals royal [illegible] and [illegible] by empty professions and [illegible]

In the [illegible]

The Folly of Selfseeking.

Twenty-five centuries ago [illegible] life of this wonderful [illegible] not." And the Apostle [illegible] set forth the same wise sentiment: "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's [illegible]." Jesus Christ enjoined self denial, the opposite of selfseeking: "If [illegible] will come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Selfseeking often takes the form of inordinate ambition. The seeker after power and [illegible] becomes unscrupulous, fears [illegible] and [illegible] is to him a snare. Covetousness or the love of money has led many to hopelessness. Paul is [illegible] "But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."

Pleasure is another goal of the selfseeker. They become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." They seek to have a good time at the sacrifice of a good character. Many gorge the aesthetic sense and starve the immortal soul.

The selfseeker is all hastening to a sad end. The end of the rich fool was typical of him. The rich young ruler went away sorrowful because he loved the things of this world more than he did eternal life. Dives was lost not because he lived only for this world. But Scripture has declared that "the life of pleasure is dead, while she liveth," and dead eternally after this life is over.

[illegible] consider

The Folly of Resentment.

The [illegible] of retaliation, of extracting [illegible] and a tooth for a tooth," [illegible]n. The New Testament Law-[illegible] this method of dealing [illegible] unkindness, inhumanity, unchristianness, and [illegible] As opposed to it He has set forth the principles of nonresistance, charity, and forgiveness. How Him as He speaks with authority: "But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

But resentment or retaliation stirs up more strife, [illegible] injuries, and makes reconciliation impossible. Love not hate, is [illegible] to the game of life. It is [illegible] by the Savior of mankind. [illegible] "But I say unto you, "Love [illegible] bless them that curse you, do [illegible] them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."

Furthermore resentment dethrones the living God, and drives the love of God out of the heart. For it is impossible to love God and hate a brother or a human being. For the [illegible] against a brother Jesus counts as being [illegible] against Himself. For He has said and will say it again in the Judgment, "Inasmuch as ye have done unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And the Apostle of Love [illegible] "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen."

And resentment stirs up much unhappiness. The large blessings of life, providence, and redemption seem tame, uninviting, and even undesirable to those who hold grudges against any of their fellowmankind. The dove of peace will not make her nest in a heart of hate and unforgiveness. The joy unspeakable and full of glory cannot abide in such a heart. And the life that flows from such a heart will be barren of the largest and best usefulness.

Let us quit playing the fool. Let the insincere fool give up his vain pretences, false professions, and damnable hypocrisies. Let the selfseeking fool give self the go-by and let Christ be all and in all. And let the resenting fool turn out the demons of hate and retaliation out of his heart and let the spirit of Christ rule therein.

And let us be ashamed of such littleness. Let us pray for large hearts and broad sympathies. Let us seek a baptism of love that will drive out all that is little and low and mean: And let us strive most earnestly to love God with all our heart, mind, soul, and strength, and our neighbors as ourselves.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 14.

Last Words of Jesus With His Disciples.

Lesson Text: John 14:1-17.

Golden Text: John 14:6.

The Central Truth: Jesus is the Way to God, the truth that lightensup this darkened world, and the Life that imparts and insures immortality.

Scriptural Points.

1. "Let not your heart be troubled." Sorrow filled the hearts of the disciples as the shadow of the cross fell upon the pathway of Jesus. To comfort them Jesus points to a better world, a better day, and a glorious reunion.

2. "Believe also in me." Faith will always find a way out of the darkest tribulations, victory over the severest difficulties, and joy in the hour of bitterest grief.

3. "In my Father's house are many mansions." There is room, beauty, and grandeur in the saints' everlasting rest. It is the Father's home and the eternal home of His children.

4. "I go to prepare a place for you." Jesus has played several roles already. He created the worlds. As the Word He gave the law on Sinai and gave the message of the kingdom in Judea and Galilee. In the garden and on the cross He offered Himself a sacrifice for sin, as the Highpriest of the race. He will soon ascend to glory where He will be Mediator between God and man. He will also be the Architect or Builder of the New Jerusalem.

5. "I will come again." He will come in the clouds of glory, with ten thousand of His saints, "and all the holy angels with him." He will come to gather together his elect from the four corners of the earth, both living and those in their graves.

6. "How can we know the way?" The teaching of Jesus makes the way so plain that a wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein. The faith of Jesus imparts willingness and power to walk this way. The life of Jesus has illumined this way with heavenly brightness. And the atonement of Jesus opens up this way to every one who will repent and believe.

7. "Shew us the Father." Jesus Himself in His personality, life, and ministry is a complete revelation of the Father. "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," Jesus has set forth in the earthly sphere just what the Father is in every realm of life.

8. "And greater works than these shall ye do." Jesus does not mean that the believer's works will be greater in kind; for the servant cannot be greater than his Master nor can he that is sent be greater than He that sent him. Jesus meant that the Dispensation of the Holy Spirit would be greater than the Dispensation in which He Himself figured. The Dispensation of Jesus was mainly a depensation of preparation. In the Dispensation of the Holy Spirit the race will reap the fruitage of this preparation. The works of believers under the Holy Spirit are greater in number, in depth, and in glorious attainments than the works that Jesus performed on earth.

9. "If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it." Every provision of grace, every promise of blessing has the guarantee of Jesus' name; just as if Jesus' name was signed to any and every note on the Bank of Redemption. And His signature guarantees the prompt and full payment.

10. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Obedience is an unfailing fruitage of love. It is easy, yea, delightful, to do what one loves to do. The love for a person makes one glad to do the will or pleasure of that person. This is the compelling law of love. Love and obedience are joined together; they cannot be divorced.

11. "And I will pray the Father." The intercessions of Jesus are mighty and prevailing. They bring to the race large lengthening of opportunity, a wonderful restraint of the power of evil, a safe bringing back of wanderers from the fold, a deep quickening of conscience and faith, and delightful outpourings of the Holy Spirit.

12. "And he shall give you another Comforter." The Holy Spirit will impart comfort by taking away sin, the chief cause of trouble, by establishing the most delightful sonship with God the Father, by granting assurance or pledge of everlasting life, and by dispensing joyful foretastes of the glory world.

13. "The Spirit of truth." The truth of God is the chief means employed by the Spirit in salvation, purification, and glorification of believers. He wields "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

14. "For he dwelleth with you." The Holy Spirit is surely a Person, the third Person of the Godhead. He is as much a Person as God the Father and God the Son. He is spoken of in verse 17 at least five times as "whom," "he," and "him," pronouns always use to represent a person. His function is to perform the internal work of redeeming grace, just as Jesus Christ has met the outward conditions or demands of salvation. The Holy Spirit reproves the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment.

Practical Points.

1. Imperfect beings in an imperfect world cannot escape trouble. It comes from every possible angle. Man is born to trouble as inevitably as the sparks fly upward.

2. Trouble is not an unmixed evil. Many rich blessings may flow from it. "But we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience; and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." Rom. 5:3-5.

3. The Father of mercies is the haven of refuge of the saints. He is "our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." He is as "an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Isa. 32:2.

4. Prayer lifts the shadows from the troubled spirit. Prayer makes the desert of anguish blossom with the rose of happiness. "The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee; send to thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion." Ps. 20:1-2.

5. Tribulation is often a much-needed furnace of purification. "And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as silver and gold, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Mal. 3:3.

6. "Let Jesus come into your heart." "And the smile of the Lord will be the feast of the soul."

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas it has pleased our kind Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our dear friend and sister, Mrs. I. Y. Clodfelter, a faithful member of Bethesda church, North Davidson Ct., and of the Ladies' Aid Society, be it resolved:

First, That we the members of the Aid Society who loved her and are sad to have her meet with us no more in our society or church bow with humble hearts to His will. We know that we will miss her sadly, but her influence will live on and be an inspiration to us all. We know what it means to love and part with those dear to us, so from the very depths of our hearts, we sorrow with you, dear family.

Second, That we place on record our appreciation of her earnest Christian character as exemplified by her daily life and faithful service in every department of Christian work.

Third, That we recommend that others emulate her example of Christian fidelity.

Fiurth, That we extend to her bereaved family and loved ones our heart-felt sympathy.

Fifth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent the family and to the Methodist Protestant Herald.

Whitaker.

A mantle of sorrow fell upon Shiloh and friendship churches when the wires flashed the news of the sudden passing of our beloved ex pastor, Dr. C. L. Whitaker. Such a piece of love and esteem did he have in the hearts of his flock that they cannot forget his voice even though it is now still. And it made our hearts glad when he told us that though he loved his new work, his heart still hungered for his people. But we are thankful that such a man has lived and served in our midst. His teachings and sermons will hover like benedictions over us through the years to come. And his songs which he loved so much to sing were like the strains of a melody from the beyond. Hard indeed was the heart that would not soften under the spell of them.

May his mantle of humility, consecration, and untiring service fall upon some of our young men today that his great spirit may still carry on through the coming years.

John Eaton Burroughs.

John Eaton Burroughs, a citizen of Dabney, Vance county, N. C., was born in what was then Granville county, November 17, 1843; died January 30, 1926 at his home. The deceased was married to Miss Sue Glover on July 6, 1864. To this union were born five children. Two of the children passed into the beyond in young life. The deceased is survived by Mrs. Sue Glover Burroughs, two sons, W. B. Burroughs of Washington, D. C., J. L. Burroughs of Jacksonville, Fla., one daughter, Mrs. S. W. Clark, of Dabney, N. C. There are sixteen grandchildren, 23 great-grandchildren.

As a gentleman, he was of the first type. An all-round Southern Christian gentleman who lived a life of honored usefulness and was loved and esteemed by multitudes of citizens of Vance county, besides he had a large acquaintanceship in and out of his native state. He was widely known and generally loved by all who knew him. He was refined, intelligent. His advice was often sought and relied upon. He loved his friends and took pride in helping those less fortunate than himself.

As a citizen he had but few equals, and, perhaps, none surpassed him. He served in the war between the states in Company K, 14th Regiment. He always held in high esteem his old comrades in war. The writer has heard him speak so tenderly of his fellow soldiers in those dark days and weep. He was state senator from the county of Granville during the days of reconstruction when Zeb Vance was Governor. He liked to talk and tell the jokes of the campaigns in those days. After Vance County was formed he again represented the counties of Vance and Warren in the Senate of North Carolina. He was for several years a member of the Board of Commissioners of Vance county. In this capacity he served his county well. He was progressive, yet he believed in economical administration. His idea was that roads and education should have prior claim on tax payers. He believed that every child should have the best possible chance of an education.

As a church member he was always faithful and true to his church and pastor. For many years he was superintendent of Sunday school, a trustee of his church, representing Vance charge in several of our annual conferences. In his sickness he talked much about the church. He often wished for his old pastor to talk with. He frequently spoke of his death as going off on a journey. He said he was not afraid to die, that he was ready and wanted all his relatives and friends to meet him in Heaven.

He was a good husband, a kind and tender father. He was for many years a merchant and a large farmer.

In this dispensation of God's righteous providence, Vance county loses one of its most valuable citizens: the church a true and faithful supporter: the wife a loving and tender companion: the children an affectionate father; the community a wise adviser.

We do not weep as those who have no hope, but for our loss here and here alone, for we shall meet again on that eternal shore.

Funeral was held at the home by Rev. R. A. Hunter, pastor of the Henderson M. P. Church. The writer was expected, but somehow the 'phone failed to get me. The mortal remains inow rest in the cemetery while Bro. Burroughs has gone to his eternal home.

May God graciously bless Sister Burroughs and give grace for this time of great need.

Grace Church Baraca Class Mourns the Loss of Their Teacher, Dr. C. L. Whitaker.

Whereas Almighty God in His infinite wisdom and infallible judgment has seen fit to call from our midst our esteemed brother and teacher, Dr. Clifton L. Whitaker:

And whereas by his sudden departure from this world, we the members of the Grace M. P. Baraca Class are deprived of a worthy and able teacher, a lovable character and an outstanding man among men; and whereas his death has caused a great loss to this class for as our teacher he served faithfully, honestly and at all times conscientiously, doing every thing in his power to better the lives and conditions of the members; and whereas although we realize that no words of ours can lessen the sorrow that has come into the lives of the family of our deceased brother, it may be of some consolation for them to know how highly he was esteemed by the members of this class; therefore be it

Resolved, that we the members of the Grace M. P. Baraca Class in regular meeting assembled, on the 28th of February, 1926, deeply affected by his death and mindful of his many kind acts, his integrity, and his worth, extend to his grief-stricken family our heart-felt sympathy and condolence; and be it further

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication, and a copy be sent to High Point College.

In Loving Memory.

With sad hearts we the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Calvary M. P. Church offer this tribute of our dear sister, Mrs. W. J. Williams.

Resolved, That the removal of such a life from our community leaves a vacancy and shadow that will be greatly realized by all the members and friends of our society.

Resolved, That we extend our sincere sympathy to her husband and children and commend them to Him who is the great Comforter.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication, and one be recorded in our minutes.

A Tribute of Love.

I know there will be suitable obituaries written, but I cannot fail to add a little tribute to the memory of my friend and ex-pastor, Rev. Clifton L. Whitaker, D. D.

When I was a little girl of fourteen years, Mr. Whitaker came to be my pastor. As a child I learned to love him very dearly, and his love and this friendship have grown with the years, and I feel that in his going my loss is great. He served our church as pastor four different times, giving us altogether 11 years of his time. These years meant so much to us as a church. Had we a problem in our church life, if we could just call him in we felt it would be solved right. When he was no longer our pastor he would look out for our interest at conference. Not only was he interested in the individual and church life but also in the life of our town. How we shall miss him! But I am sure he has an interest in us still, although he has left us for a little while. We feel sure our loss is his gain, for we believe that voice we so loved to hear sing is now singing around our Father's throne, and he is mingling with our loved ones who once loved him here, but have passed over the river. We can truthfully sing, "O think of the friends over there!"

To the sorrowing loved ones we offer our sympathy, and say, your sorrow is our sorrow too. May his influence continue to live in our lives so that in years to come we may show that "though he was dead, yet he speaketh," is the prayer of one who loved him.

THE WISHING GIRL.

She wished she were a princess—
Or, better still, a queen;
She wished to see strange countries
That she had never seen.
She saw the wealthy ladies
And wished to take their place;
She wished for their fine jewels,
Their satins and their lace.
She wished that all her duties
Were changed to play and fun,
Or that, by merely wishing
Her duties could be done.
But strange, with all her wishing
She never wished to be
The helpful and unselfish child
That others wished to see.

THERE'S A LOT OF FUN IN LIVING.

There's a lot of fun in living,
And we've found it, you and I,
In giving and forgiving,
In passing thorns all by,
But picking all the roses
Of friendliness and cheer,
In getting all the gladness
While we're here.
There's a lot of fun in labor,
And we've found it, I and you,
There's a lot of fun in labor,
And we've found it, I and you,
In loving kin and neighbor
As the day we hurry through;
There's fun in making sadness
And worry disappear,
In giving people gladness
While we're here.

THE STORY OF A BIBLE.

The following story of a Bible is told by Rev. Paul Penzotti, agent of the American Bible Society, who was recently in Chile on the business of the Society:

"A little while back I returned from Chile where I visited many of the eaangelical churches. In one place, the pastor of the church told me the following incident: A colporteur took a trip to the south of the country to sell Bibles. He met a woman who was about to go on board a little steamer that was leaving for a place named Imperial, and sold her a Bible. This she read on board to pass away the time. After a little while, a priest, who was also traveling, came and asked her what she was reading. On being told that it was the Bible, he roughly snatched the Book from the woman's hands and threw it into the river. A fisherman near by saw the Book and picked it out of the water. He took it home to his house and, excited by curiosity, began to read it. He and all his family accepted the truth which had in some strange way come to them. Soon they could not keep it to themselves, and they invited several neighbors to read with them the precious Book. The interest began to grow, and others obtained Bibles, and they organized a Bible class and sought the help of an evangelical pastor. Later a church was organized, and now, in that town, a beautiful building has been consecrated to the worship of God by a congregation which had its beginning in this truly remarkable fashion.—Selected.

Henderson.—Rev. R. A. Hunter attended a committee meeting at Greensboro Feb. 16 to plan for the Summer Conference.

The Girls' Mission Band canvassed the membership Sunday afternoon for books to be sent to the High Point College.

The Christian Endeavor Society has taken on new life and nearly every seat is taken each meeting. The society has decided to divide and make two, a Senior society and Junior and Intermediate combined.

Our choir deserves special praise. They have been giving us special music every Sunday for some time and they are now working on a cantata to be given at an early date. date.

The missionary societies held their annual thank-offering service Sunday evening at the 7:30 service. The ladies gave us a splendid program.

Next Sunday, March 7, will be our regular quarterly communion service. The pastor has expresses a wish that every member of the church would be present.

uite a number of our members are still on the sick list, but we were glad to see some back in their accustomed places Sunday.

Shiloh Notes.

The officers and teachers of Shiloh Sunday school met at Brother H. A. Leonard's home on Monday night, Feb. 22, and organized a workers' council. The purpose of the council is to discuss the various problems of the Sunday school, and to plan for its growth and more efficient service. The motto is, "A bigger, better Sunday school."

Our hearts were made sad by the passing of our beloved ex-pastor, Dr. Whitaker. The love and sympathy of our entire church go to his bereaved ones.

Agnes, the daughter of Bro. N. A. Leonard, has recovered from an operation for appendicitis.. We are so glad to have her with us ayain. Her little brother Numa is recovering from an attack of pneumonia. Harry, the little son of Bro. W. J. Berrier, is now able to come back to Sunday school after being confined by a rather severe attack of rheumatism for several weeks. Bro. Conrad Kepley has just recovered from a severe attack of influenza. Bro. John Warner has been sick for several weeks and does not seem to improve much. Our Father can cause even our infirmities to glorify His name. May God give Bro. Warner faith and patience to endure.

We were more than glad to have Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Byerly of Friendship with us in Sunday school on the third Sunday. It is an inspiration to us for the leaders of other churches to visit us. Some of our other welcome visitors were Mr. and Mrs. Walter Waitman and Mr. C. W. Benson.

Mrs. Wiley L. Shoaf, Reporter.

Gillburg.--Sunday, Feb. 28, Mr. J. B. Watkins came to our church to fill the appointment which Rev. M. P. Chambliss, our pastor, asked him to fill, as he, being in Westminster, Md., could not be with us.

Mr. Watkins gave us a short sketch of the Bible, beginning at Genesis and going to Revelation. His talk was enjoyed and appreciated by all and I hope that much good went to all from it. Mr. Chambliss will preach there Saturday night at 7:30 o'clock. We want all the members especially to be there.

Reporter.

Saxapahaw. -- Our pastor filled his appointment with us the fourth Sunday, Feb. 28, and as usual brought to us a beautiful message. Taking for his subject "God's call to service," he spoke first of the sun, water and air, all of which have been here since creation, and how welcome they are, He discussed fully, first consecration of our time. "In this fast age people have so many things to do and so many attractions that very few are giving consecrated service, though many are serving." "Few," he said, "are living in the present tense; they are either living in the past or the future."

Second, consecrated influence. Refrain from doing those things that probably would do us no harm but would influence others to do wrong. Third, consecration of our means. "All that we possess belongs to God," he said.

This is just a part of one of the helpful sermons our pastor has delivered since his return to us and we realize more each time how fortunate we are in having him back.

We were favored at this service with a duet, "It Pays to Serve Jesus," sung by Miss Lillian Lindley and Mr. E. W. Mann. The morning ocering will be used toward paying the Annual Conference Budget.

Our Sunday school is doing fine work. It is a union school, consisting of three denominations. We have quite a number of M. P. members. Mr. E. W. Mann is our efficient superintendent and is a wide-awake worker. The attendance has been over 200 many times this winter.

The Philathea class has for some time been divided into two groups, contesting to see which side could win the most points by, first, visiting the sick; second, writing cheerful letters to the infirm; third, attendance at Sunday school and church. This proved to be very interesting and helpful, both to the members and those visited. The side gaining the most points were deightfully entertained Friday evening, Feb. 26, with Clarabell Lindley and Daisy Winningham as hostess at the home of the latter. Old time games were enjoyed for a while after which Christine McPherson entertained the guests with several piano selections. At the close of the evening, the hostess, assisted by Thelma McAdams, served delicious refreshments.

Mr. Isley will be with us in our midweek prayer service Wednesday night. It is not possible for him to attend all of these meetings and his coming this week will be looked forward to, knowing that he always brings us a good message. Reporter.

State St. Church, Lexington.--Now that March is here it will seem only a few days until time for Mr. Bethea to be back. Everything is progressing in a fine manner awaiting the coming and reading of Mr. Hardy. Mr. Bethea told us we were going to be well pleased with Mr. and Mrs. Hardy, and we are not only well pleased with them but we appreciate and love them much. Mr. Hardy's gift of story telling is a source of great delight to the children and to older ones as well. He and Mrs. Hardy and four young ladies from the college were with us in our C. E. Society last Wednesday night. Mr. Hardy had prepared some games for the children after the business, and a large crowd of eager and enthusiastic children and were highly entertained as were all present.

Next Wednesday night our C. E. Society will meet at West Lexington church with Mr. Brotherhood consecration, at which time Mr. Crutchfield is planning to organize a C. E. society among his young people.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will meet next Thursday P. M. at 3 o'clock with Mrs. John Leonard.

We were all made very sad by the death of our former pastor, Dr. Whitaker. Dr. and Mrs. Whitaker did much to help us get organized and started in our work. Mrs. Whitaner and all the family have our deepest sympathy.

Sunday school attendance continues good in spite of the fact that there is right much sickness among our people. Our present meeting place won't hold us much longer.

West End, Greensboro.—The work is progressing nicely under the very efficient leadership of Rev. P. E. Lindley, who is acting as pastor while Mr. Ballard is in Palestine. The various committees are taking care of the detail work in a very splendid way. The congregations are delighted with the strong sermons Mr. Lindley is preaching, classing them as excellent.

The epidemic of influenza is hitting our community and a great number of our Sunday school and church members are confined to their beds. We are grateful, however, that none are seriously ill.

Since our last report our community has been shocked and saddened by the accident that called our much loved Mrs. T. C. Bosher to her eternal home. Unless we had a similar experience, we hardly know how to sympathize with those whose loss is so great, yet we know there is One who can heal their sorrow and we commit the husband and motherless children to His tender care, resting assured that He will comfort them.

Messages from the pastor convey the fact that he is enjoying to the fullest his trip to the Holy Land. He expects to be again at his post of duty by the middle of March.

The Philathea and Baraca classes jointly entertained the members of the Foust Bible class and other invited guests at a George Washington Birthday party Monday evening at the church. After a number of games and contests, refreshments were served.

The Foust Bible Class will hold its monthly social and business meeting Thursday evening at the church.

The prayer meetings, always a source of inspiration, have been unusually interesting and helpful during the past few weeks. Mr. Lindley, Mr. H. A. Helms, and Mrs. A. G. Dixon have helped us a great deal along this line.

Asheboro.—Since our last report several things of interest have taken place in our church, a few of which we wish to include in this report. On Sunday, the 14th, the Foreign Missionary Society held its annual Thank-offering Service at the 11 o'clock hour. Mrs. W. C. Hammer gave a very interesting address on the different phases of our foreign missionary work in China, Japan and India. A very liberal offering was taken for the missionary work. Immediately after this service a church membership meeting was held for the purpose of electing a steering committee to draw up plans for purchasing and financing the permanent pews and carpet for the church. This meeting was well attended and much enthusiasm and interest were manifested. The committee is already on the job and we are sure that within a very short time we will have the pews and carpet which will add greatly to the service and attractiveness of the church.

On Monday evening, February 15, the Workers' Council of the Sunday school met with Mrs. B. D. Lowdermilk at her home for the regular monthly meeting. Reports from the various departments of the Sunday school were very encouraging. Mrs. E. L. Hayworth reported that she had been elected superintendent of the home department, and with only three afternoons' work has secured 25 members. Plans were discussed for the organization of a junior department in the Sunday school, which will be put into effect Sunday, the 28th.

The church was greatly shocked in hearing of the sudden death of a beloved former pastor, Dr. C. L Whitaker. Dr. Whitaker served the Asheboro church for five years and was not only popular with his own membership but with the citizens of the town. The church sympathizes very deeply with Mrs. Whitaker and the children in their great loss: The church stopped for a brief period at the beginning of the Sunday morning services to pay tribute to Dr: Whitaker for services to this church and the denomination. Mr. Pritchard gave us a most splendid sermon on "The Unfinished Task."

Following the evening service the men of the church met for the organization of a brotherhood in the church. We are expecting great results from this organization of the men.

Next Sunday will be family day in our church.

High Point.—On Thursday evening, Feb. 18, the members of Mrs. Jones Burns's circle of ladies' aid society served an appetizing dinner to the Men's Club, or Brotherhood, at the church. There were 63 men present including the orchestra from H. P. College and some boy scouts. This occasion proved most enjoyable, and a neat sum was realized for the carpet fund. After dinner speeches were being made when the startling news of Dr. Whitaker's sudden passing was telephoned to Dr. Brown, and this closed the meeting in great sadness.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society gave a very pleasing service in the S. S. Assembly room on Sunday evening. It was the occasion of the Annual Thank-offering to commemorate the establishment of the society in Feb., 1879. At the opening of the exercises all the members of the different societies appeared on the platform, the tiny tots of the Junior Missionary Circle, the young girls of the Mission Band, the older girls of the Young People's Society, young ladies of Circle No. 3, and the adults of the Woman's Society. Mrs. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro, a returned missionary, led in prayer. Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell then gave a most interesting and instructive history of the Foreign Missionary Society from its founding to the present time, while Mrs. Geo. R. Brown lighted the candles representing the birthdays of each organization. The tots of the Junior Mission Circle dressed in Japanese costume, then sang "Jesus Loves Me." A pageant, "Thanksgiving Ann," was cleverly rendered by members of the Mission Band. This proved to be a most creditable production Little Miss Alma Andrews made a splendid "Thanksgiving Ann." the "colored girl," James Hinkle, Jr., was Sam, the "colluld man," C. L. Gray, Jr., was the father of the family, Elon Long, the mother, and children. Misses Claire Douglas, Louise Koontz, Inez and Irene Reynolds, Rosalie Andrews, and Esther Pritchard then gave a playlet, "Light and Thanks." A Bible reading was presented by Miss Mary Hall. The thank offering was then taken up, which amounted to $90.00. The Foreign Society will raise its budget by March 31.

The Mission Study Class held a delightful meeting on Monday afternoon at the church with an attendance of 13.

Capt. A. M. Rankin left last week for Hot Springs, Ark., where he will spend a month.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Ross and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Ross of Asheboro were here Saturday to attend the funeral service of Dr. Whitaker.

Missses Elizabeth Welch and Iola Perryman have gone to Florida for a week of sight seeing.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Norman Wills of Greensboro were among the number who attended funeral services for Dr. Whitaker, and we were sorry to see that Mr. Wills was limping.

Interesting letters from Rev. N. G. Bethea, who is en route to Palestine, Egypt, and other countries in the Orient via Mediterranean Sea, are appearing weekly in the Lexington Dispatch.

Guilford Charge.—There have been but few reports from our charge for some time, but that is no indication that we are dead or even dormant. We have started on what we believe to be a successful year's work, because much interest in the Master's business is being shown by the members of the different churches. They seem eager for the truth and very responsive to its teachings. Our attendance has not been what we think it could have been, yet we feel that it has been very good considering all things.

A Pounding.—On Friday after moving into the parsonage we were very fortunate in getting to entertain a number of our sembers from the different churches. They gave us the understandinf that they were to meet at the parsonage on that respective day for the purpose of transaoting some business of the church. After their arrival we passed about one half an hour in very pleasant conversation, after which my wife and I were asked to give them possession of our kitchen. We did so, wondering why they should go to the kitchen to transact their business. And to make a long story short I have but to tell you that the business was very soon settied, and my wife and I reaped all the material benefit of the transaction, because on entering the kitchen we found the floor covered with many good things to eat and enough soap to keep us clean for a good while. We have also received three loads of good wood since moving to keep us warm while we eat and grow fat.

We feel very grateful to the participants in this pounding, though I shall not name them that you might give them honor, for they care not for it, for God has their names and deeds recorded in heaven, and I am sure He will reward them greatly for their kindness. And may He give my companion and me grace to enable us to live in such a way as to ex-

Creswell.—Creswell church on Creswell Ct. had its regular services 3rd Sunday in Feb. Pastor Hethcox preached two very interesting sermons.

Our Sunday school has started her Easter program and we are planning to make it a great success.

The Senior C. E. Society gave a colonial party February 22nd in honor of George Washington's birthday. Louise Hatfield.

Liberty, Siler City Charge.—Sunday, Feb. 28, was a good day for Liberty. Mr. D. M. Spence, ministerial student of Elon College, preached two good sermons in the absence of the pastor who has been ill for two weeks. "The Good Shepherd" and "Sabbath Observance" were the subjects of the discourses. At the morning service a male quartette furnished the special music. This quartette was from the other churches of the community. We were very glad to have them worship with us. Mr. Spence reports, also, that the Sunday school was well attended and the C. E. program very good. Mrs. John W. Curtis, the wide-awake president, was the leader for the evening. Mr. G. P. Coymes, who played for all services sang a solo at the meeting. Also, at the evening church service Mr. Coymes and Mr. T. R. Ruston, both of Elon College, sang a beautiful duet.

The C. E. enjoyed a delightful social last Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Elkins. The society reported much accomplished during the past month.

The Ladies' Aid, Sunday school, and C. E. Society have gathered together a goodly number of books for the H. P. C. library.

We regret to learn that someof our people are ill with influenza. We wish for them a speedy recovery. F. L. Gibb.

Spring Church.—Our pastor, Rev. A. D. Shelton, gave us another perfectly splendid sermon yesterday. His sermons are always encouraging to Christians, this one especially showing us the privilege and honor God bestows on us, in that He allows our hearts and lives to become the battle fields of the great conflict between good and evil. Offering was taken for church extension. Not what it should have been by any means. Our Sunday school is doing nicely; very good attendance, much interest. Easter program being arranged for. C. E. meetings being held, led exclusively by our young people. Children much interested in these. During this year offerings have been taken for Revs. Cowan and Braswell. We were glad to have our class leader, Bro. J. J. Massey, with us at church yesterday, first time since 1st Sunday in December; he has been very near death's door since that time, but God spared his life, we believe, that he might yet do more and greater service for Him.

Glad to report Mr. Elisha Sledge improved. He hasm been very sick. The ladies of our church have put on a special campaign to raise funds to pay off debt on parsonage well which, unfortunately for us, cost us more than $500.00. If any one reading this feels that they would like to help us in this, we would certainly appreciate it and any amount from 10 cents up will be gladly received. Send money to Mrs. H. E. Pleasant Grove.—Our pastor, Rev. G. L. Reynolds, preached a most excellent sermon Sunday morning. In this discourse he showed some of the rocks along the pathway of life that may cause a shipwreck and that we by following closely the impressions of our conscience may be able to see and avoid these rocks by the light houses which God has placed beside these rocks. We are planning to have the Easter exercise as usual. The following committees have been appointed:—music committee, Mrs. Leonard Honeycutt, Mrs. Clyde Payne; committee for training the children, Mrs. J. R. Meredith, Mrs. R. J. Kennedy.

We are very glad Mrs. J. R. Meredith is back home after undergoing a slight operation at the Guilford General Hospital.

We hope she will be out again soon. She is being missed as teacher of the beginners' Sunday school class.

Mrs. Ralph J. Kennedy, Reporter.

Friendship.—Time has been of premium importance to us since conference, so we have not made a report thus far. Things have been moving on, however. First, we would mention the fact that all services are being well attended. And the interest in the work is very good. Sunday school attendance is real good.

It would be a most unwise thing for a preacher to write to the paper and not mention a pounding. Soon after conference they began by some one or other bringing something for the parsonage, almost every day for a time. And then the surprise came. On the night of December 5, after we had held our first quarterly conference: we thought everybody had gone home, and we were almost ready to go to bed. The fact was they did not go home but more came to the pounding than did to the quarterly conference. They came right in and took possession of the parsonage. But we got well paid, for they brought the things we needed and money to buy the rest with. We appreciate these tokens of kindness more than we can express in words.

We shall leave any other news to be reported by the church reporter. A. Ridge.

Enfield Charge.—Spring time is doing our charge good and we see signs of much improvement. There has been much sickness on the charge of late, but all are doing very well now. The passing of Dr. C. L. Whitaker was a great shock to our people. Dr. Whitaker was born and reared on the Roanoke circuit and after entering the ministry served the people as pastor for many years. His name was on the Whitakers Chapel church roll at the time of his death. A great and good man has gone, but his sweet spirit will ever remain with us.

Listen! Dr. Sexsmith, Dr. Dixon and Rev. Lawrence Little are planning to hold a central rally for this district the third Sunday afternoon and night in March at the Enfield church. This is to be an inspiration-information "pep" rally for old and young. This is a rare opportunity to hear three great men in one day. Come early, get a comfortable seat and be ready to receive the whole force of the impact. Don't forget the date, the hour and the opportunity.

Randleman Charge.—On last Tuesday, the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Peele of Guilford College, conducted the funeral of Mr. Virgie Siler at Level Cross. The deceased had been sick only a few days. He leaves his companion and ten children, besides other near relatives to mourn their loss. Mrs. Siler and several of the children were ill and unable to attend the funeral.

On the evening of the 24th of February the occupants of the parsonage were made the recipients of a generous pounding given by Mt. Lebanon church. A loose leaf sermon holder was given the pastor by the Philathea class. For all these kindly expressions we are grateful.

Worthvillle is looking forward to a new church building. Worthville is a live church with a strong Sunday school and a growing prayer meeting.

Plans are now under way to lift some of the parsonage indebtedness. It will be a measure of relief indeed when all incumbrances are removed.

We are already planning for two special meetings to be held this spring, and two in the fall.

Church attendance is hindered somewhat by an unusual amount of sickness. We are looking for better days ahead.

EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS.

There is one popular misconception about the Church which ministers ought to contend against somewhat more vigorously. I refer to the idea of the man in the street that the church somehow belongs to the preacher, that the preacher should keep it going, and that if he—the man in the street—contributes a little money or an hour or two of work he is doing the preacher a favor.

There could be no greater mistake. The church is not the preacher's business any more than the government, or the public schools, or the health department. It is everybody's business. It is a gathering together of men and women to stand for good things in the community and—by their mutual help—to work more effectively together than they could work apart. As a clergyman I call on the good citizen who remains outside the church, and I say: "I need you. We're working with an institution called a church, which is nothing more nor less than an organized ideal. Because of its influence your home is safer, your business is more successful, your children have a better education, and a better chance. I don't own it; it's yours as much as mine; for you—as much as I—are a son of God. Come on with me and help to make it better."—Dr. William E. Barton.

Tragic Ending of a Criminal Career.—Last Monday night two men endeavored to hold up a street car and rob the conductor in a pine wood near Pomona. They placed logs on the track and when the car was stopped they opened fire on the conductor. He replied with his gun and brought one of the robbers down with a hole through his head. The other fled. The wounded robber died in a hospital the next day. He has not been identified, but it is believed that he came from Norfolk and that his name is Romich.

—In a recent report of Sunday school attendance at Welch Memorial, the number was given as 165. Pastor Pierce says it should have been 268.

SOME RELEVANT QUESTIONS.

The following questions by Rev. W. Irvine Carroll, D. D., Marshall, Texas, appear in the Presbyterian of the South. It is especially important that those who think that they can be both good Christians and staunch evolutionists should be able to answer them:

First, where in the scientific theory or system of philosphy that is known as Evolution do you place the "Fall of man?"

Second, where do you place the fact of human sin?

Third, where do you place man's guilt before God because of sin?

Fourth, where do you place the "Virgin Birth" of Christ?

Fifth, where do you place the bodily resurrection of Christ?

Sixth, where do you place the atonement of Christ through His shed blood?

Seventh, where do you place the regeneration of the believer, the new birth in Christ Jesus?

Eighth, where do you place the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost?

Ninth, where do you place the Second Coming of Christ?

Tenth, where do you place heaven and hell?—From the Bible Champion, Reading, Pa.

THE WELL-ROUNDED LIFE.

"Wouldn't it be fine to be as independent as Tom Fulton?" exclaimed a boy.

"Well, I'm not altogether sure," replied his companion, who was an older person. "Tom's independence saves him from a lot of mean little faults, and in itself is a cardinal virtue. I dislike to criticize so noble a trait at all, yet I must say that Tom's independence at times comes perilously near to selfishness. He is so independent that he often fails to regard the feelings and rights of others."

We cannot drive straight through life without regard to other people. Every virtue is beset by its opposite sin, and selfishness or thoughtlessness is the sin against which folks or an independent disposition should guard.

It is hard to keep virtues in proportion. We may become enamored of some excellence and pursue it blindly, with the result that, although we have attained it, we also have destroyed the balance of character. Symmetry of life is to be cultivated as assiduously as any other merit.—Forward.

DR. W. T. GRENFELL TO LECTURE IN GREENSBORO.

Dr. W. T. Grenfell, a medical missionary to Labrador of wide and favorable reputation on account of his medical work in that country and through the numerous volumes he has written about the Northland, will lecture in the Odell Memorial, Greensboro College, Friday evening, March 12.

"Tales of Labrador," "Labrador Days," "A Labrador Doctor" (autobiographical) are among his latest books. "Adrift on an Ice-pan," "Harvest of the Sea: Off the Rocks" are among his numerous volumes of an earlier date.

Dr. Grenfell has done more than any other man to bring that North Country and its inhabitants to the attention of the world. And he has the ability to present in a way that grips the attention of his readers and hearers, the story of that land of the Aurora Borealis. His lecture will be interesting and illuminating.

MR. BURBANK NEEDS A NEWTON.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(The above named article, which follows, is so apt, timely, and true, that we wish to heartily commend it to the readers of the Herald. It needs no comment. It speaks for itself.—J. F. Dosier.)

Sir Isaac Newton was an avowed infidel in the early part of his life, and he declared his scepticism with outspoken emphesis. But later he renounced his infidelity with equal candor and courage after a careful examination of the evidences of Christianity had removed all his doubts.

He and Edmund Hally, the celebrated mathematician and astronomer, were warm friends, and on one occasion when the latter was arguing against Christianity in his hearing, he said, "Dr. Halley, I am always glad to hear you when you speak about astronomy or any other branch of mathematical science because those subjects you have studied and you understand them well. But you should not talk of Christianity, for you have not studied it. I have, and I am sure that you know nothing about it."

It is certainly to be regretted that Mr. Burbank, the botanist, did not have by him some such wise friend as Sir Isaac Newton was to Halley to warn him of the folly of his recent utterance about Christianity before he published his discreditable observanorance of the Christian religion.

Mr. Burbank deserves great praise for what he has done in his chosen field in which he has become an expert. He has accomplished some remarkable and useful hybridizations in the plant world, although he has not been able to evolve a new species from an old one, as some ill-informed people have erroneously supposed. No one has ever been able to create a new species of plant or animal by crossing stocks. All that has been done by Mr. Burbank or any one else has been the production of hybrids. But in that matter he has done wonders, and he may be expected to do more in the future.

It is a pity that he should show himself so ignorant of Christianity and that no discreet friend prevent him from exhibiting publicly his surprising, not to say shameful, ignorance of the Christian reliyion.

He does not seem to know the meaning of the words he uses in what he had to say upon the subject. For example, he does not distinguish between the theory of reincarnation held by the theosophists and the Christian doctrine of resurrection. Other terms and phrases he employs with equal carelessness and inaccuracy.

The case of Mr. Burbank is a fair specimen of a certain class of minds that are quite able in some departments of thought and investigation and amazingly incompetent in others. His case is not unlike that of Whewell, of whom Sidney Smith said, "His forte is science and his foible is omniscience."

Mr. Burbank's knowledge of botany does not make him omniscient, as Mr. Edison's knowledge of electricity does not lift him to the level of universal wisdom. Both these gentlemen have spoken unadvisedly on the subject of religion, revealing in what they have said "the bigotry of liberalism" to use an apt phrase of Dr. Samuel Johnson.

Each would have rebuked the other if either had invaded a field of science of which he was ignorant. Mr. Edison would deride Mr. Burbank if the latter presumed to dogmatize about electricity, and Mr. Burbank would laugh at Mr. Edison's theories of botany. For similar reasons, all thoughtful people regret that both these notable men have talked ignorantly and foolishly about religion.

Upon both rested the obligation to investigate the evidences of Christianity as did Sir Isaac Newton. If they had done so before they talked, it is probable that both might have accepted Christianity long ago.

It cannot be said justly that Mr. Edison is duty bound to study botany, or that Mr. Burbank is under obligation to investigate electricity.

But the Christian religion is a higher and more important matter than plants or electricity, and every man is bound to consider it carefully and seriously.

It purports to be a revelation from God and as such it challenges the attention of mankind.

If its claim to be a divine revelation is well founded, its truth must be accepted and its authority must be acknowledged. If God has indeed spoken to men, every one must stand still and hear.

And certainly if God has ever revealed Himself to the human race, His revelation is found in the Christian religion. Buddhism. Brahminism, Mohammedanism and all the other religions commonly called pagan cults bear on their face the mundane marks of their earth-bound births. They cannot be revelations from God. They have benighted. and not enlightened, the lands on which they have rested. They have blighted, and not blessed, the peoples who have accepted them.

But such is not the case of Christianity.

The nations which have received it stand out in the front rank of the world. In them are found the science, the wealth, the social order, and the political freedom of the earth. If it were removed from them, there would be a void in modern life which nothing could fill.

This religion has constrained the intellectual acceptance of the most able and cultured men and the moral submission of the best men of these enlightened nations. Among its votaries in our day may be mentioned a Gladstone, a Kitchener, a Bayard. a Lee, and an innumerable company of scientists, saints and statesmen which no man can number.

Can Mr. Burbank and Mr. Edison afford to ignore the religion of these mighty men and deride the lofty faith by which they lived and labored as if it were a puerile superstition or a pious fraud?

Not to mention the mighty minds, like Sir Isaac Newton, who accepted Christianity in former days, these great Christians of our times are at least the equals of Mr. Burbank and Mr. Edison in the matter of mentality and intellectual culture. Is it a bit egotistical for a botanist and an e trician, who show conspicuous ignorance Christianity, to discredit the religion of s lofty intellects and despise the faith fr which has sprung the highest type of civ zation known to history?

It is pitiful to observe how ignorant even the language of Christianity is Burbank. If a preacher, who was as ignor of botany, presumed to discuss that scie with the easy-going cocksureness with wh Mr. Burbank discusses theology and conceited confidence with which he reje Christianity, such a minister of the gos would be denounced as narrow-minded bigoted.

Such epithets with more justice might applied to Mr. Burbank; but Christian f bearance forbids our doing so.

If an accomplished botanist wishes to m a ridiculous exhibition of himself, no can prevent his doing so. This is a coun of freedom and an age of liberty in wh even folly and ignorance are free to t without let or hindrance.

But what a pity it is that Mr. Burb had no Sir Isaac Newton to advise him Halley had. However, in the absence uch a friend he might lay to heart w Benjamin Franklin wrote to Thomas Pai discouraging the publication of Paine's b entitled, "The Age of Reason." He s to Paine, "If men are so bad with religi what would they be without it? And n you not yourself be indebted originally your religious education for the virtues u which you so justly pride yourself? The fore, my advice to you is to burn this pi before it is seen by any other person; among us it is not necessary, as among Hottentots, for a youth, to be raised the company of men, to prove his manh by beating his own mother."

THE WESLEY'S ART OF DYING WE

By H. H. Smith.

John Wesley used to say, "The world n not like our Methodists, but the world can deny that they die well. "They died v because they lived well." The Wesleys, th selves, it is quite certain, had the art dying well," says Fitchett.

Dr. Samuel Annesley, the maternal gra father of John Wesley, was a man of d piety and in his old age could say: "Bles be God. I have been faithful in the work the ministry above 55 years." As the drew near, his soul was filled with gr peace, and he cried out with exultant j "Come, my dearest Jesus! the nearer more precious, the more welcome! cannot express the thousandth part of praise that is due to Thee.....I will praising Thee.....I shall be satisfied w I awake with Thy likeness! Satisfied! Sa fied!"

Samuel Wesley, the father of John Wes uttered prophetic words on his death-b Turning to John, he said: "The inward w ness, son! the inward witness!—this is proof, the strongest proof of Christianit Laying his hands upon the head of Cha said: "Be steady. The Christian faith surely revive in this Kingdom. You shall it, though I shall not." To his daughter lia he said: "Do not be concerned at my h; God will then begin to manifest Him- to my family." He was asked, "Are consolations of God small with you?" o, no, no," he whispered. "God chastens with pain, yes, all my bones with strong , but I thank Him for all, I bless Him all, I love Him for all." He called upon children who stood around him: "Think heaven! Talk of heaven! all the time is when we are not thinking of heaven," and efully passed away.

Susannah Wesley has been called the "Mo- of Methodism." Few women have walk- with God through storm and sunshine as this remarkable woman,—"probably the t capable woman in all England in her "

When John Wesley heard that his mother nearing the end, he hastened to her ide. His journal reads: "I found my her on the borders of eternity; but has no doubt or fear, nor any desire as soon as God should call her, to de- and be with Christ." He described her h as follows: "Her look was calm and ne, and her eyes were fixed upward, as requiem of her departing soul was being g by her children. It was just four ck. She opened her eyes wide, and fixed n upward for a moment: Then the lids pped, and the soul was set at liberty, out struggle, or groan, or sigh. We d around the bed, and fulfilled her last est, uttered a little before she lost her ch, 'Children, as soon as I am released, a psalm of praise to God.' "

Charles Wesley, "the poet of Methodism," sed to his reward at the age of eighty, e years before John Wesley died. A days before his death he called his e to his bedside, and dictated "his last sublime poetical utterance":

age and feebleness extreme,
o shall a sinful worm redeem?
us, my only hope Thou art,
ength of my failing flesh and heart.
ould I catch a smile from Thee,
l drop into eternity!"

For fifty years," says Dr. Abel Stev- "Christ, as the Redeemer of men, had n the subject of his effeceive ministry, and his loftiest songs, and he may be said to e died with a hymn to Christ upon his ."

amuel Bradburn, then stationed in Lon-, who sat up with him the last night of life but one, says: "His mind was as m as a summer evening. He told his e that no fiend was permitted to approach , and that he had a good hope. When ed if he wanted anything, he replied, thing but Christ.' Some one said that valley of the shadow of death was hard be crossed. He exclaimed, 'Not with ist.' After his last words, 'Lord—my rt—my God!' he quietly fell asleeep.

Patty Wesley, a sister of John Wesley, asked just before she died if she were pain. "No," she said, "but a new feeling. I have the assurance which I have long prayed for. Shout!"

We have seen that many of the Wesleys bore remarkable testimonies to the grace of God in the hour of death, but it remained for John Wesley to bear the most triumphant testimony of them all. Fitchett says: "Wesley always insisted on judging religion by the most severely practical tests. Life was one test, and he mistrusted profoundly a religion which did not fill life for its possessor with gladness and strength. But he knew that death, with its mystery and loneliness, was the last and sorest test of religion. Did the religion he preached make that last darkness luminous? Did it put songs on dying lips and gladness in dying hearts?"

Wesley's triumphant death was exactly what he desired, not for his own sake alone, but for a testimony to the world. We have space for only a few of his most impressive words uttered during his last hours. With smiling lips he repeated his brother's verse:

"Till glad I lay this body down
Thy servant, Lord, attend;
And, oh, my life of mercy crown
With a triumphant end."

"There is no way into the holiest," he said, "but by the blood of Jesus." Later he said, "I the chief of sinners am, but Jesus died for me." He called for a pen, but finding he could not write, Miss Ritchie said,—"Let me write for you. Tell me what you wish to say." "Nothing," was the reply, "but that God is with us." He then began to sing what has been called his swan song:

"I'll praise my Maker while I've breath,
And when my voice is lost in death
Praise shall employ my nobler powers.
My days of praise shall ne'er be past
While life and thought and being last,
Or immortality endures."

After a moment of silence he cried, "The best of all is, God is with us." His last word, "Farewell," was uttered while Joseph Bradford was praying. Then those in the room broke into singing:

"Waiting to receive thy spirit,
Lo, the Savior stands above,
Shows the purchase of His merit,
Reaches out the crown of love."

Blackstone, Va.

THE BANE AND BLESSING OF DISCONTENT.

A tub was large enough for Diogenes, but a world was too small for Alexander. Contentment does not depend upon what we have, but rather upon what we are. Marcot Asquith turned her heart inside out for a publisher's check. Then the world saw how she had been expelled from a private school, had sworn in the presence of a minister, and smoked cigars to spite her heart-broken father. This failed to bring her any satisfaction. At last her real self came to surface. Having rejected the proposals of many Englishmen she finally realized life's purpose by marrying the man who eventually became prime minister of Great Britain. What is your measure of life? We are told of an age when Saturn ruled with golden scepter, when the children of earth knew nothing of struggle and disappointment and sorrow and pain. But that time is gone. Man delves into the hidden heart of the earth and scans heaven's pathless fields of blue searching and weighing and making his estimates. He who has made us the masters of physical laws, moving in the fields of His vast world, ever present with absolute power over the forces and sequences of His work, has not built the machine, set it going, and left it to itself. In the final analysis His will is the great driving energy of the universe. If God has surrounded us with majesty and might, it is high treason to be indifferent and easily satisfied. A cluster of brilliant flags at the masthead of the Victory on that memorable day of Trafalgar, when Nelson talked of England, expecting every man to do his duty, kindled the heroic seamen of a whole fleet with new devotion. The mind of the commander was in the historic signals. So in the glow of the sunset, in the shimmer of the moon, in the sparkle of the dewdrop, in the concave of the sky, in the stars outlined against the purple dome of heaven, there is a Mind speaking to us. Oliver Wendell Holmes, wandering upon the seashore, picks up a tiny shell, and in his poem of "The Chambered Nautilus" tells how it became a parable to his listening soul.

The Hebrew nation rose to leadership in history because the individual held to the conception that he could count on the strength of God. To him nature became full of Jehovah and all paths of spiritual activity were leading to Him. Thus religion moves, uplifts, purifies, and transports the soul with an authority that governs the inmost life. God is always larger than our conception of Him. We are endowed by Him with love for the beautiful and true, and may grow from grace to grace, seeing more clearly through the mists of doubt, and rising out of our confusion into the light of the eternal truth, and beholding with undimmed vision His glory, we discern His anxiety for our growth, and find how willingly He supplements our weakness. He places value on our effort to acquire knowledge. We like to read Robert Browning's "A Grammarian's Funeral," because the man kept trying. He never quit. The pen slipped from his hand and he did not pick it up—he was dead. To keep at your task until death puffs winter's breath in your face, that is glorious. Richard Watson Gilder did the same kind of unhindered work. Slender and slight of stature, but resolute and determined, when he was a soldier during the Civil War, once for sixteen miles up a long battlefield he pushed on cannons. Man after man died, and at last four men and the cannons came to the top. Gilder was one of the men. His hands were blistered, his clothes muddy, his hair disheveled, and all the while drenched by the pitiless storm, but the guns were placed on the hill. God is always pleased when a man carves out for himself a worthy career.

You can write it down that the cure for discontent cannot be found in circumstances. You will discover it in yourself. A change of place may give a little happiness, but you cannot be satisfied because you have your discontented heart with you. In Leicestershire there is a Dominican monastery. Some tourists asked one of the monks what had induced him to come there. He replied that he had entered the monastery to get rid of the world. "And have you gained your object?" was asked. A look of keen disappointment came over his sad face, and after a pause he answered, "Well, you see, we bring ourselves in!"

No remedy is found unless the soul be brought under the mastery of the spirit. When that happy experience is yours, no matter at what price, your heart is content, the needle has found the pole, the dove the ark, the lily its mate, and a song is on your lips. You go wrong in your religion if you have wrong ideas about God or man. You live only when you cease to be yourself. Then you no longer follow your own ideas, plans, desires, apart from that informing of it that comes from Christ. You thus find your true place, gain your own soul, and attain immortality. For we must ever keep in mind that a renaissance of moral responsibility is the call of this age --liberty and loyalty to the light of liberty!

The world is crowded with mediocrity, and too many are content. We are not quite ready to do things thoroughly. Facts as we see them satisfy us. We are not willing enough to be glad—to use the powers of analyzing and distinguishing and comprehending which a gracious God has given us. We must open our eyes to see, use our minds to think, be alive. We are not achievers if indolent. The treasure ships of life pass us by in the night for the simple reason that we are too lazy to keep the vigil. Indolent, disturbed, displeased, ill at ease over our lack of progress, we are unconscious of the fact that did we use the powers God has bestowed, those treasure laden ships would not pass unseen beyond the horizon of our lives.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS

Sunday morning, March 7th, rainy and murky though it was, I drove to Graham to be with Rev. P. E. Williams and his people in their Sunday school and preaching service. Because of the rain and bad roads there was in the congregation the crowd that we have so large. But they have a good Sunday school well organized and doing good service.

The congregation was attentive to the word, and it was delightful to preach to them. The work is hopeful, and could all conditions continue good they have to meet all financial obligations.

At the evening service I was with Rev. T. A. Williams and his people at Mebane. Here some of the people were afraid of a threatening thunderstorm and stayed away for the service to begin, but a good congregation were present and we had a good time worshiping the Lord and studying His word together. The people listened intently, and it was a pleasure to preach to them. This Mebane Charge has paid to date the amount of 70 per cent of the A. C. B. I hope to visit the Haw River Church later in the week. Both Messrs. P. E. and T. A. Williams are faithful and earnest in their efforts, and they are very much in their respective fields.

Rev. D. M. Loy.

[illegible] I visited Rev. D. M. Loy in his home. He is sick and he and his wife both need our sympathy, our prayers and our help. Our First Church in Burlington sent them a purse last week, and Rev. T. A. Williams had a bit of money in hand and was going to send them some food and coal this week. If the Lord prompts you to help in this case of need send to Rev. T. A. Williams, Glen Raven, N. C.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE

Because of sickness the Budget report was left out last week. Had it been printed it would have read like this. Burlington is over the top on college assessment this week. Three new names appear on the A. C. B. roll, four on the G. C. B., and one on the college assessment. We are glad you are here, for Burlington leads on the A. C. B. gaining 5 points. Good work, Burlington.

I want to call attention again to the fact that if any church on a charge pays its part in full on either of these budgets and reports this fact, the name of the individual church will be placed on this honor roll, though the entire charge may not be paid up in full.

[illegible] thirteen new names to the A. C. B. list—ten to the G. C. B. and three to the College—this week. Leaving still twenty-seven charges not reporting. There are so many chances this week that each one will have to count his gain or loss for himself as it would take too much space to note it here.

[illegible] DEVELOPMENT OF [illegible] PURPOSE

[illegible] daily life.

[illegible] Va., [illegible] "poor whites" [illegible] on the ground floor [illegible] ing [illegible] Washington was born.

This boy, as we know from [illegible] grew up to be the [illegible] Virginia, became a [illegible] and a leader in [illegible] ruler-in-chief of [illegible] Revolution, suffered untold hardships [illegible] was twice nominated [illegible] the republic he had helped [illegible] lated and effected social, [illegible] policies—in short, made [illegible] of America possible, and died [illegible] hero.

Today in nearly every schoolhouse and State House in America [illegible] picture of a great soldier, the first President of the United States, the father of his country. We have all looked at this picture and even learned to love it.—Selected.

TEMPTATION.

In the transfer of property if I have a field of a thousand acres which, I tell, but there is a single acre in the middle of that field which I keep for myself, I shall have the right to cross the other acres on my way to my own. We talk about the sanctified life. It means to God. It means that the heart is fully surrendered, that removes the devil's territory, and he will use every means in his power to get to his own. . . . If you say, "There is one thing I want to preserve," that remains Satan's territory. He will get to his own so long as he has anything to do with, and the only way to be rid of his power is to have not one solitary square foot of your being, the keys of which are not given to Jesus. Not one square foot of territory in all the realm of your daily life over which the devil has still any claim or right.

AS THE PRESIDENT SEES IT.

In his address before the National Council of Congregational Churches in Washington, on October 20, President Coolidge rendered a real service, not only to the churches of all denominations, but to the God-fearing and law-abiding people throughout our land. While deploring the crime wave, he pointed out that crime and violence always follow in the wake of war, and these conditions usually disappear with the passage of time. He also [illegible] the fact that modern life has become more complex and temptations to crime have multiplied greatly. Lawlessness, a lack of respect for government and for the [illegible] enlightened society are everywhere [illegible] apparent. But what is needed to meet and to [illegible] conditions he regards as some[illegible] the province of government to supply. That indispensable thing can only be furnished by the righteous population cooperating with the spiritual leaders. Government would [illegible] the solution of the social problem, but our [illegible] and greatest need is that our standards [illegible] the result of an enlightened conscience. "Religion," he declares, "is the only remedy." Public opinion, awakened by spiritual leaders, must be fully aroused. An enlightened conscience is needed for the great task in hand.

President Coolidge admitted that he knew of no political method of adequately dealing with lawlessness. He had faith in our local and national governments, but much of this [illegible] was beyond their reach. Even the best [illegible] of law and order will be [illegible] if there is not a vigorous determination [illegible] on the part of the people themselves to [illegible] the observance of the law. That attitude, he believes, can only be furnished by [illegible] He knows of no other source of moral power than that which comes from religion. "If we are to preserve what we already have," he added, "we must become partakers [illegible] of the Spirit of the Great Master. This is the [illegible] of religion."

Character building, he reminds us, is not [illegible] to the clergy. There are the examples [illegible] fathers and mothers, the opportunities [illegible] social relationship, and the influence [illegible] kindness in the home, all of which are [illegible] of the greatest significance. He believes that if these forces were broken down, [illegible] might go on for a time under its own momentum, but it would be headed for ultimate [illegible]

[illegible] building, he said, "Redemption must [illegible] sacrifice, and sacrifice is the essence of religion. It will be of untold benefit if there is a broader comprehension of this [illegible] by the public, and a continued [illegible] of this crusade by the clergy."—Christian Herald.

[illegible].—It has been sometime since we [illegible] a report. We have been very busy. Our work seems to be moving on fine considering the conditions.

Number of our people are sick with the [illegible] pneumonia. Brother J. F. Alexander has been [illegible] for about a month. We have missed him very much in the services.

The [illegible] last we observed annual Conf. [illegible] We raised about one fourth of the annual conference budget.

[illegible] to say we reached our quota [illegible] for the Methodist Protestant Church paper.

The Sunday school has been doing good [illegible] Considering the bad weather, the attendance has been splendid. Since conference [illegible] the graded literature; both [illegible] and teachers are delighted with it. [illegible] school is planning to give an [illegible] program.

[illegible] to thank Brother Auten and some [illegible] brethren for the nice kitchen [illegible] they made us a present of.

(Note: I am glad to see the brethren are making use of the "Protestant" for news from the N. C. Conference charges. The "North Carolina Notes" are not intended to forestall anything they may wish to say under their own names. All I wish to do is to make what the Conference is doing better known; and if our pastors can emphasize it a bit, all the better. Go to it, regardless of what I have said in the "Notes" or may say. NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Our stop in Algiers was one of the most interesting though one of the shortest. Would not have made it longer if we could, for after seeing the poverty-stricken or the Arab part and then to relieve the distress of mind to go into the Algerian Paris left a much better impression than if only the first had been seen. The Arabic part of the city is the oldest of course and it remains as it was built centuries ago. I shall not discuss dates from what I saw without any books of refer in any of my letters, for I am writing purely from what I saw without any books of reference, and if there are questions that arise as to the time you may look that up for yourself.

Things have been happening so rapidly this week that I may not be able to interest the reader as I wouldd like to.

This city is very old and was at one time under Arab control until the French took it and since then it has been under their control.

Our guide took us through the winding narrow streets which were shorn of all the beautiful by the quaint people and their way of dress and manners. It is another case where Christianity's influence is needed to clean both the inside and the out. Mohammedanism controls here of course, though we were told of some splendid work being done by the Christians, notably a school for blind Arabs run by faith and a school for boys where some fine products are being turned out. Some of the most pathetic scenes, children pale as death, women with their faces veiled, men idle and filthy and the sights and the scents make you both sick at heart and stomach. Wives only seven years of age we were told

We visited the Governor's Palace which before the French took possession was the king's palace. He only had 88 wives and when 72 he married the last one and she was only fourteen. He lived to be 107.

We were taken into his favorite room which was beautifully decorated by his many wives. Evidently he had much wealth at his command, for the marble, brass and cedar carvings showed that there was much at his command.

One of the amusing things we saw in one of these narrow streets was a black man looking very much like our southern negro and he seemed to be the only happy-looking person we saw, as he had an instrument that looked like a large violin but he thumped the strinbs like a banjo and his tune had about two and a half notes in it. He danced and smiled and played and sang and the guide said the words of the song were, "You American, you have plenty money to give me —to give my wife." After hearing that and seeing him smile and lick out his tongue, most of us chipped in and enjoyed it because he smiled.

The most persistent beggars here, so much so that I had to knock one off as he swung on to my coat.

We went into a number of buildings but will not undertake to describe them. We saw Catholics at prayer, counting their beads but of all the prayers those in the Mosque seemed to hold on the longest. It was interesting to watch their earnestness seemin and still to think of the deception that is ing practised in it all.

There seems to be nothing about the hammedan religion to brighten life. No w der they looked sad.

After getting rid of our guide, for tha what it is in most instances, we took street car and went into the French sect I sat down by a Parisian, a very refined tleman, who was in Algeria for a month's cation, and when he found I was from Ar ica he wanted to talk, but so far as our derstanding each other—well, I do not k what he thought, but I expest the same I But will not tell you that now.

We went into the post-office and the everything was systemized was interest I made only one mistake there, put stampson a post card when it should h been one.

The native laughed and so did I whe was dropped in the box. The buildings this part were modern in every respect.

Quite a city here; population I was about 250,000 and about 100,000 Frenc

As we went down to the wharf pedd of all kinds besieged us. Field glasses the main thing, however.

I felt my foot going out from under twice and when I looked down I found tha boot black from the sea wall had already gun work. I did not need that but he nee the omney. But I had to kick his box to get loose.

Naples our next place. Our stoppings coming so close together now, I may not able t o keep up. N. G. Bethe

"The End of a Perfect Day."

This to my mind has been a wonderful bath. Have just witnessed the going d of the sun behind the waters of the Medi ranean while on the other side of the are the snow-rapped peaks of the Island Crete. It was not in our itinerary to c this way, but our good ship is making s wonderful time, Mr. Boring, our cruise di tor, passed the word on to Captain Ran to change his course so that the people board could see this island made famous all Christians through the journeys of S Paul. This is a Greek possession and f what we could see it was like many of t eastern islands, inhabited along the sh line while the highest peak, which is now ered with snow, is 8,130 feet, lacking ne 2,000 feet being os high as Mount A which we passed yesterday. There was time to do anything but look yesterday as were in sight of land most of the day on ther side. We passed through the Strait Messina and by Reggio—ancient Rhegi We also rounded the "toe of the boot" began to look on Italy from the eastern s We are making good time now and expec be in Alexxandria in Egypt by tomorrow ternoon six o'clock. We leave the there for Cairo and spend three days loo over the wonderful sights to be seen in land and then by train to Port Said w embark for Haifa in Palestine.

But lest I should get t oo much of what I pect mixed with what I have already ex-rienced, let me turn back to the experien- of Friday and tell you about Naples.
We anchored in the Bay of Naples about o'clock Friday morning and of course we re all up looking for Vesuvius. There was t much going on in the crater or at least s monster of nature was not very active ile we were there. Occasionally a glare d a little smoke most of the time. Not ar as active as Mt. Aetna or Stromboli ei-r one which we passed yesterday.
After breakfast we began landing, some in e city. Some for Amalfi and Sorrento. But ce reading of Pompeii in my boyhood days t has always been my objective in my ams and in reality this time I found most my fellow travelers with the same wish.
I was put in a car the make or the name which was "Seat." I do not know whe-r that meant the speed or the maker, but e speed at which we were taken for an ur over a stone road left me with the feel-g that every joint in my back had been sened and that if t he top of my head had en detachable my brains would have jarred t the top. Then every piece of the car's —and it was a nice-looking closed car— med to have a time of its own which it yed incessantly. But there were so many ngs t o see—for Naples reaches to Pompeii. forgot my aches and pains soon.
From all the babble and noise of the streets o this once magnificent city, which now re-nds you of a neglected cemetery, it was ite a change. You cannot help but feel the emnity of it as you see the signs of life ubtless for centuries, and yet all in a little ile was snuffed out by the monster who en roars threats to the ever increasing pulace, for houses are being built contin-lly at the base and even on the mountain le. But fertility and climate are great at-ctions and here they have them.
I shall not attempt any detailed descrip-n of what I saw, for these things have en given over and over again. But to see ir omphitheater, public and private baths. keries, fountains, temples, wine shops, mo-ics, statuary, paintings, a great deal of ich has been restored by the excavators. u can only think of the "path of glory ds but to the grave." And oh, what a ave this is! Bodies of men and animals ow that they died writhing in agony. The alth of the world must have poured in re. In many things you are impressed with e thought that they must have reached a gh state of intelligence for that period of e world's history, for it was only 79 years ter Christ that the city was destroyed. Af a while spent in this intensely interesting ace our drive was resumed and after lun-eon on t he ship we again went to see Na-es.
"See Naples and die" is a saying there cause of its beauty. Many things worth ile to be seen, fountains, gardens, statuary abundance. One of the prettiest views was ve the city where you could look down and with one sweep of the eye see the city and also the bay.
The night life was interesting as a party of us went ashore after dinner, as it is called on the ship, without being tied up to a guide This is a rather hazardous thing to do in a city of a million strangers. We saw many things t o interest. Vice abounds, but when we told them we were Christians and did not partake they went on for other victims. No trouble to get rid of the bottle venders when you told them that.
To-day we had two sermons, one in the men's smoking room and one in the Social Hall. And as this is Christian Endeavor week all over the world, our meeting to-night will be led by the founder, Dr. Francis E. Clark. He will tell us how it started, &c. Bro. Ballard will preside. He prepared the program. I hope at some time to write my impressions of Drs. Clark and Sheldon.
Doubtless before I write another letter I will have delivered the life-size painting of General Allenby, the Liberator of Jerusalem, to the Governor of Jerusalem, and will have made my first speech to one of the king's rulers.
In one of m y letters I will tell you how I was entrusted with t his honor, which all on board seem to think is an honor to my church and state and country. Mr. Boring says an occasion will be made of it if we can find the time. I have communicated with the Gover-nor and the American consul at Jerusalem. They will communicate with me as soon as we reach Haifa (Joppa).

Pine Ridge Month.

March is the month for our Home Missionary Societies to raise the budget for Pine Ridge School.

That is already in your plans, we are sure, but we just wish to tell you about Dr. Woodford's letter and will give you extracts from it, that you may see the needs are great. It was decided at the Executive Board meeting recently held to have a Pine Ridge program and open our "Blessing Boxes" at the March meeting. May those boxes be filled to over flowing when we have counted our blessings!

Dr. Woodford says: "Our school work has gone on very satisfactorily. We are so thankful we got the roof on our new high school building before the unfavorable weather reached us, so that we were able to go on and get the building ready for use. On the first day of February we met our high school classes for the first time in the new building. Sometimes it seems to us that it's too good to be true. A year ago we were hoping and praying for such a building and now it is a reality.

"The building is divided into two equal parts by folding doors. The school side, consisting of four recitation rooms and library study hall, is near enough finished for us to be using it. The chapel side is still unfinished. Four carpenters are working at it and they expect to get the job all completed by April 1st.

"The building, including furnaces, plumbing, wiring, and electric firtures, has cost us just about sixteen thousand dollars. The cost was greatly reduced by the purchase of a planing mill and wood working machinery so that we have used local timber for all lumber needed in the building except doors and windows. We also bought a motor truck to do our hauling. There is yet due on the mill and the truck about three thousand dollars. Of course, these will be of long continued service to us, in the further development of our equipment and program.

"No provision has yet been made for furnishing the building. I would say we need three thousand dollars for school rooms and chapel. Our Pine Ridge Sunday school, through reguar offerings, is raising money to buy a piano for the new auditorium.

"We expect Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D., to be with us Sunday, April 25th, to preach the baccalaureate sermon, and also a dedication sermon—the first services in the finished building. We have five girls ready to graduate from our high school at that time."

Dr. Woodford has planned wisely. We are hoping that N. C. Branch will far over reach the amount apportioned to Pine Ridge.

Thank Offering Service.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Community Church held their annual Thank Offering service on last Sunday evening. Mrs. W. J. Morton, president of the society, conducted the devotions. The program which was presented to a large audience consisted of an anthem by the choir, "I Will Feed My Sheep;" piano solo by Miss Pollock; reading by Mrs. J. W. Boyles; vocal solo, "The Ninety and Nine," by Miss Myrtle Perry; reading by Miss Pearl Perry; a story by Dwight Fouts; and a seven reel motion picture, entitled "Sun Up."

The ladies who took the thank offering at the door received $33.18, the entire amount to go for Foreign Missions.

SHINING.

Frances Ridley Havergal.

Are you SHINING for Jesus, dear one?
You have given your heart to Him;
But is the light strong within it,
Or is it but pale and dim?
Can EVERYBODY see it—
That Jesus is all to you?
That your love to Him is burning
With radiance warm and true?
Is the seal upon your forehead,
So that it MUST be known
That you are "all for Jesus"—
That your heart is all His own?
Are you shining for Jesus, dear one,
So that the holy light
May enter the hearts of others,
And make them glad and bright?
Have you spoken a word for Jesus,
And told to some around,
Who do not care about Him,
What a Saviour YOU have found?
Have you lifted the lamp for others,
That guided your own glad feet?
Have you echoed the loving message,
That seemed to you so sweet?

PUTTING YOURSELF INTO PEOPLE.

During his last two years in Harvard College, Richard Fuller's sister Margaret rented a house in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he enjoyed his famous sister's invaluable society. Writing in his diary he says: "The thought, in leaving her company, was much less 'How remarkable she is!' than 'How remarkable I am..' I had no idea my mind had such power, my tongue such eloquence, and my heart such ardor!"

These words of a brother concerning a sister throw abundant light on the character of the sister. The remarkable thing about her was that she did not try to magnify herself before others, but sought to bring out the best in them, meanwhile keeping herself in the background.

How rare that trait is! Often we find the opposite characteristic in people. Whenever they get a chance to enlarge themselves in your eyes, they make the most of it. They try to appear richer than thou, more highly respected in the community than thou, holier than thou. You fade into insignificance, and they become prominent. They become first: you second. The reaction which is induced in you is more than the feeling which arises from an inferiority complex. You are actually given reasons to feel that you are of less importance than they.

Such an attitude is but the outcropping of the spirit of selfishness. In how many unpleasant forms it shows itself! Let a man center his thought and attention wholly on himself, and he will go about like a bull in a china shop, shattering the sensibilities of all whom he meets.

Margaret Fuller's career is an example of the life that centers in other people. Such a life is productive, rather than destructive. As Alice Freeman Palmer said, "It is people that count; you want to put yourself into people; they touch other people; these others still, and so you go on working forever."

If you want to make your life worth while, think less of self and more of others. Spend less time in planning for your own pleasure, and take time to make life more meaningful to those about you. "Put yourself into people."

Jesus spent most of his time not in preaching great sermons but in putting Himself into the minds and hearts of a small group of ordinary folk, some of whom He called away from their nets. He did so because he was concerned for their larger spiritual development. "I will make you fishers of men," He said. This promise He fulfilled by patient, persistent, and prayerful teaching. He succeeded so well in building Himself into their lives that when He departed into glory, they continued while life lasted to teach others what He had commanded.

Thus the Kingdom comes. It comes neither by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of God which ordinarily is made available to human need through the medium of a personality. Sometimes the reading of Scripture alone without the aid of an interpreter is sufficient to give new life. An instance of this is the story of the Japanese student in an American university who discovered the Bible for the first time while reading in the library. He read the New Testament through, and as he did so, he found his Saviour.

More usual is the method which a man in a Sunday School uses, and which is the practice of thousands of Christian workers. He teaches boys, and as the groups come to him he pours into their lives a life that has been consecrated to Christ's service, and they pass on to the department above better and stronger boys.—Forward.

THE STRENGTH OF BEING RIGHT.

"The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." The tree is the strongest member of the plant kingdom. In our Bible, therefore, it is a familiar symbol of strength. Here the Psalmist describes the man who is right in his heart toward God and man as a palm tree, flourishing with fruit and shade, and as cedar, ready for building, and strong against the mountainside. Now trees do not grow so strong if the soil is poor, if unfavorable winds tear them by the roots, and frost nips the growing branches. Just as certain factors may weaken and impair the tree, so certain situations and events may weaken the life of man.

There is this difference, however. A tree has no control, but men have control. They have conscience, reason, available guidance When they choose to plant themselves in a desert of materialism, and permit the frosts of sin to nip the branches, they are forfeiting of their own free will the strength which might have been like that of the palm-tree and the cedar!

And that strength is not alone available for one's well won happiness. It is a righteous strength, which is available for others in times of need. The noblest work for good done by him whose heart is right and therefore ready! Wicked strength will not redeem this world. No, it will be redeemed by Christ-like men, who are strong with inward rightness!—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Caroleen Church.—On Thursday night March 4, 1926, the mid-week prayer meeting met at Caroleen church. Not so large a crowd as it was so windy and cold, but good results.

Friday night, March 5, a number of good Christian people met at Brother J. B. Sisk's and held prayer meeting, which was conducted by Brother G. W. Wilson. Brother Sisk has been very sick but is improving fast. We hope to have him back at church with us soon. He has been so faithful and such a good worker, he is missed by all.

On Saturday night, March 6, C. E. met at the parsonage and gave a supper which was enjoyed by all.. After supper the pastor was presented with a $25.00 suit. Then the crowd went the church for the usual meeting, as it was consecration night. The President made a very interesting talk, and after his talk he felt led to give an altar call. Three came forward for prayer and one professed faith in Christ.

Sunday school Sunday morning at the usual hour. Very good attendance and collection. Preaching at the 11 o'clock hour.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Connie Helms, Jennie Radford.

GREAT SERIES OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS.

We are very happy to announce that we have been able to secure Dr. E. A. Sexsmith, of Baltimore, the General Secretary of our Denominational Board of Young People's Work, and Dr. A. G. Dixon, President of our Annual Conference, for the week of March 21 to 28, and have arranged for a series of young people's mass meetings and rallies in the strongest centers of the state.

It is our hope that all churches within a reasonable distance of the cities in which the meetings are to be held will cooperate in sending large delegations to the meetings.

It is a rare treat to have these men who are the rfecognized leaders of our entire denomination in the young people's field to bring us their messages on the work of our church for our youth. Dr. Sexsmith is not only heading up the work for our denomination but is holding a number of important places with the Federal Council, Christian Endeavor Society, etc., that make him of strategic importance in all phases of young people's work. His message will be helpful and inspiring to all. Everybody knows and loves Dr. Dixon, who for five years held the place Dr. Sexsmith now holds. He is vitally interested in the development of the work of our Sunday schoo's and Christian Endeavor societies.

The rallies will be held in the following churches on the dates mentioned. Enfield and Henderson are planning afternoon meetings at 3:00 o'clock with all leaders for the purpose of planning work for youth in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. All the other places will hold only one meeting at 7:30 P. M.

The schedule is as follows:
Sunday, March 21, Enfield.
Monday, March 22, Henderson.
Tuesday, March 23, Burlington.
Wednesday, March 24, Grace, Greensboro.
Thursday, March 25, Asheboro.
Friday, March 26, Winston Salem.
Sunday, March 28, at 11:00 A. M., Charlotte.
Sunday, March 28, at 7:30 P. M., High Point, First Church.

We are mailing to all pastors and Sunday school superintendents this week illustrated posters announcing these meetings. PLEASE post these in your churches and in conspicuous places in town, so that all may know about the meetings. AND PLEASE TRY TO HAVE LARGE REPRESENTATION FROM YOUR CHURCHES IN THE RALLIES! It will well repay you for your effort.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for March 21st: "What Does Jesus Mean by Cross Bearing?" Matt. 16:21-28; John 10:11-16.

Plan for the Meeting.

Place in the front of your room a large cross. If you can secure it, have one made with illumination by electric light so that all other lights may be turned off when your meeting begins. If that is not possible, make one with boards and cover it with paper or white cloth. If this is not desirable, draw one on the blue board and place before the [illegible]

[illegible] one of [illegible] in their [illegible] who desires [illegible] to challenge "Take up your cross and follow me." Ask some person to make a two-minute talk on Cross Bearing. Try to name some of the Christian heroes in the past who have borne the cross.

Ask yourselves this question: Are modern Americans bearing the cross as Jesus meant for us to do?

Does the fact that recently our Union Board of Foreign Missionary Administration had to plan to retrench in their work on the foreign field because our churches were not raising the General Conference Budget suggest to us the lack of real cross-bearing when we recognize that we are today the richest nation in the world? What ought we to do about raising our church's apportionment for the General Conference Budget? WHY NOT PLAN TO RAISE 50 AS A SOCIETY TO HELP YOUR CHURCH DO ITS PART? That would be a beginning toward bearing our cross as Christian Endeavorers.

The Missionary Record.

We earnestly hope that more of our young people will become interested in the great work our missionaries are doing at home and abroad. One of the finest magazines we know anything about for Methodist Protestants in enabling them to keep up with our work is "The Missionary Record." It comes monthly and is brimful of the most delightful reports from our work in India, China and Japan. It will bring tears to your eyes, if you have any feeling at all to read in the March issue the thanks and expressions of appreciation from our missionaries "over there" for the small gifts sent them at Christmas.

SUBSCRIBE TODAY. The price is only 75 cents a year and every issue is worth that. Hand your subscription to your pastor, or send it to Mrs. R. M. Andrews, High Point College, High Point, N. C. She will be glad to forward it to the publishers.

Every pastor, Sunday school teacher, and Christian Endeavor officer ought to read the "Missionary Record." Are you doing it? If not, why not?

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Kimrey.

Mrs. Hannah Adline Thompson Kimrey, born March 11th, 1846, died March 2, 1926. On 1865 she was united in marriage to Sampson Kimrey. To this union were born two children, Mrs. R. Alex Coble, and Miss Lizzie Kimrey. She is survived by her two daughters, three grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren. Many years ago she accepted Christ as her Saviour and joined Rock Creek M. P. Church and remained a member of this to her death. She was a good woman—good to her family, good to her neighbors and true to her church.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer in Mt. Zion Baptist Church and her body laid to rest in the near by cemetery.

J. A. Burgess.

AN ORPHAN BOY.

A poor orphan boy who was sick started to walk to a distant place to attend school, and after dragging his weary body along all day, he stopped late in the day, and asked to be allowed to spend the night at an elegant residence he chanced to come to when a well dressed stern man met him at the door and demanded of him what he wanted.

He said, "Please sir, I want to stay all night."

"You are running away from home," said the man.

"I have no home," said the little boy.

"Where are your father and mother?" inquired the man.

"Dead," was the boy's reply.

"Where are you going?" he was next asked.

He replied, "I am going away to attend school."

The little fellow trudged on, and after a while he came to another house, and asked to be allowed to stay, and the owner of the house told him he could not, and with sadness he was turning away into the growing darkness when the wife of the man looked out from the window up stairs, and saw the little sick boy and asked her husband who it was that wanted to spend the night. He said, "It's a little tramp," and her kind heart went out toward the poor child, and she begged her husband to call him in. She gave him a good supper and warm bed and what was perhaps better than either, kind words, and the next morning prepared an ample and delicate luncheon, and gave it to him, and bade him good-bye, invoking God's blessings on him. She saw him no more.

He attended school till he graduated, and afterwards became an eminent lawyer. The man at whose house he stayed died, and the man who turned him away from his house was made administrator for his estate. He fraudulently took took the property that belonged to the widow and turned her out of her home. She went to the city to seek legal advice, and some one directed her to a young lawyer, who, with great ability exposed the dishonesty of the man, secured possession of the property for the distressed widow, and in grateful acknowledgment, she asked him what she owed him for his great services. He said that she owed him nothing and when she insisted that she owed him everything, he asked her if she remembered a little orphan boy coming to her house years ago, on his way to school, and when he was about to fail to be admitted, she spoke from upstairs and begged that he be allowed to stay. She remembered it well.

"Well, I am that little boy. It gives me great pleasure to serve you now, that you need a friend." That little boy was Alexander H. Stevens.

THE MISSING APPLE.

If there was one thing that Andrews liked, it was apples! Perhaps that was what made him so strong and rosy-cheeked and happy. So when he received an invitation to an apple party, although he had never heard of such a thing before, he was sure that he would have a very, very good time.

The party was to be at Beth's house, and Beth's uncle had an orchard of the finest kind of apples. Andrew could hardly wait for the day of the party. On the afternoon before he took a long walk to pass the time.

While he was out walking he saw a girl with a big basket. The basket was so big that it seemed as if she should be carried in it instead of carrying it by herself. Andrew ran forward.

"Let me help you carry your basket," he said.

"All right! It is full of apples and very heavy. We are going to have lots of company, and these are for apple turnovers. I must hurry, but the basket is so big I cannot walk very fast."

Andrew hurried as fast as he could, and they would have made very good time indeed, but a big collie dog came bounding down the street and bumped into them. That upset the girl, and the girl upset Andrew and, of course, they upset the basket of apples. Before you could wink, they were all on the ground, the dog and the girl and the apples and Andrew.

The collie barked as if he had done something very cute. The girl laughed, and Andrew laughed, as he picked up the basket and put the apples in it. Then Andrew picked up the biggest and reddest apple he had ever seen.

"Why—why!" he exclaimed. "Here is my name right on this apple! Look and see!"

The apple girl seemed surprised. "I never heard of an apple with a name on it," she said. "It must be a magic apple, put there because you have been so good to me. You keep it and eat it."

On the way home Andrew was going to eat the apple, but he thought of the party. It would be fun to take the apple with his name on it to the apple party. So he put it away.

The next day, when he went to the party, Beth came to the door. Andrew saw right away that something had happened. She led him into a room where there were a lot of girls and boys. There was a long table, too, with plates on it. At every place there seemed to be a big red apple.

"Oh, Andrew," cried Beth, "there isn't your apple for you! Uncle put paper letters on them before they commenced to turn, so that each of us would have a special apple. But the other day he picked some apples to sell, and he made a mistake and picked some of the apples off this tree. Yours must have been among them. Oh, I feel so bad, for the party was really for you! I know you like apples so well. There is apple salad and apple sandwiches and apple pie and apple cake and apple surprises, and there isn't an apple for you!"

Then Andrew took the apple out of his pocket. "Yes, there is," he said. "I have it right here. A girl gave it to me yesterday."

When Beth saw this, she clapped her hands and was happy. Andrew put the apple at his place at the long, gay table, and the party started.

And you may believe, although he would not tell about it, that Andrew was glad he had helped that girl with her big, big basket of apples.—Selected.

ONLY A BOY.

More than a half century ago a faithful minister, coming early to the kirk, met one of his deacons, whose face wore a very resolute but distressed expression.

"I came early to meet you," he said. "I have something on my conscience to say to you. Pastor, there must be something radically wrong in your preaching and work; there has been only one person added to the church in a whole year, and he is only a boy."

"I feel it all," the minister said. "I feel it, but God knows I have tried to do my duty, and I can trust Him for the results."

"Yes, yes," said the deacon; "but by their fruits shall ye know them,' and one new member, and he, too, only a boy, seems to me rather a slight evidence of true faith and zeal. I don't want to be hard, but I have this matter on my conscience, and I have done but my duty in speaking plainly."

"True," said the old man; "but 'charity suffereth long, and is kind; . . beareth all things, . . hopeth all things.' Aye, there you have it; 'hopeth all things.'" I have great hopes of that one boy, Robert. Some seed that we sow bears fruit late, but the fruit is generally the most precious of all."

The old minister went to the pulpit that day with a grieved and heavy heart. He closed his discourse with dim and tearful eyes. He wished that his work were done forever, and that he were at rest among the graves under the blooming trees in the old kirk yard.

He lingered in the dear old kirk after the rest were gone. He wished to be alone. The place was sacred and inexpressibly dear to him. It had been his spiritual home from his youth. Before this altar he had prayed over the bygone generation, and had welcomed the children of a new generation; and here he had been told at last that his work was no longer owned and blessed.

No one remained. No one? "Only a boy."

The boy was Robert Moffatt. He watched the trembling old man. His soul was filled with loving sympathy. He went to him and laid his hand on his black gown.

"Well, Robert?" said the minister.

"Do you think if I were willing to work hard for an education, I could ever become a preacher?"

"A preacher."

"Perhaps a missionary?"

There was a long pause. Tears filled the eyes of the old minister. At length he said "This heals the ache of my heart, Robert. I see the divine hand now. May God bless you, my boy! Yes, I think you will become a preacher."

A few years ago there returned to London from Africa an aged missionary. His name was spoken in reverence. When he went into an assembly the people rose; when he spoke in public there was a deep silence. Princes stood uncovered before him; nobles invited him to their homes. He added a province to the church of Christ on earth, had brought under the gospel influence the most savage of men. Let us take care how we underestimate a boy.—Christian Messenger.

MOVED BY A SONG.

In one of the hospitals of Edinburgh lay a wounded Scottish soldier. The surgeons had done all they could for him. He had been told he must die. He had a contempt for death, and prided himself on his fearlessness in facing it.

A rough and wicked life, with none but evil associates, he has blunted his sensibilities and made profanity and scorn his second nature. To hear him speak, one would have thought he had no piously natured childhood to remember, and that he had never looked upon religion but to despise it.

A noble and gentle-hearted man came in to see the dying soldier. He addressed him with kind inquiries, talked to him tenderly of the life beyond death and offered spiritual counsel. But the sick man paid no attention or respect. He bluntly told him that he did not want any religious conversation.

"You will let me pray with you, will you not?" said the man at length.

"No; I know how to die without the help of religion." And he turned his face to the wall.

Further conversation could do no good, and the man did not attempt it. After a moment's silence he began to sing the old hymn, so familiar and so dear to every congregation in Scotland.

"O mother dear Jerusalem,
When shall I come to thee?"

He had a pleasant voice, and the words and melody were sweet and touching as he sang them. Pretty soon the soldier turned his face again, but its hardened expression was all gone.

"Who taught you that?" he said, when the hymn was done.

"My mother."

"So did mine. I learned it of her when I was a child, and I used to sing it with her." And there were tears in the man's eyes.

The ice was thawed away. It was easy to talk with him now. The words of Jesus entered in where the hymn had opened the door. Weeping and with a hungry heart, he listened to the Christian's thoughts of death, and in his last moments turned to his mother's God and the sinner's Friend.—The Welcome.

BE HONEST.

Sit down and think about it, boys. Do you reallly want to be honest men—men who can be trusted anywhere and with any sum of money?

Then you begin being honest now. Never allow yourself to take or retain a single penny that is not your own, taking nothing without leave or without giving it in return. Pick no berries that are not on your own side of the fence. Go in no orchard where you do not belong. Plunder no fruits from gardens nor cheat your playmates in any trade.

God loves honest boys and He loves honest men. He says the man or boy who is faithful in little will be faithful in much, and we know that none but the faithful ones will have a place in His Kingdom. You stifle the voice of conscience when you allow yourselves to take what does not belong to you, You sear and burn it with a hot iron so that it cannot feel and keep on doing wrong; keep on being dishonest and you will not care at all, and will become, it may be, a robber and lose all the bright things God has promised to the good. Be honest, boys!—Tantem.

THE RAILROAD MAN.

My hat is off to the railroad man
Of every grade and kind,
From the one who sits as President
To those who walk the line.
To the crew that takes the train along,
To the gang that keeps the rail,
And all the bunch that do their part
So schedules shall not fail.
The railroad man whate'er he does
Is part of a system great—
That has for its end the good of all,
Be it passenger or freight.
No matter what the weather is,
Clear, cloudy, sleet or snow—
The railroad man must clear the tracks
And make the traffic go.
God bless the railroad man today,
Wherever he may be fond;
Keep him safe both night and day
As he goes his work around;
Lord, cheer the hearts of these men whose toil
Helps so much to build our land,
And when they reach the end of their run,
Lord, welcome the railroad man!

—Rev. Robert A. Elwood.

—The superintendent of a Western railway had issued strict orders instructing station masters along the line to report all accidents or near-accidents immediately. The very next day he received the following telegram:

"Superintendent's office—Man fell from platform in front of speeding engine. Will will wire details later."

Five minutes ticked by. Then:

"Superintendent's office—Everything O. K. Nobody hurt. Engine was going backwards.

—An old lady kept a parrot which was always swearing. She could put up with this until Saturday, but on Sunday she kept a cover over the cage, removing it on Monday morning. One Monday afternoon she saw her minister coming towards her house, so she again placed the cover over the cage. As the reverend gentleman was about to step into the parlor, the parrot remarked, "This has been a damn short week."

—The special meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations, called by the League Council to act on Germany's application for membership in the League, opened at Geneva, Switzerland, on Monday of this week, March 8. The regular meeting of the League Council held every three months, also began there on that date.

—An Englishman—Sir Henry Lunn—has just given his entire fortune of many millions (except an income of only $2,500 a year) to establish a foundation to promote unity among the churches of the world and peace among nations. His gift includes a very profitable touring agency in England and many fine hotels in Switzerland. More than forty years ago he was a Methodist missionary in India. He gave up that work to enter business, but he has always carried on religious work as a layman. He is now making a lecture tour of the United States and Canada for the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches. He believes that the churches of the world must work closely together before world peace will be possible.

—An eight-year boundary dispute between the States of Michigan and Wisconsin was settled last week by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The dispute was decided in favor of Wisconsin, which means that there will be no change in the present boundary. The disputed land has been held by Wisconsin but was claimed by Michigan. It is a narrow strip along the Menominee River.

WILL SEEK STRANGE ANIMALS.

An expedition is sailing from New York this month for the jungles of Africa. The leader is Dr. William W. Mann, superintendent of the National Zoological Park in Washington, D. C. The members of the party will try to capture live specimens of very rare animals, many of which have never been seen in the United States. Other specimens, less rare, will also be sought. The animals range in size from the rhinoceros, the giraffe and the fierce African lion, to the pigmy mouse and the hyrax. The mouse is smaller than a bumble bee, while the hyrax, although smaller than a rabbit, is a relative of the elephant. Special crates have been made in which to ship the animals to the United States.

GERMAN ASTRONOMER HERE.

Dr. Walter Baade, noted German astronomer, has arrived in the United States for a year's study of the heavens through the big telescopes in this country. He will make a special study of measurements in the Milky Way. He says: "We are only a tiny speck in the center of this great constellation with a diameter of 25,000 or 30,000 light years. With the enormous telescopes in the United States we can see through our own Milky Way into thousands of other Milky Ways just as large as our own. The nearest star in our nebula is only three light years away, while the nearest separate constellation, known as Andromeda, is more than one million light years away."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Fair Grove, Wilkes Ct.—It has been quite a while since there has been a report from this church, but we are still trying to keep the home fires burning.

Our pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, gave us a splendid sermon yesterday afternoon, March night, The Happiness of a Christian. One of night, The Happiness of a Christian. One of the members remarked, "that she was sorry for the ones not present as they missed so much."

We have both a Home and Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. J. A. Auman is President of the Home and Mrs. D. J. Johnson of the Clyde Auman Foreign Society. We have several members of the Foreign Society from other churches that are interested on account of this circuit having a Missionary in Japan. Will be glad to have others to join. Several of our older members have not been able to be at church much this winter, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Kelly Auman and Mrs. Sarah Cornelison.

Mr. Kelly Latham has been blind for several years and will be 71 years old next Sunday, the 14th. Friends are going to pound him and have a prayer service there that day. He is the oldest member of this church.

On January 2nd in McGuire Hospital, Richmond, Va., one of our members was called to answer the summons we all have to. Mrs. Anietta King had been a faithful member for several years. She leaves four sons and three daughters. Her husband died several years ago. Funeral was at New Hope, conducted by her former pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, assisted by Rev. D. I. Garner.

Mrs. C. E. Stuart, Rep.

Mitchell Grove, Guilford Ct.—I am very glad to say that our church work is progressing nicely. We have a good attendance in the Sunday school. Prayer meeting every Wednesday evening.

The young men's Gospel team hold services every Sunday evening at the church, and also hold prayer meeting in the homes of any in the community where it is desired. On last Monday evening they met at the home of Mr. Farrington, and he and his wife were converted. On Friday evening the team met at Mr. Hipshaws.

Since our last report we have had one new member taken into the church, Mr. Robert Hubbard.

Our pastor filled his appointment the fourth Sunday evening and as usual preached an excellent sermon. We're always glad to hear Brother Law as he seems to bring the message most needed.

We have quite a number on the sick list. Sorry to report our superintendent Mr. Daniel Kersey has been confined to bed with rumpus; also Miss Ollie Cosbath, Mr. Herman Billips have been sick with "Flu" and a number of others.

We were very glad to have Messrs Jack Burris and George Jacobs of High Point visit our church last Sunday morning.

Nina Jones, Reporter.

Welch Memorial Church.—Just a brief report from pastor. There is lots of sickness and we have been kept busy for the past few weeks visiting the sick and burying the dead, and for the past week have been on the sick list myself; was unable to fill my appointments last Sunday, though all appointments were filled. Brother Lowdermilk from the Children's Home filled the morning engagement to the satisfaction of all who heard him, and the evening service was in the hands of the local gospel team; there was not a large attendance at either service on account of so much sickness. The Sunday school attendance was away below normal. We are hoping the conditions will soon be better, and those who are sick will soon be well again. It was our pleasure to have with us Brother Lowdermilk on the last Sunday in February at the 11 o'clock service; he brought to us an inspiring message. We are always glad to have Brother Lowdermilk visit us. The President favored us with a visit on the 21st of February and gave us another one of his inspiring messages at the 11 o'clock service. We are also glad to have him visit us. We noticed an error in his report of our Sunday school, his report read, 168 present; it should have read 268, as that was the number present on that date. Our attendance nearly runs from 250 to 300. The midweek services are usually well attended, and the congregations for preaching service are good. We are also receiving new members all along; we had two to unite with us the last time I preached, which was the last Sunday in February at the evening service. During the month of January and February I conducted seven funerals; the first was that of Brother Andrew Cain, the father of Sister Lora Beecher Cain bird; he was not a member of our church though he was a friend to us and often visited our services. After a lingering illness passed away on the 5th day of January last; he was 63 years old. He was a good man and was loved by all who knew him; he is survived by one son and five daughters, fifteen grandchildren, one brother, three sisters, and his widow whom he married last April. His first wife preceded him several years ago. The next sad funeral was that of Mr. Thomas R. Harworth, the father of our Sister Mrs. C. R. Ward. The deceased was born September 3, 1853; departed this life January 18, 1926. His wife preceded him many years ago; he made his home with Mrs. Ward. She carefully looked after all of his needs, and during his last illness all was done for him that loving hands could do. Brother and Sister Ward did all that could be done. The other daughter, Mrs. George Kersey, was also attentive to the needs of her father. On Saturday, February the 21st, we had two funerals, one at 9:30 A. M.; that was Mrs. Rosa A. Chatham, mother of one of our members, Mr. Jasper Chatham. We conducted just a brief service at the home; the funeral procession took place at the Camp Spring Church. The same day at 2:30 in the afternoon we conducted the funeral service for Mrs. Cornelia Medlin, the mother of one of the leading young men of our church, Brother Luther Medlin. The daughters, Mrs. G. G. Gray and Misses Carrie and Della Medlin, are also faithful members of our church, while Mr. Roy Medlin and his good wife are members of English St. M. P. Church. Besides the three daughters and two sons, she is survived by her husband, Mr. S. J. Medlin, and one brother. Mrs. Medlin was not a member of our church, but she was the mother of a Methodist Protestant family; she being a member of the Reformed church, and lived a Christian life. The other funerals mentioned were not of those who are related to our church. It has not all been funerals. We have had some weddings, one especially of interest, that was Mr. James Easter, one of the sons of our beloved Brother F. W. Easter. Jim, as we call him, came to the parsonage on Thursday, February the 18th, at 10:30 o'clock, accompanied by his intended bride, Miss Louella Morris, and requested of the pastor that they be made man and wife. The service was performed, after which the happy couple departed for an extended bridal tour. We wish for them much happiness.

Mebane.—Church work at this place is moving along nicely. We are hoping to accomplish many things this year. At present there is a campaign on to secure new members for our Sunday school. So far the results are very gratifying, our aim is to have as many attending Sunday school as there are members of the church. Mid-week prayer meetings are very interesting and the attendance good. The Ladies' Aid met with Mrs. R. T. Dunn in February; seventeen members present, Col., $10.35. It was decided at this meeting to give $10.00 on piano for Girls' Dormitory at High Point College. At the close of the meeting Mrs. Dunn served delicious refreshments.

Reporter.

Lineberry, Davidson Charge.—Rev. C. E. Pidge filled his appointment at Lineberry the first Sunday and as usual preached a good sermon. He handled his text well. He gets better every time we hear him.

Our Sunday school is right good but not what it should be. We have not had a large attendance this winter, the weather being bad, but I think as Spring opens up our school will be better. We are planning an Easter program.

The people are going to have the parsonage painted this Spring and I feel like that we ladies should chip in a little and help paint the inside. I am asking how many of the ladies on the charge will help a little. If we all do a little it will help a lot and it surely does need it. Let's do our part, for we want to keep our preacher and we want a nice place for him to stay. The members are cutting some timber and topping some trees on the church ground. When they get through and everything cleaned up it is going to add a great deal to the looks.

Mrs. W. A. Frank.

Philadelphia, Greensville Ct.—We are expecting a big day at Philadelphia next Wednesday, March 17. Dr. Dixon and wife and Rev. R. C. Stubbins will be with us, and of course Mr. Powell too. We're so glad to have them with us again. They always bring us a good message. We are trusting and believing that we will have a successful day.

Everybody come! Reporter.

English St., High Point.—We haven't had a report for some time, but we are getting on just fine with the work. Our pastor, Bro. Pike was on the sick list Sunday; he didn't get out to preach for us; we hope for him a speedy recovery. He has been so faithful since he has been with us. We are very proud of our pastor; he is doing a great work among the people. Brother R. M. Andrews filled the pulpit Sunday in our pastor's absence. He brought to us a splendid message.

Our Sunday school is doing just fine; very good attendance. We were very glad to have Brother Dixon with us the third Sunday even ing. He brought us a splendid message as he always does. The literature for our Easter programme has been ordered and we want to get busy on that right away. We are glad to report that Brother Hall, our reporter and also Baraca teacher, who has been seriously ill for some time we hope is somewhat improving; we hope he will be with us again in the near future. Assistant.

Calvary News Notes.—The last several weeks have been busy times for the Calvary folks. Several of our people have spent considerable time rehearsing for the play that was given some weeks ago at the South Buffalo School and then again last Friday night at Grace Hut. One of the main characters Bro. C. A. Parish, was rushed to the hospital last Wednesday night for an operation so the preacher had to take his place in the play. And, by the way, he got more compliments for his part in the play than he has gotten for a long time for his preaching. Is that complimentary or not?

On Sunday, February 21, we observed Annual Conference Day. We had hoped to raise our Annual Conference budget that day, but because of so many of our people being sick and some away we got only $55. But really that was fine for our small group here. We will have no difficulty in raising both budgets before the year is out.

Sunday evening, February 28, the Foreign Missionary Society held its thank-offering service. Miss Florence Hughes, a returned missionary from Korea, gave an address and some of our women gave a missionary pageant. The offering was about thirty dollars This too was a good offering for our people

The special services that the pastor has been holding recently for young people, one sermon to young men, one to young women, and then one to young people in general, on the subject, "The Spirit of Youth," have been well received. Last Sunday evening the Junior Choir occupied the choir platform and Miss Dorothy Hines pleasingly sang a solo.

Because of so much sickness the attendance at Sunday school and church has not been what it otherwise would have been. Notwithstanding that, the enrollment of the Sunday school continues to grow.

A real interesting meeting of the Workers' Council was held at the church last Monday evening of this week. One of the important things discussed was the matter of enlarging the cut to take care of our growing Sunday school and also to give more room for social activities. As it is sometimes two classes have to sit on the same floor, and there is a small room where the classes are held. The Workers' Council was very enthusiastic for enlarging the lot, and voted to request the board of trustees and other members of the church to give their consent.

There have been so many sick people that we cannot take the space to call them by name. The pastor gets very little time done besides visiting the sick and making the necessary preparation for the regular services. We are glad to report that none of our members are seriously ill at the present time. The pastor's family are all about well again.

The pastor is very much encouraged by the interest that the people here make to the different appeals that come to us from time to time. Not only do our people leave of their money, but many of them give considerable time to the business and work of the church. We find numbers of our people attending as much as three church meetings sometimes four a week. Brother Sullivan, one of our "steadbys" and who has charge of the heating of the church, says he spends as much time at the church as he is thinking of putting a cot in the furnace room so that he will be on hand to help him. We are reported [illegible] we look for that you will hear from us again.

L. W. Gerringer, Pas.

West Lexington Church, South Davidson Circuit.—The work of this church and Sunday school has been moving along fairly well since the last report was made from this church. Our Sunday school attendance has been gradually increasing. Last Sunday we had a record attendance, two hundred attending in the history of the church, according to some of the older members. With an enrollment of 185 there were 199 present. The offering was larger than usual, $16.38, which was for the Children's Home.

I should have called last Sunday at Red [illegible] but with [illegible] the Sunday school classes occupied the new Sunday school rooms for the first time. There was a feeling of joy among the members of the Sunday school because of the realization of the ambition of the Sunday school people to have separate rooms in which to study the lessons. We now have four nice rooms completed and seated which accommodate four of the classes, numbering from 1 to 4, inclusive. The men's class had the record attendance last Sunday, registering 31 present. Mr. Fred Hedrick, the class teacher, was absent on account of sickness in his home, and the writer tried to take his place as the teacher.

Brother Cruit Hilliard, our pastor, preached at the regular evening service which was held at 7:30. This writer was not present but was informed that there was a usual size congregation present. It was our privilege to hear a very eloquent and inspiring address by Governor T. H. McLeod, of South Carolina at the Lexington Theatre Sunday night. This

Mrs. B. L. Heavner, Cor. Sec'y.

Union Chapel, Granville Charge.—Our pastor preached a wonderful sermon Sunday on "The Ideal Savior." His subject the second Sunday afternoon was "The Ideal Minister." We had quite a large congregation at each service; and while I always enjoy Mr. Kennett's sermons I think these two were the best yet.

Our Sunday school is doing nicely although our attendance is never as good in winter as in summer. Lewis Davis was elected superintendent for t his year and we think he will make a good one. We are very fortunate in having Prof. and Mrs. Billings with us again this winter. Mr. Billings is principal of the new consolidated school; and he has been kind enough to teach our Bible class for the last two years, and he is certainly a fine teacher.

Our missionary society has been doing good work.We have divided up into four circles, and it makes all of us take more interest in the work. We are going to use Mrs. Stone's contest at the next meeting; it is such an interesting one. I hope our society will go "over the top" this time.

Irma Gray Floyd and Carl Coghill were married in December. The marriage was announced a few days ago, and was quite a surprise to many of their friends. We hope they will remain with us.

We are now making preparation for our Easter service which will be held the first Sunday in April. Reporter.

Pleasant Grove.—Pleasant Grove Sunday school has organized a workers' conference We expect great good from it. It is held the last Wednesday night in each month.. All officers and teachers are expected to attend. All members of the Sunday school are invited. Our aim is to map out at each meeting the work for the coming month.

Since we built our Sunday school rooms our Sunday school is growing in attendance.

The attendance for the winter has been fine; on some Sundays the attendance was almost 100 per cent. We expect to put on a drive in April to increase our membership and also increase interest in the work.

We are now working on the program for our Easter service. We are looking for a splendid service by our young people. Reporter.

Clark's Chapel, Weaverville Charge.—Our Sunday school is progressing wonderfully, and is increasing greatly in attendance.

The Christian Endeavor Society is holding up nicely. The meetings are as interesting and spiritual as they were when we organized.

Our pastor, Rev. J. D. Cranford, was with us yesterday. He preached a wonderful sermon. Every one listened with intense interest as their minds were drawn from the thoughts of the world to a land where troubles vanish The text was so well illustrated and explained that even the childreen had a clear conception of Christ.

Our pastor has prepared a series of evangelistic services for the month of March The services will be held at the regular service hour at each church. Weaverville members will attend Clark's Chapel, and Clark's chapel members will attend Weaverville services.

We are seeking to obtain co-operation from these services; not only seeking but expecting a blessing, for we have a splendid pastor who is faithful and conscientious in all his undertakings.

We ask the prayers of all Christian people that we and all the churches may have a progressive and successful year.

Mrs. Walter Cheek, Rep.

Palestine, Flat Rock.—As this reporter has not reported in a long time, I will try and say a few words. Our pastor is still preaching good sermons every time.

The writer hears it often remarked, "Brother Trogdon certainly preached a good sermon Sunday." You see, I hear of his sermons if I have not had an opportunity to go to church since Christmas.

There seems to be flu every where. Our entire family, except Daddy, have had the flu. All are up and seem to be getting back to usual health. The Mumps seem to be on docket next.

Aunt Sarah Landreth doesn't seem to gain any strength. For almost one year she has been down upon the bed of affliction, only being able to go about a little. Pray for her, and Uncle John, that God may strengthen them in their old age.

Best wishes to Herald. Grace R. Tucker.

Julian Church Tabernacle Ct.—It has been a long time since "The Herald" has had a report from our church. We are not dead but do not have much to report.

When conference deemed best last year to change pastors, we felt a keen regret in losing Mr. Burgess. We felt then that it would be hard to become accustomed to any one else. But when Mr. Suits came we lost sight of our regrets and have already learned to look forward to our preaching services with pleasure, for we will be sure to hear a good sermon. We are always glad to have him with his family come into our homes.

Right here I want to say that we will always be glad to have Mr. Burgess, or any other former pastor, come back to see us.

The members of our church who are away from home this winter are: Miss Ezda Deviney, who is teaching in Florida State College, Mr. J. Norman Deviney, who is in High School at Tallahasse, Florida, also miss Mearle Garrett. Miss Garrett is a student at Guilford college. We miss these people in our services.

Just now we are suffering from an epidemic of sickness, which has interfered with our church and Sunday school attendance.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Tom Pugh, in the loss of their fine baby who died recently.

Mrs. Vance Garrett is a surgical patient at Dr. Long's Hospital. Her daughter is home from Guilford College to be near her mother.

Mr. Vance Garrett is improved since an operation at the Reeves Hospital in Greensboro.

Mrs. Ed. Ward, who has been sick for some time, shows some improvement.

Mr. and Mrs. Orlo Offman have been sick

Our little village is much concerned just now over the serious illness of Mrs. G. L. Whitaker.

Friends of Miss Anna Hardin will be glad to know that she is getting out following an attack of flu.

We hope that the sick ones of our church and community will soon be well.

Asheville.—Miss Vonnie Roberts of our church here was recently bereaved of her grand mother, Mrs. Bobbie Pickens, of Jupiter.

This past Sunday Miss Beulah Eller, only daughter of Mrs. Y. Z. Eller, and sister to Junius Eller of our church, was buried at Riverside. Funeral services were conducted by Pastor Bates and Rev. J. S. Williams.

Our hearts go out to all these stricken ones. Mrs. Shares, of Oteen, and graduate of the Peabody conservatory of music, sang for the first time as employed soloist at our church at both services last Sunday. Her singing delighted those who heard her.

Two Sundays ago our church was favored with a good sermon by Rev. T. F. Goode of Fairmount, West Va. He is brother to Mr. M. F. Taylor of Asheville. He is a member of the West Virginia conference of the M. P. Church. He said that at the last session of the West Virginia Conference nineteen young men applied for admission into the conference.

In the morning of two Sundays ago Pastor Bates preached in the new Christian church here.

Our church societies are very active—the ladies aid and the two missionary societies.

There are new visitors at almost every church service.

Our church here feels deeply the loss of Dr. C. L. Whitaker. Every one appreciates the long and faithful services he rendered in our conference. We also sympathize with his bereaved family. Reporter.

Halifax.—Please take notice and act accordingly.

There will be a get together service for the members of Halifax Charge, at Bethesda Church, on Friday, March 19, at 10:30 A. M. Come prepared to stay for after noon service. Bring well filled baskets, Dr. and Mrs. Dixon and Rev. Mr. Stubbins will all be there. And probably some other speakers.

To this union were born five children; two preceded her to the grave. She professed faith in Christ and joined the M. P. Church at Mt. She seemed to be confident that she would be saved. She was a woman of a lovable disposition making many friends wherever she went. She was one who delighted in doing her part in all the workings of her church, and anything to promote Christ's Kingdom. She was a member of our home and foreign missionary societies.

She will be greatly missed in her church and community, but most of all in her home

She leaves father, mother, one brother, four sisters, husband and little son, besides a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. She was much loved by all who knew her which was indicated by the many tears shed by her schoolmates, neighbors and friends while viewing the remains in the beautiful white casket which soon concealed her from their view.

The community of Pilot church where she was a member, with all of her relatives and friends were greatly shocked to hear of her sudden passing. She had been in normal health until a few days before her death. when she complained of some trouble with her heart; and at the time of her death, she said she had a pain at her heart, handing her baby to some one present, and sank on the floor dead.

Funeral services held by the writer, Feb 17th. Our sympathy goes out for all the bereaved, and especially the grief-stricken husband and parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Whitaker.

The burial service was conducted by our pastor, and her body laid to rest in Friendship cemetery.

She leaves a father, mother, one sister and four brothers, one brother being in Florida was unable to be present for the funeral.

Bessie was a good cheerful girl full of life and always ready to do something to make happy those around her. She was a loving sister and an affectionate friend to all. Bessie will be missed in the home and among her friends. She always wore a smile that scattered sunshine wherever she went. She will always be remembered as a girl of quiet disposition and kind words to all.

Some of her favorite songs were sung at the funeral. "I'll go where you want me to go," "The Old Rugged Cross," "Sometime We'll Understand." The floral bearers were Misses Virginia and Annie Jones, Mary Denson, and Annie Squires. Pall bearers were Messrs. Williams, paying a beautiful tribute of respect to the deceased. The remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

Our hearts go out in deep sympathy for the family and loved ones, and up to Whitby God in prayer that He may comfort and keep them.

Annie Squires.

Swain, Pickens and Pickens.

Our hearts were made sad by the passing of Mrs. Harriet Swain, a beloved sister, mother and friend. Her body was laid to rest in the family plot at Democrat. Funeral services were conducted in the home of her son, J. E. Swain, in Asheville, by the writer and J. S. Williams. Mrs. Swain was the wife of one of the pioneer M. P. preachers of western North Carolina.

The writer visited her only one time after he had been away from home some time before her death. She was deeply interested in the work of her church, ready and anxious to talk about the debt that she has paid.

We shall miss her, but the life that she has left behind will live on and on in our hearts.

May God bless and comfort the hearts of [illegible] and [illegible] dear [illegible] visited [illegible] taken from [illegible] loved brother J. C. Pickens, the father of Mrs. C. W. Bates.

The writer had known him only a short time, yet to know him was to love him. He had been suffering for about 18 months, but bore it all with patience. The writer visited him on several occasions and on all occasions found him ready and glad to talk about the journey that he knew he was soon to make.

He leaves a wife and two children to mourn their loss. May God comfort them in their sadness. While we know Christ has said that [illegible] sleeping, we also know that we shall meet him again. While Mr. Pickens is not with us in his body, we feel that he is with us in the spirit and life as he lives while among us.

His body was laid to rest in the Weaver cemetery Feb. 20th, a host of relatives and friends being there to witness the occasion.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. Mr. Lundy, Rev. Mr. Brown of Weaverville, and Rev. J. S. Williams, of Asheville.

Another church and community at Mt. Zion was visited by death, our sister and friend Cheesie Pickens was taken from [illegible]. Born Dec. 24, 1882, died Feb. 25, 1926. She was born near Barnardsville on Big Ivy. She professed faith in Christ at the age of 13 and joined the Mt. Zion M. P. Church. She was also a charter member of the first pioneer church built west of the Blue Ridge mountains. She was always ready to lend a helping hand to those in need.

She was married at the age of 17 to Robert F. Pickens of Jupiter, living on the same farm ever since. Five children were born to this union. During the Civil War her husband served three years in this war and she and the children kept the things going on the farm. She visited him once while stationed at Cumberland Gap, Penn. She and two other women made the trip on horseback, were two weeks going, two weeks there and two weeks returning.

She lost one son in the Spanish-American war she was always looking for him to come home. She got up one night and went to his room, thought she heard him come in as he used to do, but found it was only imaginary. She also lived to see her grandsons in the World's War, but no death was in this. She had crosses and trials of all kinds, but her faith was so firm that she bore it all and never murmured.

The writer saw her only one time before he got sick, but he will never forget that smile she carried on her face. While she was in her new at church only one time the writer will always remember how she beloved him by the satisfied expression on her face.

After the death of her husband when she [illegible] she spent six months in California with her two daughters. Born to this union were 12 children; raised 12 of them. She lived to see eight of the children buried. She is survived by five children, 42 grandchildren 72 great-grandchildren, 14 great-great grandchildren, 173 descendants, survived by four generations.

The funeral service was conducted Saturday afternoon in the Mt. Zion M. P. church by the writer in the presence of a large number of friends and loved ones.

It would seem as if February has been a hard month for us, losing so many of our good old saints, but we believe our loss is Heaven's gain, for all things work together for good to them that love the Lord.

J. D. Cranford, Pastor.

Whitehead.

Mrs. Alice Ethridge Whitehead, wife of Mrs. Jefferson Davis Whitehead, age 65 years, died November 6th, 1925.

She became a member of Eden Methodist Protestant Church near Enfield, North Carolina, in early life and in later years joined the Enfield Methodist Protestant Church.

Mrs. Whitehead was a woman of the real true mother type. And it was a real joy to the pastor to sit down in company with this good woman and to feel the sweet influence of her spirit as she talked of things present and things to come.

The world has yet to learn all of the real power and worth of such lives as hers.

A husband, one son and two daughters mourn their loss, but may follow in the way that this wife and mother has made brighter.

Her body was placed in Chowan [illegible] at Enfield. In the absence of her pastor the funeral was conducted by Rev. Geo. Johnson of the Baptist Church and Rev. Chas. Rodgers of the M. E. Church. R. C. Stubbins.

Bowman.

Mrs. Emma Suits Bowman, 55 years of age, died Tuesday morning, February 16, at 1:30 o'clock in the Winston Memorial Hospital, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Mrs. Bowman had been in ill health for the past two years and in a very serious condition for the past six months. She was carried to the hospital about three weeks ago and death was not unexpected to her host of friends. She was the daughter of the late Henry Suits of this county and was known every where. She was a great worker of the Methodist Protestant Church, of which she had been a devoted member for more than 45 years. Her greatest joy was in serving her Master and advancing his precious work. She never failed to do her part in anything that she thought that would help anyone in any way. She was a great friend among the sick and needy. She was loved by everyone who knew her and is survived by a host of friends and relatives who realize what a great friend [illegible]

Mrs. Bowman was married to William Bowman about 37 years ago. To this couple eight children were born, seven of which still survive. The oldest son, Fred Bowman preceded her to the grave about five years. There are four girls, Mrs. Lucy Reeves, Mrs. Annie Gurley, Mrs. Ada Auman, and Miss Elizabeth Bowman; and three sons, Sam, Charlie and John Bowman. Two brothers, Rev. Edward Suits, of High Point and John A. Suits, of High Point Section, and one half brother H. Vuncanon of this city.

Interment was made in Green Hill cemetery, this city. The floral offerings were very large and of unusual variety. The funeral was attended by [illegible] large crowd. The church was filled with sorrowing friends.

Mrs. J. T. Benbow.

Geneva Williams was born February 11, 1869. She went to her reward on March 1, 1926. She professed faith in Christ and united with Flat Rock Methodist Protestant Church before she was ten years old. Some years after moving to Oak Ridge she transfered her membership to the Oak Ridge Methodist Protestant Church where she held her membership until her death.

July 28, 1888, she mas married to J. T. Benbow. Eight children were born to this marriage, one son and seven daughters. The son, J. Lang, and four daughters, Mrs. Victor Heatwell, Mrs. Clinard Goodman, and Misses Willow Way and Sounea are now living. She is survived by her husband also.

Sister Benbow was a loyal church member, a consecrated Christian, an industrious and faithful wife, and a devoted mother. She was greatly interested in the church and in all that was good and right and that made for the betterment of the community in which she lived.

The husband and children have our sympathy and prayers in this time of great sorrow. What a fine thing it is that, though you sorrow yet you sorrow not as some who have no hope. There is a vast difference. The burden of your sorrow is lightened by your hope of meeting her again. the bitterness of your grief is sweetened by the memory of her love. And the darkness of your bereavement is dispelled by the assurance that all is well with her whom you loved. You are glad because of her faith and unfaltering trust, and your faith coupled with hers comforts and sustains you in the time of sorrow. Another tie binds you to the spirit world, another hand beckons you heavenward. Some sweet day you shall see your loved one again.

The funeral service was conducted Wednesday, March 3, at 2 o'clock, in the Oak Ridge Methodist Protestant Church by the writer assisted by Dr. A. G. Dixon, President of the North Carolina Annual Conference.

A BIT OF HISTORY CORRECTED.

If my hearing served me correctly, it was stated at the funeral of Dr. C. L. Whitaker, that he served Mocksville Ct. in 1888. I also see in the Herald of February 25, issue, that he "joined the N. C. Conference in 1887, being assigned to Mocksville circuit." It is a mistake as to Dr. Whitaker's serving Mocksville Ct. in 1888, for the writer of this item served Mocksville Ct. in 1888. Brother Whitaker served Mocksville Ct. in 1889. In 1888 he served North Grannville—now Vance. This writer roomed and boarded at Capt. W. J. Ellis' at Elbaville, in 1888, and distinctly remembers Bro. Whitaker visiting Bro. Ellis' some days during the summer, coming up from Vance, where he was located that year.

By reference to the Conference minutes of 1887, pages 7 & 8, in President's report, we find these statements: "The Orange and Albemarle circuits were, at last conference, (1886) left to be supplied. Within a very few days after Conference Bro. C. A. Cecil of the Guilford Circuit was induced to take charge of Orange Circuit. Bro. C. L. Whitaker, a licentiate from the Roanoke Circuit entered upon the Albemarle work in May." So Bro. Whitaker began his duties as a pastor in May, 1887. At the close of this year, 1887, received his first appointment from the Stationary Committee, at Flat Rock, and was assigned to North Grannville, and this writer to Mocksville, these assignments for the year 1888. So Bro. Whitaker served Albemarle, part of 1887. N. Grannville, 1888; Mocksville, 1889; Tar River, 1890.

This writer was located at La Grange in 1890, and Bro. Whitaker at Whitakers, Tar River Ct., now part of Roanoke Ct.

I distinctly remember having Bro. Whitaker engaged to help in a meeting at La Grange, that summer, 1890, and receiving a telegram, just a day or so before the meeting was to begin, that he was sick and could not come. Had an attack of typhoid fever, if I correctly remember.

CHRISTIANITY, SALVATION, TRUE RELIGION.

Christianity, then, is not a foreign importation into the world. It is not a system of recondite speculations which men have elaborated. It was not argued into existence.

It is not here because theologians are defending it, nor would it leave the world if all these should argue against it.

It is here because God is in his world and because the life of God is the light of men. It is here because God has revealed himself to man and disclosed man to himself in Christ, and has taught us in him what sonship to God is and how we may attain it.

Now the experience of salvation is the realization of these truths. It is the recognition of an ever present God and the ennobling and sanctifying of what we call our natural life and common relations by seeing and fulfilling them all as sacred and divine

True religion dies not consist so much in doing special and extraordinary things as in doing all things with a sense of their dignity and value—a connecting of all duties with God and with our own sonship to him.

In such a view of religion, salvation cannot be a mere isolated, individual experience. It involves the fulfillment of the relations in which God has set us. Religion is the life of love, and love is a relational affair. It means sympathy, fraternity, service. The increased dominance of such a mode of life is the coming of the kingdom of God. The individual fulfils the ideal of the Christian life only in a partial manner if he does not in some way help to promote this reign of love among men.---Professor George B. Stevens in The Christian Doctrine of Salvation.

A ONE-ARMED HERO.

We refer to a man that was buried at Tabernacle church last Saturday, Robert Franklin Teague. His neighbors perhaps did not look upon him as a hero, but he did what few men would do in his place. In infancy an attack of disetase left him with only one good hand; the other hung almost useless by his side. His only patrimony was a small tract of unproductive land. He married and settled upon the poor farm and attacked the problem of wresting a living for himself and famiy from it. He had children born in his home, nine of them all of whom grew to maturity and all of them are living today except one. Dr. Johnson in speaking at his funeral referred to his sons and daughters all of whom he said are trying to live right, as an evidence of the kind of influence the parents exerted in the home.

How was this man able to accomplish so much, handicapped as he was?

Many a man would not have had the courage to dare as he did.

The editor of the Herald grew up in the same home with this man. We were half brothers. One of our earliest recollections of him is that of hearing him praying one night by an open window in his bedroom. He had faith in God. About a year ago we visited him as he lay sick. He was reviewing his life and he said: "The Lord has blessed me." His religious faith was the foundation of his courage and optimism.

His companion, of much the same spirit, still lingers on the shores of time. Both were octogenarians Brother Teague died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Crouse in Greensboro. Three ministers officiated in the funeral service, the pastor of the Holiness church. Greensboro, Rev. L. W. Gerringer, and Rev. T. M. Johnson.

SHALL THE CAPITAL OF THE NATION HAVE A SABBATH LAW?

By Rev. R. H. Martin, D. D., Director of Sabbath Observance, Presbyterian Church U. S. A.

On Jan. 8, Hon. Wm. C. Longford of Georgia introduced into congress a bill to secure for Washington City and the District of Columbia what they do not have---a Sabbath law.

On March 4-6 inclusive hearings on this bill were held before the Sub-Judiciary Committee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Six sessions were held and thirteen hours occupied by those advocating and opposing the Bill before the Committee. At every session hundreds crowded into the large Caucus Room in the House Office Building where the hearings were held in order to accommodate those who wished to attend. The interest was intense. At this writing word has been received that additional hearings will be held beginning March 16.

Opponents of the Bill were the Seventh Day Adventists, the Religious Liberty Association, the Anti Blue Law League of America, some labor organizations, representatives of theatrical and movie interests and others. The opposition was led by the Seventh Day Adventists who attended the hearing in great numbers and who have been untiring in their efforts throughout the country to flood Congress with petitions against the bill.

Among those advocating the passage of the bill were the following: the Lord's Day Alliance of the U. S., officially representing 11 of the leading Protestant denominations of America, representatives of the Presbyterian, M. E., Protestant Episcopal and other churches, W. C. T. U., Boy Scouts of America, Federation of Churches of Washington City, Barbers' Union and Bible Classes of Washington City.

The bill would prohibit, on the Lord's Day in the District of Columbia, commercialized amusements and sports, and secular labor and business, works of necessity and charity (liberally interpreted) excepted. Its provisions are not so strict as those of the Sabbath laws of one-half the States and are not more strict than those of a good number of the remaining states. Forty-four of the States have Sabbath laws. Washington City, the Capital of the Nation, has none. The shocking desecration of the Lord's Day in the nation's capital is the nation's concern as well as Washington's. It is is both a national calamity and a natonal sin.

It is believed there is a fair prospect of securing from the Committee a favorable report on this bill. But there is urgent need that the Committee and Congress hear from those throughout the country who favor its passage. Remember Washington City does not have self-government; Congress governs it and is responsible, not to Washington, but to the country for what it will do with this proposed legislation.

The enemies of the bill are flooding Congress with petitions against it. Let every true lover of the Sabbath and our country express to Congress his earnest desire for its passage.

Send petitions, letters or telegrams to your Congressmen and to Hon. Frederick N. Zihlman, Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C., urging passage of the Sunday Rest Bill for District of Columbia, H. R., No. 7179.

—Rev. J. H. Moton, assisted by Rev. W F. Ashburn, conducted the funeral of our oldest minister, Rev. G. E. Hunt, on Thursday of last week. The burial was at Reed's, N. C A sketch of Bro. Hunt's life will be prepared later. He was a strong man in his prime, and did good service in several parts of the State.

SLANDERING THE BIBLE.

This has become quite common with a certain class of noisy, chattering skeptics. Affirming that the Bible teaches that the "earth is flat," and the "sun do move," and a whole lot of other foolish, silly things, that are as foreign to the Bible as anything possibly can be. And a large part of this, if not the most of it, is done by men and women who profess to be Christians—ridiculing and making merry over what they assert to be the ignorance and superstition of the Bible. They never cite chapter and verse in support of their ridiculous assertions. They are like the common gossiper who asserts that Mr. So and So is unreliable—making the impression that there is something very dark known to said gossipers, which he does not reveal. He's never specific, but leaves the impression that there is something "too bod to tell." So these slanderers and maligners of the Bible never give any specific proof of the truthfulness of their baseless assertions. But the whole thing is calculated to discredit the Bible in the estimation of the young and uninformed. Satan himself could not exceed all this in baseness, falseness, and malignity.

A certain LL. D. in a late book makes the wholly unwarranted assertion that the Bible teaches spontaneous generation. Tom Paine never went so far in baseless assertion and stander on the Book. And yet this man professes to be a Christian and preach—the, I know not what. Every one who is at all well acquainted with the Bible, and possesses a fair amount of common sense, knows that the Bible, by any fair method of interpretation, does not teach the ridiculous, unscientific notion of "spontaneous generation." But a man unfriendly to a Divinely inspired Bible, whose god is the ridculous and unproved hypothesis of evolution, seems to be capable of things of which we would never dream! To say that such a man is ignorant does not sound well, and to say that he means to deceive, sounds no better; so perhaps the more charitable attitude would be to suppose that he has become so completely obsessed with the evolution delusion that he is a paranoiac, incapable of clear mental vision. Like Don Quixote, the hero of Cervantes' Spanish romance, who had read the tales of "Knight-errantry" until he thought he was a "knight," and Sancho Panza, a fine charger, and sallied forth in quest of an opportunity to display his heroism, attacked the "windmills," thinking them to be giants.

The fact that the Bible does not contain, or teach the absurdities of which its enemies accuse it, is a very strong evidence of its Divine origin. But as these maligners of the Bible do not believe in its Divine, miraculous inspiration, but regard it as a merely human book, having come by the "will of man," and not by the inspiration of God, they naturally read into the book the ignorance and superstitions of the ages in which it was written. The very fact that the Bible does not partake of the ignorance of the times in which it was written, shows its Divine origin. Uninspired men could not have written as Moses, Job, the Prophets, and the apostles did.

All this ridicule and merry-making over the Bible's teaching a flat earth, the "sun do move," a geocentric system of astronomy spontaneous generation etc., is far wide of the mark, and discloses a gross ignorance of the Bible, on the part of those merry-makers, or a bad heart, or both.

God inspired his own Book. He knows all about geology, astronomy, biology; and while the Bible is not, primarily, a treatise on the physical sciences, whenever it touches, or involves these, it is correct. Many expressions in the Bible can never be explained in harmony with the geocentric system of astronomy, and a flat earth. But these same expressions readily and beautifully harmonize with the heliocentric system of astronomy—which seems to have been unknown in Bible times in the Gentile world—and with a round, revolving earth. This is wonderful, but is ar evidence of the Divine inspiration of the Book Not a human book, being so very greatly in advance of the age in which it was written.

Dr. David Nelson in his "Cause and Cure of Infidelity," says that he was brought up in a Christian home, accustomed to Bible reading and family prayers. That he "embraced a hope" when he was young, but at the age of 19 years, he, as a young physician, "went off" in the war of 1812, and fell among infidel companions and became an infidel himself. He does not say just how long he remained an infidel. But he read infidel books and discovered that they did not tell the truth about the Bible. Had he been brought up without a knowledge of the Bible his case would, in all probility have been hopeless. But he was sufficiently acquainted with the Bible to see their misrepresentations, and this was what saved him. Said he read Paine, and saw that he "lied on Moses and the Prophets," but thought it a "mere slip" of the author. He took up Voltaire, and saw that he did the same that Paine did. So he found the same in Hume, Gibbon, Volney, and all the big infidels of the day. So he began to doubt infidelity. He found that they all slandered the Bible. So he began to read on the Evidences of Christianity, especially "Scotts Bible with Notes." So he was saved, and made a powerful preacher of the gospel. His knowledge of the Bible and an honest heart saved him from the snare of the devil—infidelity. Had he not known enough of the Bible to detect their misrepresentations, he would have been hopelessly entangled, perhaps. But we call attention mainly, to all of this, to show that no infidel, so far as I have been able to discover, ever deals fairly with the Bible—from two reasons: ignorance of it, and an unfriendly spirit toward it—sometimes very bitterness toward it. The greatest opposition to the Bible is a wicked heart. Now, here were five leading infidels, and according to Dr. Nelson, each one grossly misrepresented the Bible. The "Carnal mind is against God." "Is enmity"—not at enmity—"against God." So if the "carnal mind is against God," it must be against God's Book. This is the Cause of infidelity. Dr. Nelson says in his "Cause and Cure," that the Cause is, "Men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." John 3:19.

As it was 100 years ago, so it is today: The enemies of the Bible slander it, because of ignorance of it, and a bad heart. They try to prove themselves right, by trying to prove the Bible wrong. They do not love the Bible, because the Bible condemns them. They construct a "refuge of lies" in which to try to hide. But God says, "The hail shall sweep away the refuges of lies." Of all the articles we have read, attacking the Bible, not one has been fair. They all deal in ridicule, merry-making, misrepresentation, false interpretation, persersion, and down-right falsehood. It all emanates from a wicked, unregenerate heart. But when it comes to D. D.s and L. L. D.s engaging in such unholy performances, we can but exclaim, "How are the mighty fallen!" And what will the judgment be?

We took occasion, some time ago, to inquire, from reliable sources, about a certain writer who has been very prominent and noisy in slandering the Bible. Inquired if he were a preacher, teacher, or of what vocation. And to our surprise, learned that he was just a young fellow—been off to school, and was of no practical worth to the home in which he lived. Let his old hard-working daddy do all the work, even to the chores, and he lay around and wrote slanderous articles for the papers about the Bible, for the delectation of other fools, like himself. So if you will trace all this rot about the Bible to its source, you will find a rotten source, either mentally, or morally, or both. An intelligent, well-informed, good man cannot slander the Bible.

THE LAST DAYS OF FRANCIS ASBURY.

By H. H. Smith.

Just one hundred and ten years ago,—March 31, 1816, from a humble cabin in Spotsylvania, Virginia, Francis Asbury passed to his reward. The last year of his life was as full of toil as any of the forty-five he had spent in planting Methodism in the new world. But about six months before his death, he had a premonition of the end. After preaching to the Tennessee Conference and ordaining the deacons, he recorded in his journal: "Octo. 21. 1815. My eyes fail. I will resign the stations to Bishop McKendree. I will take away my feet. It is my fifty-fifth year of ministry, and forty-fifth of labor in America. My mind enjoys great peace and divine consolation. My health is better, which may be in part because of my being less deeply interested in the business of the conference. But whether health, life, or death, good is the will of the Lord. I will trust Him; yea, I will praise Him. He is the strength of my heart and my portion forever. Glory! glory! glory!"

Journeying from Tennessee to South Carolina, he wrote, December 2, 1815: "My consolations are great. I live in God from moment to moment."

The last entry of his journal is dated December 7, 1815—probably the last line he ever wrote—"We met a storm and stopped at William Baker's, Granby."

Bennett's "Memorials of Methodism in Virginia," gives an account of an interesting interview Bishop Asbury had with Bishop Moore of the Protestant Episcopal Church, while in Richmond, about one week before his death. "Bishop Moore," he said, "in passing through your diocese you will find but few Episcopal Churches, and these in a sad state of decay, with but few communicants; but in most every neighborohood you will find an unpretending little clap-board meeting house. In these, an humble, pious people assemble to worship God in spirit and in truth. Go into these houses and preach to the people that gather in them. Recognize them as the children of God, and as true Christians, and you will greatly promote the cause of Christ." Dr. Bennett adds: "This scene was of thrilling interest. Bishop Moore was deeply impressed by the manner and tone of Asbury."

A few days after this interview with Bishop Moore, he delivered his last public testimony. "His friends, fearing he might die in the effort to preach, endeavored to dissuade him from the task, but he resisted them, saying that he must once more deliver the gospel message in Richmond. He was taken to the door of the old Church at the corner of Nineteenth and Franklin streets, in a carriage and thence borne in a chair to the pulpit and seated on a table. Nearly an hour he spoke with much fervor and affection from the words: 'For He will finish the work, and cut it short in righteousness; because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.' (Rom. 9:28.) The sermon was delivered with much difficulty; at brief intervals he paused to recover breath. It was like the last words of a dying father to his children. The hearers were deeply, powerfully affected. 'How could it be otherwise?' asks one in describing the scene. 'To behold a venerable old man, under the dignified character of an ecclesiastical patriarch, whose silver looks indicated that time had already numbered his years, and whose pallid countenance and trembling limbs presaged that his earthly race was nearly finished; to see in the midst of these melancholy signs of decaying nature a soul beaming with immortality, and a heart kindled with divine fire from the altar of God—to see such a man and to hear him address them in the name of the Lord of Hosts, on the grand concerns of time and eternity! What heart so insensible as to withstand the impression that such a scene was calculated to make?' "

The following day after this sermon he rested, but on Tuesday he started his journey northward, hoping to reach Baltimore, by easy stages, and attend the General Conference. But the weary wheels of life were about to stand still. In a few days he reached the home of his old friend, George Arnold, in Spotsylvania County. His traveling companion, John Wesley Bond, was with him to minister to his comfort. He was conscious to the end. "Observing the agony of Bond's distress, he raised his hand and looked joyfully at him. Bond then asked him if he felt the Lord Jesus to be precious. He seemed to exert all his remaining strength and raised both hands as a token of triumph, and in a few minutes after, as he sat in his chair, with his head supported by Brother Bond's hand, and without a struggle, he breathed his last, on Sunday, the 31st of March, 1816."

ROBERT E. LEE, THE CHRISTIAN.

By Rev. H. H. SMITH.

The Duke of Wellington is reported to have said, "A man of fine Christian sensibilities is totally unfit for the position of a soldier." But no doubts that Robert E. Lee, the great soldier, was also a great Christian.

Dr. J. William Jones, who knew him well in peace and in war, said: "If I have ever come in contact with a sincere and devout Christian—one who, seeing himself to be a sinner, trusted alone in the merits of Christ—who humbly tried to walk the path of duty 'looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith,' and whose piety was constantly exemplified in his daily life, that man was the world's great soldier, and model man, Robert Edward Lee."

In discussing the question as to whether Lee was approachable and had near and intimate friends, Dr. Gamaliel Bradford closes his discussion of the subject by saying, "Lee had one intimate Friend—God." That short sentence is worth a whole chapter in giving us an insight into Lee's religious life. Dr. Bradford's comment is so illuminating that we quote a paragraph:

"So I think we may conclude that the cardinal fact of Lee's life was God.....Everywhere and always he had God in his heart, not so much the God of power, or the God of justice, or even the God of beauty, but the God of love, tempering the austerity of virtue, sweetening the bitterness of failure, above all, breathing loving kindness into the intolerable hell of war. There have been fierce saints who were fighters. There have been gentle saints who were martyrs. It is rare to find a soldier making war—stern war—with the pity, the tenderness, the sympathy of a true follower of Christ."

"A Practical, Every-day Religion."

R. E. Lee, Jr., bears this testimony to his father's religious life: "His was a practical, every-day religion, which supported him all through his life, enabled him to bear with equanimity every reverse of fortune, and to accept her gifts without undue elation." A better description of the spiritual life of Lee, perhaps, has never been given than that Writing of his army to President Davis, just after Gettysburg, he said: "Though reduced in numbers by hardships and battles through which it has passed since leaving the Rappahannock, its condition is good, and its confidence unimpaired. I hope your excellency will understand that I am not in the least discouraged, or that my faith in the protection of an all-merciful Providence, or in the fortitude of this army, is at all shaken."

Referring to these words, Thomas Nelson Page says: "When was that constant soul ever shaken! God had established it beyond the power of adversity to touch, much less to shake it."

Here is another example of how his religion sustained him in the hour of trial: His son, Fitzhugh Lee, had been captured while wounded, and carried off a prisoner. Writing to his wife, he said: "But we must bear this additional affliction with fortitude and resignation, and not repine at the will of God. It will eventuate in some good that we know not of now. We must all bear our labors and hardships manfully."

He expressed preference for those sermons that were "simple, earnest, and 'contained the very marrow of the Gospel.' "

He Promoted Revivals.

It was due in large measure to Lee's influence as a Christian commander that great revivals often occured in the army. Dr. Jones speaks of a great revival among the troops in which over 15,000 men in Lee's army professed conversion, and says: "It is believed that no army in the world's history ever had in it so much of genuine, devout piety, so much of active work for Christ, as the Army of Northern Virginia, under the command of our noble Christian leader."

So concerned was Lee for the spiritual welfare of his soldiers that one of his biographers says: "One almost feels as if he cared more for winning souls than battles, and for supplying his army with Bibles than with bullets and powder."

One of the chaplains of the army, while calling at the General's tent, said: "I think it right that I should say to you, General, that the chaplains of this army have a deep interest in your welfare, and that some of the most fervent prayers we offer are in your behalf." The old hero's face flushed, tears started in his eyes, and he replied, with choked utterance and deep emotion: "Please thank them for that, sir—I warmly appreciate it. And I can only say that I am nothing but a poor sinner, trusting in Christ alone for salvation, and need all the prayers they can offer for me."

A Man of Prayer.

"While the Army of Northern Virginia confronted General Meade at Mine Run, near the end of November, 1863, and a battle was momentarily expected, General Lee, with a number of generals and staff officers, was riding down his line of battle, when, just in rear of Gen. A. P. Hill's position, the cavalcade suddenly came upon a party of soldiers engaged in one of those prayer-meetings which they so often held on the eve of a battle. An attack from the enemy seemed imminent—the artillery was belching forth its harsh thunder and the mind and heart of the great chieftain were full of the expected combat. Yet, as saw those ragged veterans bowed in prayer, he instantly dismounted, uncovered his head and devoutly joined in the simple worship. The rest of the party at once followed his example, and those humble privates found themselves leading the devotions of their loved and honored chieftain."

Dr. Jones says: "General Lee was emphatically a man of prayer. He was accustomed to pray in his family and to have his seasons of secret prayer which he allowed nothing else—however pressing—to interrupt. He was also a constant reader and diligent student of the Bible, and had his regular seasons of this delightful exercise. Even amid his most active campaigns he found time to read every day some portion of God's Word."

He referred to the Bible as "a book in comparison with which all others in my eyes are of minor importance, and which in all my perplexities and distresses has never failed to give me light and strength." In a letter acknowledging the receipt of a beautiful Bible for use in the college chapel, he said:—"It is a book which supplies the place of all others, and one that cannot be replaced by any other."

Living in harmony with the will of God, he was ever conscious of His nearness, and saw all nature vibrant with His presence. "I enjoyed the mountains as I rode along. The views are magnificent and the valleys so beautiful, the scenery so peaceful. What a glorious world Almighty God has given us! How thankless and ungrateful we are, and how we labor to mar His gifts"

His Magnanimity.

His was a magnanimous soul. "I have said we never criticised him," says Major Stiles. "I ought, perhaps, to make one qualification of this statement. It has been suggested by others and I have myself once or twice felt that Lee was too lenient, too full of sweet charity and allowance." That is a fault rarely found among men.

"On the retreat from Pennsylvania he rebuked his aide, Colonel Venable, for telling bad news too loudly. Venable was high-spirited and did not like it, nor did a kindly invitation to drink buttermilk entirely soothe him. Shortly afterwards, the aide, worn out with running and watching, lay down to sleep in the mud and rain. When he awoke, he found that the General had spread his own oil-skin over him."

Referring to the battle of Gettysburg, Dr Jones says: "While he knew, and the calm verdict of the historian must be, that the defeat had been due to failure to carry out his orders, yet, with a self-abnegation which rises to the sublime, he calmly said, 'This is all my fault. I have lost this battle, and you must help me out of it the best way you can.'"

When he urged the promotion of a certain officer, it was pointed out that the officer had been very free in criticising the General. "The question is," Lee answered, "not what he thinks or is pleased to say about me, but what I think about him."

His Attitude Toward His Enemies.

One of his biographers relates that, seeing him one day talking at his gate with a stranger, to whom, as he ended, he gave some money, he inquired who the stranger was. 'That is one of our old soldiers in necessitous circumstances," he replied. "To whose command did he belong?" The General quietly added: "He fought on the other side, but we must not remember that against him now."

Referring to the enemy, a general said in Lee's presence: "I wish they were all dead." Lee said: "How can you say so, General? Now I wish they were all at home attending to their own business, leaving us to do the same."

He often referred to the enemy as "those people." One of his frequent orders was, "Drive back those people.'"

"I have fought against the people of the North," he said, because I believed they were seeking to wrest from the South dearest rights but I have never cherished bitter or vindictive feelings, and have never seen the day when I did not pray for them."

At Gettysburg a wounded Union soldier saw Lee riding by, and rising up on his hands, he looked Lee in the face and shouted as loud as he could, "Hurrah for the Union." Lee drove to the man, dismounted, and the soldier thought he meant to kill him. But he said Lee looked at him with such a sad expression on his face that all fear left him Grasping the soldier's hand, he said, with great tenderness, "My son, I hope you will soon be well." The soldier said afterward: "If I live a thousand years I shall never forget the expression on General Lee's face. There he was defeated . . . and yet he stopped to say words like those to a wounded soldier of the opposition who had taunted him as he passed by."

HIGH POINT COLLEGE ITEMS.

Two hundred and eight students have registered during the present year. Of these 100 are members of the Methodist Protestant Church, and there are 31 Methodist Episcopals, 25 Baptists, as well as Friends, Lutherans, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Reformed, Holiness, Hebrew, and Catholic.

Mrs. J. D. Hardy is acting as college librarian, having taken the positon made vacant by the death of Dr. Whitaker.

Dr. J. W. Hawley, pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church of Pittsburgh, Pa, has been secured to preach the commencement sermon June 6, at 11 A. M. Dr. Hawley ranks high as a preacher in the Methodist Protestant Church.

We are pleased to state that the new catalogue will be out very soon and we are anxious to place it in the hands of all high school graduates who are interested in High Point College. You can aid us in this matter to a very great extent by sending us a list of such persons as you think will be prospective students.

Coming Events.

March 27 is the date set for the annual banquet for the Artemesian Literary Society. This will be t he second banquet this society has given. Those of us who were fortunate enough to be present last year are eager for the return of the occasion. This is an active organization of the student body, and they are planning for a great occasion on the aforesaid date.

On March 29 students who are taking Geology wll start on their spring trip, which will be a combination field trip and a visit to Washington City. This trip has been planned very carefully by Professor Hardy, and the students are looking forward to i t with great expectations.

On March 30, which falls on Tuesday, at 8 P. M., De Jen, the well known magician who gives a splendid expose of spiritualism, will appear at Ray Street Auditorium, High Point We are using this auditorium through th courtesy of the city schools, because of th fact that we do not have sufficient stage roo at the college for such a performance as thi will be. This is the last number of our Ly ceum course and it has been most satisfac tory. We are glad to state that already w have arranged for the course for next yea and we believe it will be even superior t the one given this year.

Dr. Whitaker Gone.

While there will be published in the churc papers suitable resolutions from members o the faculty expressing our sorrow at the go ing of Dr. C. L. Whitaker, we cannot refrai from saying that his presence here was ap preciated here by both students and facult members. He was highly esteemed for hi life and for the service het rendered th church. Those who took English Bible unde him regarded him as a splendid instructo and a ready he had shown his ability to adap himself in a most splendid manner to a nev vocation---that of college librarian. The worl in this department was going well under hi supervision. We shall greatly miss him.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

There can be no more interesting trip through any country than that of Egypt While we love Palestine for what it has meant and still means from the standpoint of sacred history, when it comes to that of interest in history and seeing things without much change from what they were thousands of years ago Egypt to my mind is great.

There were attractions from the time we anchored at Alexandria till we boarded our vessel again at Port Said, for we went by [illegible] meeting us at the latter. Alexandria is a city of about half a million and is a great port as one sees from the ships in the harbor and the trains on the yards.

We were landed here in small boats, for like most ports in the East the facilities for docking are very poor. Notwithstanding this there were many freighters in this harbor.

We went immediately to the train for Cairo. There were many things to attract attention. We saw the King's palace which is used in the summer, for here it is cooler than Cairo where the winter palace is.

We had seen nothing but mountains in the back grounds and around the cities or countries visited and now as our train glided out into this level country the change was really restful.

It was not long until we began to see fields of rice, vegetables, citrus fruits, bananas, and activity that showed how the thousands in these cities were fed.

Saw villages where donkey, camel, chicken and cow lived under the same roof with the family, or the rest of the family rather.

Occasionally a fine residence could be seen which showed that there must be some who were living in luxury.

Trains of camels and donkeys could be seen along the highways, for under British rule they learned the importance of good roads Sometimes cars, mostly Fords, could be seen which made one feel like there were many things in common the world over.

It is easy to see why famine never troubled these people. Their fertile lands with irrigation from the Nile gives them a great advantage.

Land is very valuable here. We were told that land between Cairo and the Pyramids could not be bought for less than one thousand per acre for farming purposes. It was interesting to see the same old plow as pictured in Bible times and the same method of raising the water out of the canals for irrigating purposes.

In every village and town through which we passed could be seen the spires and minarets of the Mohammdan Mosques, and to mind that accounts for their backwardness in many things.

All of our party were eager to see the historic Nile and it is no small wonder that these people count that river sacred, for it is their entire dependence for the supplying of natural life. If there was any reasonableness in idolatry, this would seem more reasonable than some other ways of worship. I wish I could give you a picture of this great country.

On our right before reaching Cairo the Pyramids came into view though quite a distance away. Our group landed in Cairo, we were quartered at the Continental Hotel, next best in the city. A nice place and yet the cooking was different. Plenty of everything to drink but water. It was strange to them that we called for so much water. I never tried the goats' milk only in tea, but that was the only kind of butter we had.

Here as at most or all the other places we had the Cauliflower. Some call it an educated cabbage, but to my mind, as a boiled vegetable it has never received its diploma.

Our trip to the Pyramids was the greatest of our experiences here. Of course the riding of the camel was one of mine. I never rode all around, for I was satisfied when I reached the top of the hill at the base of the Sphinx I refused to ride back as some got "sea sick."

The Pyrmids are great wonders and will continue to be as they have been in the thousands of years gone by. I never went to the top for I never take any risks just to say "I did it."

The shopping here was an interesting feature as there are so many stores and bazars where, if you know how to trade with them you can get things very reasonable.

Bro. Ballard and I made friends with a very interesting Spaniard who could talk good English who called himself "Poor Jack." (Jack Comats) and he gave us some good bargains in souvenirs.

The museum I shall not attempt to describe only to say I saw many mummies of the Pharoahs and as many quaint and interesting things from King Tut's Tomb, though that gentleman has not arrived in Cairo yet. They are expecting however to place his mummy here and have a special section for him. He must have been an unusual character with a great deal of wealth at his disposal.

The most interesting thing to me in this city was the C. E. Rally where several hundred Egyptians listened to Drs. Clark and Sheldon speak through an interpreter. They have one hundred and fifteen societies in that land now. Moslem reigns now but the light is breaking through. The Mohamedan quarter here like all other places is dark and filthy with a great deal of filth and physical blindness. The thing that bored me worse than anything else was to have to put on their "bolshoes" over mine to keep from polluting their holy temples in order to get in. They looked so dirty I was afraid of getting the germs on my shoes.

There is much to be written of this land that is interesting but I must not tax space and patience now.

We left Cairo on train and through the land of Goshen the Great Desert running along the Suez Canal quite awhile to Port Said where we were glad to get aboard the Republic again though only for one night to sail for Haifa where we would land on dry land for a tour of Palestine of which I will tell you in my next letter. ONE HUNDRED PER CENT CHURCHES.

There are Methodist Protestant churches, and we rejoice to know that the number is increasing, who regularly pay what they owe. They do this not because they are wealthier than some who do not pay, but because they treat their church business as they treat their own business. They have a system and they make it work.

Their method is simply this: At the beginning of the year a statement is made out of the cost to run the church for the ensuing year. In this statement they include the pastor's salary and all local expenses. They also include their obligations to the Annual Conference and to the General Conference. because these bodies can do nothing except as they are supported by the local churches This statement is presented simultaneously to every member of the church, men, women and children; because every one of them in joining the church promised, "to give as God gives you ability to the support of the Gospel ministry in this church, and do its works of Christian benevolence, remembering that you are but a steward of whatever wealth you may possess." Each member is asked to subscribe his part to meet the obligation set out in the statement, and to pay that subscription in weekly or monthly installments and envelopes are given to each to make this payment convenient.

This covers the whole secret of the method and the only method that has ever succeeded. It means an every-member canvass, proportionate paying, and regular installment paying. Any church that will pursue this method fairly and faithfully will surceed.

This letter is written in the hope that you will be persuaded to do what you can in your own church to have this plan or some plan adopted. Surely you love your church enough to wish that it might do its fair part towards the support of the Kingdom of God. But wishes alone will not accomplish the object. You are one of the officials chosen to take the lead by your brethren. You can put this plan into effect if you give your hearty endorsement to it and cooperate with the pastor in getting it started. If we appeal to you in vain, who can be expected to respond? Who will carry on the church business if the elected officials will not? For the love you bear to the Head of the Church, and for the honor of the office you bear, will you not listen, and conscientiously ponder these concluding questions:

IS IT LOYAL TO REPUDIATE AN OBLIGATION CREATED BY YOUR OWN GENERAL CONFERENCE? IS IT FAIR TO REQUIRE OUR OWN GENERAL BOARDS TO DO BUSINESS WITHOUT MONEY? IS AN AVERAGE PAYMENT OF FIVE CENTS A WEEK YOUR FULL MEASURE OF DEVOTION?

(Signed in behalf of the Budget Council of the Methodist Protestant Church).

THINGS THAT NEVER DIE.

The pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulses to wordless prayer,
The streams of love and truth,
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry,
The striving after better hopes—
These things can never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need;
A kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy softly breathed,
When justice threatens high,
The sorrow of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand.
Must find some work to do,
Lose not a chance to waken love—
Be firm and just and true;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee—
"These things shall never die."

—Charles Dickens.

THE MECHANIC MORE EFFICIENT .. THAN THE POLITICIAN.

Dr. James Harvey Robinson is one of our most thorough historical and sociological students. In his monumental volume, "The Mind in the Making," he says many things worthy the most careful contemplation. Here are three paragraphs:

"No one who is even most superficially acquainted with the achievements of students of nature during the past few centuries can fail to see that their thought has been astoundingly effective in constantly adding to our knowledge of the universe, from the hugest nebula to the tiniest atom; moreover, this knowledge has been so applied as to well'nigh revolutionize human affairs, and both the knowledge and its application appear to be no more than hopeful beginnings, with indefinite revelations ahead, if only the same kind of thought be continued in the same patient and scrupulous manner.

'But the knowledge of man, of the springs of his conduct, of his relation to his fellowmen singly or in groups, and the felicitous regulation of human intercourse in the intercourse of harmony and fairness, have made no such advance.Aristotle's treatises on astronomy and physics, and his notions of 'generation and decay' and of chemical processes. have long gone by the board, but his politics and ethics are still revered. Does this mean that his penetration in the sciences of man exceeded so greatly his grasp of natural science, or does it mean that the progress of man in the scientific knowledge and regulation of human affairs has remained almost stationary for over two thousand years? I think that we may safely conclude that the latter is the case. It has required three centuries of scientific thought and of subtle inventions for its promotion to enable a modern chemist or physicist to center his attention on electrons and their relation to the mysterious nucleus of the atom, or to permit an embryologist to study the early stirrings of the fertilized egg. As yet relatively little of the same kind of thought has been brought to bear on human affairs.

"When we compare the discussions in the United States Senate in regard to the League of Nations with the consideration of a broken down car in a roadside garage the contrast is shocking. The rural mechanic thinks scientifically; his only aim is to avail himself of his knowledge of the nature and workings of the car, with a view to making it run once more The Senator, on the other hand, appears too often to have little idea of the nature and workings of nations, and he relies on rhetoric and appeals to vague fears, hopes or mere partisan animosity. The scientist have been busy for a century in revolutionizing the practical relations of nations. The ocean is no longer a barrier, as it was in Washington's day, but to all intents and purposes a smooth avenue closely connecting, rather than safely separating, the eastern and western continents. The Senator will nevertheless unbushingly appeal to policies of century back, suitable, may hap, in their day but now become a warning rather than guide. The garage man, on the contrary takes his mechanism as he finds it, and does not allow any mystic respect for the earlier forms of the gas engine to interfere with the needed adjustments."

TWO KINDS OF SKEPTICS.

By Rev. Luther K Long.

The Standard dictionary gives the following as a double definition of "skeptic" "One who, for lack of convincing evidence refuses concurrence in generally accepted conclusions or theories in science, philosophy, ethics; in a bad sense, a pessimistic doubter of human nature."

There are men who are skeptics in the bad sense, no doubt. They are cynical scorners of the people who find satisfaction in beliefs based on what seems to be good evidence. They are not seekers after truth and righteousness —rather, they are unbelievers in the reality or possibility of truth and goodness.

But I feel quite confident that the vast majority of skeptics are skeptics in the good sense. They love the truth, and their refusal to concur in the generally accepted beliefs of their neighbors is because they do not have evidence that to them is sufficiently convincing.

Mr. Glenn Voliva, leader o f the Dowieite colony at Zion City near Chicago, is a skeptic with regard to the theory that the earth travels around the sun, as held generally by his neighbors. Some people are skeptical as to the wisdom of having passed the Eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. Some investors are skeptical when offered an opportunity to get rich quick in Florida real estate, others are skeptical when they encounter the theory of evolution. These people are not alike, and their skepticism is not always the same thing. It would be exceedingly foolish for a person to use the word only in a bad sense, and to take delight in hurling it viciously at those whom he considered his enemies.

and the enemies of God, because they happened to differ from him in matters of opinion.

Glenn Frank, the new president of the University of Wisconsin, has recently given expression to some very good thoughts in favor of the skeptic. Of course Doctor Frank is speaking of the good skeptic. He says:

"The skeptic is a man who refuses to be satisfied with a fiction when he can get a fact

"The skeptic is a man who refuses to be satisfied with second-hand information when he can get first-hand information.

"The skeptic is a man who refuses to be satisfied with poor authority for his ideas when he can get good authority.

"The skeptic is a man who would rather run the risk of missing a truth now and then by caution than to fill his mind with myths by credulity.

"The skeptic is a man who is unwilling to believe a thing simply because it pleases him or profits him.

"The skeptic is a man who is willing to believe a thing that is true even if it run counter to all the cherished notions of his nursery days.

"This skeptic is no denyer of the truth; he is a digger for truth.

"And of such is the kingdom of courage. Even lazy men may accept truth; but only courageous men can question truth, proving all things, and holding fast only to that which is good."

HOW TOBACCO UNDERMINES.

By Will H. Brown.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, explains why some men can use tobacco for quite a long time with no apparent serious injury, by saying that the normal healthy body of an adult, when well cared for, has a margin of reserve force that can stand heavy extra demands upon it---"a margin of safety that nature provides;" but that when nicotine is taken into the system it begins to destroy and undermine this reserve force, often weakening the tobacco addict to the point of not only having no reserve force to meet any kind of an extra demand, but of not being able to attend to the normal duties that may come to him. When the reserve force of the kidneys is gone, kidney troubles come When the reserve force of the lungs is gone, tuberculosis and other diseases set in. When the heart has lost its power, until the possessor puffs at the slightest exertion, and finally ceases to beat at all, the individual drops dead---from "heart disease," the friends say, when in fact it is frequently "tobacco heart."

Nicotine also destroys the reserve force of the mind. Many a man has lost his position because of being so forgetful that his services are no longer desirable. The heavy smoker is habitually forgetful as a rule. Arthur Brisbane, noted writer, says a learned German professor has proved that the person who inhales tobacco smoke, absorbs eight times as much nicotine as the smoker does who does not inhale. Mr. Brisbane contends that a person cannot think when the head is tilted back, either inhaling or puffing out smoke, adding: "Thinking makes the forehead turn downward."

August Vollmer, Los Angeles' new chief of police, wants officers who can think, so has issued orders forbidding policemen from smoking, either on street duty or in the offices of the police stations.

WHAT CHRISTIANITY HAS WROUGHT IN JAPAN.

By Howard B. Grose, D. D.

If the following tribute to the place and power of Christianity in Japan had been written by a minister or a missionary it would probably be considered an exaggeeration, or, at best, a one-sided statement. Its source gives it value, makes it stand out as an expression of the utmost significance.

It was written by Mr. S. Sheba, a non-Christian, as an editorial for The Japan Times and Mail, one of Tokyo's great native dailies, of which Mr. Sheba is editor-in-shief. The occasion which inspired his comment was the arrival of Dr. John R. Mott on his sixth visit to Japan. After paying Dr. Mott the highest compliments, saying that no leader deserves more than he the gratitude of Japan for substantial good done for her, as on the occasion of the great earthquake in 1923, the writer "takes the present opportunity to put on record our view, as a non-Christian observer, of what Christianity and Christians have done to this country."

Says he:

"It is common enough t o say that Japan has won her present place in the world throu' her prowess at arms, as if mankind had no criterion for judging the greatness of a people but the brute instinct to kill each other. No, that is not the only criterion, nor yet the main criterion. There is a higher standard, indeed, the highest standard, namely the quality of civilization. What is it that has given Japan her present civilization? It may be claimed that Japan has had centuries of oriental civilization, that has prepared her to rise to a higher plane of humanity and enlightenment. But no amount of sophistry will hide the fact that it is the Christian workers and Christian civilization that have lifted Japan above t he darkness of old ideas and backward customs and put her on the path of progress and higher culture.

"Modern Japan may have been an apt pupil; but she has had her days of tutelage and her tutors have been neither Buddhists nor Confucianists, but the Christians with their Christian civilization. Thirty years ago we had exterritoriality removed, not because we had our own enlightened judiciary system. but because we went heart and soul into mastering and adopting the Christian system and ideas of justice. We are today received to all practical purposes, (except alas, in emigration question), as equals in the most advanced centers of the world's civilization. and that not because we are the descendants of people of the highest bravery, with a noble code of chivalry, but because we have succeeded in assimilating the Christian standard of ethics and morality as well as Christian good manners.

"Let rs ask then who it was that taught us in this struggle for upliftng ourselves The answer is perfectly simple. The Christians and Christian ideas of love, humanity, justice and propriety, therefore, Christianity.

"Japanese Christians professing their belief in the Bible and going to churches may not be very large; but the Japanese men and women who think as good christians do without knowing it and are propagating and acting up to Christian ideas are innumerable. In fact it may be said, that if Christianity as a religion be making but a slow progress in Japan, the Christian ideas may be said to have already conquered the country.

"Take the Christmas festival, for instance; it is fast becoming a national institution, the traditional idea of celebrating the anniversary of the birth of the Lord of Peace appealing strongly to the Japanese sentiments. In Tokyo, at all events, the Christmas season has become one of rejoicing and fraternity. Or take fiction and magazine and newspaper articles for popular reading; in Japan one can not help being astonished to see to what extent their writers are guided by Christian ideas.

"For this Christian conquest, of which we are not ashamed, we must admit that we owe it to Christian workers, foreign and Japanese, especially workers like those who are represented by our great visitor, now in our midst. We sometimes t hink that these workers would be more welcome to us and accomplish more if they did not talk so exclusively of religious topics. None the less we cannot deny that they are doing us a world of good. These are our plain but frank words of welcome to Dr. Mott."

Pounding.

Friday night, February 26, we had been to town and had just returned and gone into our house and made a light when we heard some one on our front porch. We at once went to see who was there and opened the door. It was visitors from Corinth Church. About a dozen in all, men, women and children. They sat with us and talked and we all enjoyed the hour very much. By and by the hour arrived for them to leave. We noticed that they were slow moving out. Seemed to be waiting for something.

They had come in a large school truck and had something to unload before leaving. Finally they got lined up and carried these things into our dining room. When this was done they could drive off without any trouble. They took us on surprise as we knew nothing of what was in store for us. We, well, we came so near not being at home. Do not know what the party would have done had we not been home.

It was a real nice pounding and we would like to mention items and names but there is quite a long list of names and items and besides we are not sure that we have all the names. Not all the packages had names on them and we might omit some.

The people at Corinth are a kind appreciative people. We appreciate the things and the spirit that prompted them to give them. May the good Lord abundantly bless them and help us to render more efficient service.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

There comes a plea for the Young People's Work from our Sec., Mrs. T. L. Speas, who has sent you the following letter:

"The Missionary year will soon be ended, there are only about three weeks more and the treasurer's book will close.

I am wondering if all the Young People's Home Missionary Societies of N. C. have done their best this year. If you have not, please see how much you can accomplish in the next three weeks.

As your Secretary we suggested that the Young People's Society support a scholarship for the High Point College—and we are still very anxious to raise $100.00 for a scholarship.

Will some one who has some extra money to give let it go through your Young People's Missionary Society? It will also encourage the children in their work.

If there is a church which does not have the Young People organized in Mission work will you organize before the Branch meeting which meets in Thomasville April 20-27

Write Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Asheboro, N. C., for Literature—how to organize and also notify me of all organizations.

Sincerely. Mrs. T. L. Speas.

Sec. Y. P. H. M. S. N. C. Branch.

A Great Privilege.

To those who heard Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell of Labrador, in a recent lecture it was an opportunity of a life-time. A rare treat to listen to the man who for about 35 years has worked so marvelously in that North Country of snow and ice for the betterment of its people! Then, too, the pictures of his hospitals, the peoples, the frozen streams, tremendous icebergs, fisheries; the sports and games—(even play foot ball on the ice)—all the pictures were very interesting, as well as instructive. Many of them perfectly beautiful in their rich colorings. There was a waterfall twice the height of the Niagara Falls.

Dr. Grenfell in a very happy manner began his remarks with a brief sketch of how he came to go to Labrador. He was a surgeon in London, never went to church—was not religiously inclined—At some time he heard Rev. D. L. Moody and something caused the great surgeon to begin to think what was all this about.—Where was it leading?—What joy in life if there is nothing to the future. He made a decision to follow Christ—to have Him the leader of his life. Still what and how to proceed to really help humanity was his next problem. He consulted a preacher, in whom he had great confidence, as to what he should do to teach others to follow the Christ and still continue his profession. The minister frankly confessed he did not know what to suggest. Then like so many others who have wisely done in all ages—Dr. Grenfell went to his mother for advice. She told him to pray earnestly for guidance and to read the 143d Psalm.

He began to know that to follow Christ he must teach the Christ—he must love the other man and show it in a way that was unmistakable—not just tell a hungry person there was an "eating house" around the corner when that fellow was too poor to buy food. In a jocular way he said why set a man's leg—then send him home to kick his wife again with that mended leg?—but love the man into being a better man and send him home loving his family.

His first church work was trying to teach a class in Sunday school. He told how when he could not keep the children's attention he finally boxed their ears, for which he was almost run out of the school, but he soon learned that he must love them into the kingdom. Dr. Grenfell was a lover of the Sea, so he decided to fit out a Hospital Ship and work among the fishermen. This he did for five years; then in 1892 he went with another doctor, and two nurses to open a small hospital in Labrador; then in 1894 another was built and later on four more at intervals of about 200 miles. Dr. Grenfell has 30 or more on his staff. He said "I never ask them what is their religion but will they go and can they finance their way? He has graduates from Oxford, Princeton, Yale, Harvard and other leading universities among his workers and his nurses are graduates of such as Vassar, Bryn Mawr and Smith and others. Besides the hospitals, there are dental clinics and a number of child welfare clinics.

For 14 years a noted specialist has gone each year and gives sight to many blind folk. Among the pictures on the screen were two little blind girls who were given to Dr. Grenfell; they were treated and their sight restored. Another picture, 20 years later view, very pretty and teachers now. The aim of his great work is to help the deserving in sickness and accident.—To show them to follow the Christ by a message of love in the forms in which they themselves would most wish it. is a privilege Dr. Grenfell says. There are no roads in Labrador. In summer the sea gives them a way of communication, and in winter the country covered with snow and ice is one broad highway. Dr. Grenfell said they would have roads—he said "We will love them with a road."

Fishing and trapping are the principal means of livelihood.

Among the women there is taught domestic science and household arts. Hooked rugs are some of their arts, designed in local scenes bringing out the life in the North—such as reindeer, the bear on icebergs, wild geese silver foxes, all portraying the real life.

There is being built a larger hospital now to cost $80,000 and it is in the interest of funds for this work that it became necessary for Dr. Grenfell to lecture. Greensboro people were highly favored that he came our way. We regret everybody could not see and hear him.

Interesting Program At Mt. Lebanon Church.

Randleman.

On Sunday evening, March 7, a thank offering program was rendered at Mt. Lebanon church to a large and attentive audience.

In spite of the fact that the children had not received much training on account of the bad weather and sickness, still we feel that the service was worth while and that much good was accomplished.

Our society here is a little more than a month old but we are proud of the results and are planning for greater things in the near future. We want to make special mention of the song by the children. Each child carried a small candle. These candles were lighted by two of the larger girls who carried large candles. Just as the candles were lighted the lights were turned off and the children sang their song by candle light. It was very impressive. The orchestra from the Baptist church assisted with the musical program.

We appreciate very much the beautiful messages in song which Mrs. Walker brought to us. Miss Esther Ross, vice president of Home Missions in N. C., brought us a wonderful and impressive address on our home mission work in North Carolina. She explained the different phases of our work and told something of the greatest need of each and told us how we as a local society could aid in the great work the women of our church have undertaken. We were disappointed in not having Mrs. W. C. Hammer with us. She gave us a great message on Foreign Missions one week ago at Worthville.

We are fortunate in being located so near so many of the prominent leaders in missionary activities in our conference.

Mrs. W. H. Neese, Reporter.

W. H. M. S.

Our General Secretary of Tither's League, Mrs. Strouf, will soon expect a report from the North Carolina Branch of the Womans' Home Missionary Society. Secretaries of Tither's League, please send in as many cards as possible before March 31st.

If any Auxiliary can use more cards, write me how many you can use and they will be mailed to you at once.

Please do not delay in this most important work of the Branch.

Joy Harris Glascock,
Branch Secretary of Tither's League.

W. F. M. S.

To the Secretary of Tither's and Intercessors. During the year just about to close I have given out about 200 cards. Please get busy and have as many of them signed and return to me before March 31st. I would like a good report from the N. C. Branch of the W. F. M. S. As you know I must report to the General Secretary, and my report will be governd by what the Auxiliary Secretaries do. Joy Harris Glascock, Branch Sec.

Notice.

Sunday, March 21, beginning at 10:30 there will be a district missionary meeting at Pleasant Hill Church. All churches in the 8th district are invited to go and take dinner.

Mrs. W. C. Hammer will be with us and give an address on Home missions. A good program has been planned and we are expecting a large crowd.

Mrs. T. L. Speas, Dist. Chairman, 8th Dist.

Traffic Cop (to driver who refused to obey signals)—Didn't I tell you to stop?

Driver—Yes sir, but my wife told me not to stop until I got home.

LET'S SHOW DR. SEXSMITH WHAT NORTH CAROLINA CAN DO IN THE WAY OF ATTENDANCE AT THESE RALLIES!

Topic for Sunday, March 28th: "The Gospel in the Near East." Isa. 54:11-17. (Missionary Meeting).

Plan for the Meeting.

Have one of your Endeavorers draw an outline map of the Near East, which includes the Balkin States, Persia, Arabia, Egypt, Turkey, Syria, Asia Minor, Palestine, and Mesopotamia. Call attention to the fact that the religion of this region in which our Lord began his work is mostly Mohammedan and tell something of the persecution Christian peoples have suffered at the hands of the Moslems. (You may secure abundant material for this from literature sent out by the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Ave., New York City.) If you can secure pictures and articles of the peoples and their customs bring these to your society meeting. Ask someone to prepare an article on the Mohammedan religion and discuss this before the society. Show in what ways it is like Christianity and how it digers. Stress the need for missionary effort in the Near East. Pray for our missionaries in the Near East and in all parts of the world.

Social For "All-Fools' Day."

In the Christian Endeavor World for March 11th, Dr. William Shaw outlines a dandy plan for an "ALL FOOLS FROLIC" that will be enjoyed by your Endeavorers on or near Aprid 1st. Secure this copy of the paper and plan to have a good time. Write us and tell us about how you came out with it.

Attention, Sunday School Workers!

Nearly half of our Sunday Schools have not yet ordered supplies for the Easter Service. BE SURE TO DO THIS TODAY. It is a dandy and attractive program coming from Dr. Sheridan's office and will not only add interest to the great work of Home Missions but will put new life into your work for the coming season. Every school is asked to take a generous offering on Easter Sunday for Home Missions. This applies to your General Conference Budget, of course, so let's push it to the limit.

Plan For A Decision Service. . . . . .

Easter is a mighty fine time for an in-gathering of the children into the Kingdom and into the church. As leaders, we ought to cavilize their interest in the great sacrifice of our Lord and his conquest over death to challenge all of our school to a deeper consecration of life and to the dedication of self to the great program of our Master. Let us pray that all our churches may bring many souls to the Lord during this Easter season.

Grace Church is planning a series of services during the week preceding Easter and will especially emphasize decision for Jesus Christ. On Easter morning, we hope to have a large number of decisions and of accessions to the church. Could not many others of our churches plan for a similar series? Let us know about it.

THE FOOTSTEP ON THE STAIR.

A Parable of Safed the Sage.

(Written by Dr. William E Barton soon after the death of his wife.)

After that we had circumnavigated the globe, which means, being interpreted, after we had sailed around the world, and had come unto the lovely spot where we spend our Summers, we gathered our children about us and were proud and glad. And the children said, Father and Mother have sailed for Forty Thousand Miles upon the Seven Seas, and have seen Strange Continents and Islands, and now are they Home again. Furthermore, they have sailed for Forty Years upon the Tempestuous Sea of Matrimony, and have kept their troubles out of the Newspapers. Go to, now, and let us give them the time of their Sweet Young Lives, and celebrate their Fortieth Anniversary. And they did even so. And we feasted and were happy.

And we lingered in that lovely spot longer than we had ever done, until the Autumn came, and the Leaves turned Red and Gold, and the forests were glorious. And we enjoyed each day.

And when the day for our departure drew nigh, being but seven days before us, I rose in the morning, and the Sun shone radiantly upon the Forest And I said unto Keturah, Remain where thou art and take thy Supererogatory Beauty Sleep and I will build a fire.

And I went down the stair, and I gathered Sticks and laid them on the Hearth, and lighted the small Wood, so that the Logs soon were blazing. And as I rose, I heard the footstep of Keturah, descending the stair, and I stepped forward and greeted her at the Foot, and Saluted her, and led her to the Fire, and said, Behold how goodly it is and how pleasantly warm.

And she stood with me, and said, The day is glorious, and the Earth is beautiful, and God hath been very good to us.

So we broke our fast, and began the day with joy. But before that day had ended, an angel passed that way, and cast a shadow as it passed; and the angel beckoned unto Keturah, and she turned and smiled at me in Farewell, and she vanished from my sight, and left me bewildered and in sore lamentation.

And that night I rested not, and Dawn broke late and unwelcome. And the Sorrowful Sun had hidden its face, and the skies wept.

Then I rose, and descended the Stair, and gathered Sticks, and builded a Fire. And as it began to blaze, I rose, and I turned as it were instinctively, as if I had heard a Footstep, even the Footsteo of Keturah, descending the Stair. And there was no sound, but only an Agony of Silence. And I sat me down in Grief and Desolation.

Now the Footsteps of Keturah while she was yet Visibly near made Musick as they trod the Common Paths of Life, and ministered richly in little deeds of kindness and unselfishness, and the echoes still are to be heard in many places.

And I have not lost them forever. For in my better thoughts I hear them before me for guidance and hope, and I know she is not far away

Now there will come a day when I also shall ascend the Stair that slopeth upward from this mortal world to that which is above. And I know that she will be listening for my coming. Yea, and she will not altogether wait for me inside the Gate; for I shall hear her footstep coming a little way down to meet me, and we shall go in together.---The Congregationalist.

Methuselah ate what he found on his plate,
And never, as people do now,
Did he rate the amount of the caloric count—
He ate it because it was chow.
He wasn't disturbed, as at dinner he sat,
Destroying a roast or a pie,
To think it was lacking in granular fat,
Or a couple of vitamines shy.
He cheerfully chewed every species of food.
Untroubled by worries or fears
Lest his health might be hurt by some fancy dessert—
And he lived over nine hundred years!

THE INNER LIGHT.

He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit in the center, and enjoy bright day:
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts
Benighted walks under the midday sun;
Himself in his own dungeon.---John Milton.

TELEPHONE CALLED FRAUD.

The following article is said to have been taken from a paper printed Aug. 15, 1864.

A man about 46 years of age, giving his name as Joshua Coppersmith, has been arrested in New York for attempting to extort funds from ignorant and superstitious people by exhibiting a device which he says will convey the human voice any distance over metallic wires so that it will be heard by a listener at the other end. He calls the instrument a "telephone" which is obviously intended to imitate the word telegraph and win the confidence of those who know of the success of the latter instrument without understanding the principles upon which it is based. Well informed people know that it is impossible to transmit the human voice over wires as may be done with the dots and dashes and signals of the Morse code, and that, were it possible to do so, the thing would be of no practical benefit.

The authorities who apprehended this criminal are to be congratulated, and it is to be hoped that his punishment will be prompt and fitting that it may serve as an example to a horde of other conscienceless schemers who enrish themselves at the expense of their fellow-creatures.

DISAPPOINTED!

This writer has been disappointed thus far in not seeing in the Herald an answer to Brother Tobe Shepherd's last lesson on the subject of evolution. An answer was expected to appear from the bright, brilliant and breezy writer, "S. R. H." We presume that final lesson by Tobe thrilled and overwhelmed Brother "S. R. H." to the extent that he was unable to muster a "come-back."

Resolutions of Respect for Dr. C. L. Whitaker

Whereas our Heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to call our beloved friend and fellow worker, Dr. C. L. Whitaker to his everlasting reward, be it Resolved

First, That the members of the faculty of High Point College, who deeply feel the loss we have sustained by his departure, humbly submit to the Divine Will. His work in our midst will be an inspiration to us and his influence will never die.

Second, That we adopt resolutions expressing the regret and esteem in which he was held by all who were associated with him, and that we express our appreciation of his life and service among us.

Third, That we extend our sincere sympathy to his bereaved family.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald and to his family.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 21.

Jesus Dies and Rises from the Dead.

Lesson Text: John 19:23-30; 20: 19,20.

Golden Text: John 10.17.

The Central Truth: Who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification." Rom. 4:25.

Scriptural Points.

1. Four soldiers obeyed the order of a centurion and nailed Jesus to the shameful cross. The centurion executed the sentence of Pontius Pilate, who weakly submitted to the clamor of the thoughtless multitude. The chief priests and rulers urged the people to demand that Barabbas be released and Jesus crucified. It was the most wicked tragedy of all history.

2. The clothing of the victims of the cross became the property of the soldiers who nailed them thereto. The coat, or outer garment of Jesus' wearing apparel, was seamless, and to tear it into four parts would spoil its value; therefore the soldiers agreed to cast lots for it, in fulfilment of the prophecy recorded in Ps. 22:18.

3. Nothing but intense, overpowering love led these three Marys, and probably a fourth woman, to witness the inhuman execution of Jesus and the two malefactors. Every sensibility of womanhood would recoil from such a spectacle. Only hardened men and unfeeling curiosity-seekers would feel at home in such an atmosphere. But love, tremendous love, drove these women to stand by their Lord in His last hours of agony, and mingle their tears of sympathy with His blood of atonement.

4. "Woman, behold thy son." While dying for a world, Jesus had a tender thought for His mother. She was probably a widow at this time and homeless. John was no doubt in good circumstances. But it is most likely that John's large wealth of love led Jesus to commit His mother to his care. A home where love reigns is a most delightful asylum for widows, orphans, and other victims of disaster.

5. "Behold thy mother." The mother of Jesus has become the mother, in a sweet, spiritual sense, of every believer in Christ Since Jesus is not ashamed to call us brethren we should feel highly honored to claim His mother as our mother too.

6. "I thirst." The loss of blood creates a most intense thirst, a thirst that nothing but cool, pure water can satisfy. The vinegar, mingled with gall, would stupefy and deaden the sensibilities, but could not quench the thirst. It is recorded in Matt. 27:34 that Jesus refused to drink the vinegar.

7. "It is finished." This is the sixth of the seven sayings of Jesus on the cross. The others are: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise," "Woman, behold thy son.....Behold thy mother," "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "I thirst," and "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." The death of Jesus marked the finish of the dispensation of law and sacrifice, the finish of a most triumphant ministry of enlightenment and blessing, and the finish of the most terrific ordeal of agony endured by any being—men, angels, or God.

8. On the day of His resurrection, Jesus made at least five appearances,—to Mary Magdalen alone, to the women as they went to tell the disciples of His resurrection, to Peter alone, to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus, and to the ten disciples assembled behind closed doors for fear of the Jews.

9. "Peace be unto you." The first message of the risen Christ to a lost but waiting world —It was the peace of freedom from sin, doubt, and worry. It was the peace of "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." And it was the peace of triumph over the world, the flesh, and the devil.

10. "Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord." It was the resurrection of blasted and buried hopes. It was the joy of a quick and happy reunion. And it was "the joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Practical Points.

1. Jesus left heaven that we might gain it, was born in a manger that we might live in mansions, died on the cross that we might reign in glory, rose from the dead that we might rise from the death of sin to the life of immortality, gave up His rainment that we might be clothed in the white robes of righteousness, and ascended upon high that we also might ascend to that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

2. The wealth of motherhood is the world's richest heritage apart from redemption; and redemption makes motherhood all the richer, sweeter, and more uplifting. And motherhood is God's best manifestation and illustration of His own love to our fallen race. "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." Isa. 49:15.

3. Faith in Jesus Christ introduces us into the brotherhood of saints, of whom Jesus Himself is the Elder Brother. The brotherhood of the race, the brotherhood of nations, and the various brotherhoods of industry pale into comparative insignificance beside this brotherhood of saved men and women. For Jesus said, "For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Matt. 12:50.

4. Jesus is thirsting still. He is thirsting for your hearts and mine, your faith and mine, your love and mine, your praise and mine, and your service and mine. He longs to come into our souls and sup with us, and we with Him. Let us not deny Him that joyful privilege.

5. The elevated life is the triumphant and happy life. The low grounds of selfishness and worldly compromise make life more or less sinful and miserable. The higher ground of the divine presence and fellowship is most attractive and satisfying. Let us strive to sit and walk, and live in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MARCH 28.

Review—The Gospel of John.

Golden Text: "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing, ye might have life through his name." John 20:31.

Lesson 1. teaches that Jesus Christ is the living Word, that from eternity He is God, that He was the Creator of the universe, that He is the Light of the world, and the life of believers, and that He came into the world, manifest in the flesh, in order that all who trust in Him might be "born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

Lesson 2. teaches that John and Andrew became disciples of Jesus upon the testimony of John the Baptist, that Andrew finds his brother Simon and brings him to Jesus who gives him the name of Peter, meaning a stone, that Jesus finds Philip and wins his heart and life, and that Philip finds and leads to Jesus Nathaniel, of whom Jesus said, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile."

Lesson 3. teaches that Nicodemus was a sincere seeker after truth, that, blinded by much formalism, he was unable to understand the deep truths of the kingdom, that the new birth marked the entrance into this kingdom, that this work of regeneration is wrought by the Holy Ghost, and that Jesus was lifted up upon the cross that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Lesson 4. teaches that Jesus Christ imparts the water of everlasting life, that He made bare to the woman of Sychar her life of sin, that she accepted Jesus as Messiah and Savior, that by her glad testmony many others believed and were saved, and that to these was granted the confident assurance that "this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world."

Lesson 5. teaches that the sympathy and anxiety of Jesus extend to the lowest of man's physical needs, that with five loaves and two fishes He fed more than five thousand, that the food left over was many times more than the original supply, and that He Himself is the Bread of Life, upon whom the soul must feed by faith in order to inherit everlasting life.

Lesson 6. teaches that affliction is not always the imposed penalty of sin, that suffering and sorrow are designed to contribute to God's glory, that the blind man found sight when he washed the clay from his eyes, that the blinded Pharisees denounced Jesus as a great sinner because He performed this miracle on the Sabbath day, that the restored man stoutly defended Jesus and this work of mercy, and that Jesus sought him out and led him to accept Him as Savior and Lord.

Lesson 7. teaches that Jesus is the Door of entrance into peace and everlasting life, that all who seek to enter any other way are thieves and robbers, that Jesus is the Good Shepherd who has laid down his life for the sheep, that He leads His sheep into pastures of eternal truth and to the fountain of living waters, and that He came into the world that His sheep "might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

Lesson 8. teaches that "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus," that His delay in coming to their call of distress was not the least detraction from this love, that it was a greater blessing to restore a life than to heal a body, that to stimulate the fadING faith of the bereaved sisters He announced "I am the resurrection and the life," that He called Lazarus by name from the spirit world, and that Lazarus came forth a strong well man to take up the task of life where he had left it off.

Lesson 9. teaches that insincere compliments are as odious as hatred, that in setting a trap for Jesus the enemies of Jesus set a bigger trap for themselves, that the accepted currency of a country sets forth the real sovereignty of that country, that every citizen is loyalty-bound to give moral, financial and martial support to his government, and that every rational being is enjoined to render the trust and love of his heart, the prayer and praise of his lips, and the obedience and service of his life to the King of kings and Lord of lords.

Lesson 10. teaches that the love of Jesus is an everlasting love, that He washed His disciples feet because they needed washing and there was no one else that would do it, that no service for mankind is too lowly to do in Jesus' name, that lowly and loving service lifts one into holy and enraptured fellowship with Jesus, and that the example of Jesus is a mighty and glorious incentive to upright conduct and large harvests in Christian endeavor.

Lesson 11. teaches that Jesus is a mighty Comforter as well as a precious Savior, that He has gone to prepare a eternal home for His followers, that He is the way, the truth and the life that lead to this home, that He will come again to gather to Himself all believers as His holy bride, that His earthly life and ministry was a complete revelation of the Father, and that another Comforter, the Spirit of truth, would come after the ascension.

Lesson 12. teaches that Jesus died for our sins according to the scriptures, that He died the just for the unjust, that the unjust might become holy as He is holy, that He rose again the third day that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in His name, and that there is power in His resurrection sufficient to raise every human being from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness.

PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

West Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—Owing to the extreme cold weather our Sunday school attendance last Sunday was much below what it had been for several weeks. There were 98 present.

We wish to correct an error in the offering for the First Sunday in this month which was for the Children's Home. It was $6.38 instead of $16.38 as published in the Herald last week. This reporter believes the error was made in the Herald office, a case of the linotype machine dropping an extra letter in the column making it ten dollars too much. We did not wish Bro. Lowderm'lk to think our Sunday school treasurer withheld the ten dollars from the offering, and we hope he will read this correction.

Our regular evening preaching service was not well attended last Sunday considering the snow and mud on the streets. Bro. Crutchfield delivered another one of a series of sermons on the Lord's Prayer. The text was Matt. 6:12 "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." He discussed the theme "Sin, a Debt."

We will have preaching services both morning and night next Sunday, which is the Third Sunday. Our night services begin at 7:30 instead of 7:30 as formerly, this change having been made since the days have become longer.

It is with observed an item in the North Carolina Column of "The Methodist Protestant," issue of March 10, which stated that the West Lexington church had laid the foundation for new Sunday school rooms. At that time the new rooms had been finished and the Sunday school using them. Brother "C. W. B." may tell the readers of the Methodist Protestant that the new rooms have been in use since Sunday, March 7th.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Randleman.—The writer missed all appointments last Sunday on account of ill. Have been confined to bed one week.

Mrs. Neese has the flu now also. We hope to report something better next time.

W. H. Neese.

Orange Charge.—The 2nd quarterly conference will meet at Union Grove Church Saturday before the 4th Sunday in March, 2:00 P. M.

A full attendance is desired. Candidates for delegate to the next annual conference to be named. Other important business.

Come! B. W. Williams.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—Rev. J. Elwood Carroll filled his appointment at Canaan the 2nd Sunday and as usual preached a good sermon. He gets better every time we hear him.

He had with him Bro. Garrett from the H. P. College who gave us a nice talk on the Christian Endeavor Society. Come again, Bro Garrett.

Our Sunday school is right good but not what it should be; we have not had a large attendance this winter the weather being rough. But I think as spring opens up our school will be better.

We have not missed having Sunday school this winter.

We are very glad to note that Bro. Fred Nance and family, some of our good members have moved back from Thomasville. Brother Nance was our Superintendent until he moved away and we are very glad indeed to have him back to help us carry on the Lord's work and also to help encourage our faithful superintendent, Bro. Gallimore.

There is right much sickness in our community. Mrs. N. C. Ridge has been confined to her bed for a week with the flu.

Miss Kate Nance who is teaching the Canaan school is at home with the flu. We ask the prayers of all Christian people that we may have a progressive and successful year.

Reporter.

Philathea Meeting.—On Wednesday evening, March 10th, the Mizpah Philathea Class held its regular meeting at church.

The meeting was called to order by the President, the roll called with a good attendance for the evening. After a short business session, the meeting adjourned to meet at the home of Miss Pauline Crowder on Saturday evening, April 10th, at which time the Philatheas will entertain the Baracas at a social.

Reporter.

North Davidson Charge.—Since our last report everything has been moving along about as well as we could expect.

All the churches have good live Sunday schools and good congregations at preaching.

We have had a good deal of sickness on the work; but they all seem to be getting better.

They say spring is just around the corner but it takes a long time to get here.

We have organized a Workers' Council at Shiloh. We hope it will be some help to our Sunday school. Will meet at the home of our Superintendent, H. A. Leanord, Monday night, 7:30.

We hope to work out some of the problems which come up in every church.

I must say just a word about our Christian Endeavor Society at Shiloh, we have a real working bunch of young folks, and they don't mind doing what you ask them to do.

They will go to Friendship next Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock to help organize a Christian Endeavor Society there.

The folks have been good to us, giving us good things to eat. We thank Bro. Jeff Berrier Mrs. Levi Evans, Bro. J. L. Evans, Bro. Luther Leanord, Bro. Ed Waitman, Bro. and Mrs Z. S. Welborn of Mt. Pleasant, and Bethesda folks for many gifts and favors.

We appreciate these nice gifts; they come in so nice when the pantry begins to get empty.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Ct.—I am glad to say that we are progressing some. Our pastor Bro. Koons, preached two very interesting sermons yesterday. At the morning service he used a chart to illustrate his points.

At the evening service his subject was "Let her drive."

Our Christian Endeavor Society is doing some good work but there is still room for improvement. We have no Junior society but Miss Sallie McCimon, the teacher of the Junior Sunday school class, is training the Juniors in a fine way.

Our second quarterly conference will be held at Fairview Church on the 20th of this month we are planning an Easter program to be held second Sunday night as our pastor will be with us at this time. Romaine Poole

Laurel Hill, Toluca Charge.—Mr. Morgan our pastor, filled his appointment Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. He preached us a good sermon as usual.

Our Sunday school attendance has not been very large for the past few Sundays, on account of several cases of flu in the community But as ground hog weather is past we are hoping that the weather will moderate and that the flu will die out, and that we will have a 100 percent present at Sunday school every Sunday. We are planning to give an Easter program. The children and parents seem to be taking great interest in it. We are also planning to have more and better singing, as the people are taking great interest in the singing as well as the Easter program

Rev. Vance Heavner, a young preacher from Newton, will preach to us next Sunday evening at two thirty. Don't fail to hear this wonderful sermon. Lois Willis, Reporter.

Henderson.—There has been so much sickness, our Sunday school and church attendance has fallen back, but we hope that before long everybody will be well and back in their old places again.

Rev. R. A. Hunter conducted the funeral service of Mr. Boril Brame at Harris' Chapel, Dabney, N. C., on March 10. Mr. Brame was a member of Henderson Church. We greatly sympathize with Mrs. Brame and the sons and daughters. Our hearts also go out in sympathy to Mrs. W. M. Martin's family in the loss of daughter and sister, Mrs. D S. Owen.

The Philathea class had a barbecue dinner last Wednesday, clearing $43.00 which they expect to use in furnishing their class room

The regular monthly business meeting of the church was held March 10. The treasurer reported the new furnace paid for.

The choir is giving us a special musical program each Sunday evening from 7:30 to 7:45. They expect to continue this for some time. Hope every one that can come will come and enjoy it.

On March 21, 7:30 P. M. in the church Miss Loula Loveland Shepherd will speak, in behalf of the National Reform Association.

We are going to have a Young People's Rally for this district in our church Monday March 22. Supper will be served in the basement by the Christian Endeavor Society to the speakers and leaders and officers of the church at 6 P. M. Then at 7:30 P. M. there will be a mass meeting for every body in the church Rev. A. G. Dixon, D. D., Rev. Mr. Sexsmith D. D., and Rev. Lawrence Little are all on the programme, so we are looking forward to a great time. We specially want all the young people to attend this meeting.

Second M. P. Church, Charlotte.—We were glad to have our pastor, Rev. D. A. Braswell, with us again Sunday. He delivered two inspiring sermons and received two new members into the church at the evening service. We are having great success in our cottage prayer meetings.

The Ladies' Aid have started a name quilt for the purpose of raising funds towards meeting the payments on our church lot. They are charging 25 cts. per name, but will accept any amount above this. We will appreciate the help of any one desiring to help us in this worthy cause. All contributions should be sent to the treasurer of the Ladies' Aid; Mrs. G. W. Stegall, of 1840 N. Pegram St., Charlotte, N. C.

Dear friends, we ask you to join your prayers with ours in the upbuilding of our church. We thank you. Reporter.

Weaverville Charge.—It has been some time since we reported but we have been very busy all the while. Has been lots of sickness, as many of our people have been sick and the roads have been bad so we have been handicapped to some extent.

But all of our Sunday schools have pulled through so far and we think we will be doing fine now soon as the weather opens up.

Last Sunday was a great day with us, we had special services in the Weaverville and Clarks Chapel churches, having with us a splendid male quartet for the morning service, which sang several selections; was enjoyed by all; we hope to have them with us again soon. The morning service was in the Weaverville church. Our people turned out splendidly for this service, the church was almost full.

The after service resulting in one profession of faith and three reconsecrations, the whole congregation redicating their lives to more active service for the master.

At three o'clock we were at Mt. Zion, having with us Rev. F. O. Briggs of Lynchburg, Va., he preached us a very helpful sermon there which was enjoyed by all.

Then at 7:45 we were at Clarks Chapel for the evening service where another good size congregation met us.

We feel as the weather opens up we will gain a lot in attendance, our people are very deeply interested in the work.

Our Christian Endeavor society at Clarks Chapel has held up fine under the extreme cold weather. Now as spring begins to open up we feel as if there was a good future to our C. E.

We are happy to state that Mrs. Guy Edwards who has been sick at her mother's since last November, is very much improved and will be at home in the next few days. We will gladly welcome Sister Edwards home; the church and community have greatly missed her while she was away.

May God bless the work and the workers this year. J. D. Cranford, Pastor.

Foust---Thompson.

On Wednesday afternoon, March 10, at his home in Burlington, the writer united in marriage Miss Eula Foust and Mr. Alfred F. Thompson. Only the necessary attendants were present to witness the ceremony. They are both loyal members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Mrs. Thompson, who is the daughter of the late Amick Foust, was reared in the southern part of Alamance county. She is a young lady possessing many sterling qualities, being popular with a large circle of friends.

Mr. Thompson is the son of Mr. J. Calvin Thompson of Burlington. He is a splendid young man, always standing for the right. They will make their home in Burlington, where Mr Thompson is engaged in business with his father. H. L. Isley.

LAWLESSNESS—ITS CAUSE AND CURE.

Disrespect for law is on the increase. Lawlessness has become a menace of large proportions. Its prevalence and defiance have become alarming. Disregard for and the outcry against the prohibition laws are but symptoms of an awful moral cancer upon the body politic. Present conditions should give pause and anxiety to all lovers of their fellowmen. A rude but effective awakening is due.

The cause dates back half a century when the decline in family government gathered momentum. Family government was the first order of government established by the Lawgiver, and the most indispensable. Concerning the father of the faithful this Lawgiver said: "For I know him, that he will command his children and household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." Gen. 18:19.

The invasion of democracy into the family circle has proven disastrous. The granting to children and immature young people the authority of self-government has served to turn loose a veritable Pandora box of a thousand evils. Little restraint nowadays is given the childhood of the race. The average child is allowed to choose his own associates, and to go and come at his own pleasure. Lawlessness in the home breeds lawlessness in the state and nation. The wise man said: "A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." And this lack of home government does more than this. It brings the nations of the earth to shame and dishonor.

The ordinary services of the Sunday school and the church have not noticeably checked this growing evil. Nor can we hope that these agencies alone can remedy this curse of society. They present advisory, not restrictive measures.

President Coolidge has declared that the government is unable to eradicate lawlessness. The trouble lies beneath the surface upon which civil government operates. It is the heart of the nation that is wofully affected. This internal cancer will yield only to an internal treatment.

God alone can save the nation by saving its citizenship. More Christianity is the need of the hour. So much of so-called Christianity is not worthy of the name. Such a large per cent of the members of the various churches are vain professors, formalists, or backsliders. A citizenship animated by the spirit of Christ will always be a law-abiding citizenship.

A wide-spread outpouring of the Holy Spirit will save the day and the nation. Another pentecostal movement of large proportions is most desirable. And it will surely come if the God-fearing men and women of this nation are willing to pay the price. "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." Are you willing to fast and pray till our nation is redeemed?—Word of Life.

THE WORLD'S INDEBTEDNESS TO THE SUPERNATURAL RELIGION.

Far-seeing men of spiritual vision have seen for the last quarter of a century that we are approaching a crisis in the moral and religious world. The issue is fast approaching and was brought out in the recent famous Dayton trial. That a split in the church is near at hand there can be no doubt. Hitherto great divisions have been restricted to some denomination. This is the reason we have different Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian bodies. But for the first time in the history of America the split is in all denominations of evangelical religion. The great Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist bodies have the line of cleavage drawn through them on the question of Fundamentalism and Modernism. As yet it is not so marked in the last named, but it is getting headway.

The preparation for this was the higher destructive criticism of the past quarter of a century. This weakened the faith of the people, especially the young, in the authority of the Word of God and thus prepared the way for the doctrine of evolution. The denial of the virgin birth and the scriptural account of the origin of man is really an attack against supernatural religion.

Only a widespread revival of religion can save the situation. Supernatural religion has made the church what it is. It brought religion to us, and nothing else can save the wicked world.

All that need be said in favor of supernatural religion is that it can be judged by its fruits. This is the only test of religion. "By their fruits ye shall know them," was spoken of religion by Jesus.

The world owes its existence today to spiritual religion. It was the religion of the fundamental doctrines—faith in the scriptures, the virgin birth, and experimental religion—that caused the martyrs to face the flames and, by their godly lives and triumphant deaths, to bring in the triumphs of the Cross and save the corrupt civilization of the tottering Roman Empire.

Had the world been dependent upon any of the heretical theories of the so-called Modernism of today, civilization would have perished from the earth just as did the nations that once peopled America and have disappeared, leaving few traces behind them. All who know history know that pure and undefiled religion saved the world in the days of the corrupt Roman Empire.

Those who know history know that this same religion saved England in its awful degeneracy in the days of Wesley. Modernism ad gone to seed and rank Unitarianism (virually the same thing as Modernism of today) redominated until society was tottering. It as then that the religion of the supernatural ved England.

All who know history know that it was the en on horseback that saved the Middle West om barbarism a century ago. They preached the supernatural religion. None of the ctrines of Modernism did it.

About once in a century there has to be a lt to get rid of the camp followers that rden Christianity, and it seems as if this what we are coming to now. Let us stand the religion of our fathers that has brought all that we have which is worth having.—lected.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Creation.

Text: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth:" Gen. 1:1.

We are living on a small planet surrounded by a vast universe. This universe did not come into existence of its self. It must have been planned, ordered, and made by an intelligent Being. For it bears many marks of a high type of intelligence. A creation involves a Creator. Self-creation is an absurdity. The universe has superhuman dimensions. Man could not have brought it about. Chance lacked the intelligence and ability to do it. There is only one reasonable explanation of the universe. It is given in the first verse of Holy Writ. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth."

In these inspired words we note the fact the method, and the purpose of creation.

Let us consider first

The Fact of Creation.

The fact is divine. God made the worlds. His hand laid the foundations of the earth. His hand stretched out the heavens as a curtain. Jesus Christ, the Jehovah of the Old Dispensation, was the actual Creator. Of Him John wrote, "All things were made by him and without him was not anything made that was made." And Paul gave also his inspired testimony: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto our fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spaken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

There is the fact of immense variety. There are various kinds and forms of matter. Plant life has assumed a million forms. Wild and domestic animals are a great host; and birds are quite as numerous. Fishes inhabit the waters in countless numbers. Insects and smaller organisms are as plentiful as the sand upon the seashore. "O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep."

The supreme fact of creation was man. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness!.....And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thus man was made in the image of God's spirituality, intelligence, holiness, and eternity. Man is but a parcel of specks upon one small planet, yet man takes up ninety nine hundredths of God's sympathetic attention. And millions have joined the Psalmist in surprise and wonder: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou are mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"

Let us next consider

The Method of Creation.

The principal method of bringing this vast universe into existence was the method of divine speech. "And God said, Let there be light; and there was light." And this statement, "And God said," occurs eight times in the Bible story of creation. The Psalmist also gives an illuminating expression of this method of creation: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.....For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast."

This method brought immediate results. God didn't have to wait billions of years to make the universe a reality, as the evolutionists claim. In six days of twenty four hours each the creation was completed. They were days divided into forenoons and afternoons. "And the evening and the morning were the first day." This same stateemnt is made of each of the six days.

Formation was also a method of creation. Out of created matter all larger portions of matter were formed; and likewise all vegetables, trees, birds, fishes, animals and man. And all the heavenly bodies were formed by the hand of God.

In the last place let us consider

The Purpose of Creation.

In the first place God designed that creation should be a revelation of Himself and a setting forth of His attributes of wisdom, power, and goodness. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork."

In Cor. 1:16 Paul states that God made the world for His glory: "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him."

And this world was made to be the home of man, the sphere of his probation and various activities, and the challenge to his thought and powers of development. Of the first man God had said, "Let him have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."

And lastly this world was created to become the realm of operating a most wonderful scheme of redemption. The fall of man was foreseen; and the plan of salvation was set forth to save the sinning race. A divine-human Savior was promised, who came into the world at the fulness of time. He explained the plan during a three years' ministry. He died on the cross and made an all-sufficient atonement for the sins of mankind. His ascension ushered in the gospel age in which we now live. The offer of free and full salvation is being presented to all the world. "Whosoever will let him take the water of life freely." It is a choice between life and death. It is the gospel of power and endless blessing. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

EVOLUTION.

I hope the readers of this paper will pardon this caption. I know very little of evolution and care little for what I do know about it. My salvation is in no more danger from it than it is from fundamentalism; neither of which is near enough the truth to hurt or scare me. I feel that the Scopes trial was a farce almost equal to the participants in it. I have about as much regard for Bryan as for Darrow. The former was a good politican and the latter a good lawyer and they would both have done well in their vocations but I think it is a shame for our church to advertise them as exponents and opponents of our religion. I cannot see what difference it can make, as to what man was, when he was not. I believe the Bible story of creation I believe the 27th verse of the first chapter of Genesis: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him male and female created he them."

I also believe the seventh verse of the second chapter of Genesis: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." I believe the twentieth verse of the same chapter: "And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field; but for Adam there was not found a help meet for him." I believe that he made Eve out of one of Adam's ribs as verses 21 and 22 declare I believe the 22nd verse of the third chapter of Genesis: "And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil" and the following verses.

I believe the 1st and 2nd verses of the sixth chapter of Genesis: "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the Earth, and daughters were born with them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose."

I believe the promise and prophecy of Jacob when he was blessing his children and especially that of Jacob in the 49th chapter of Gensis from the 8th to the 17th verse inclusive.

I believe this prophecy and promise was fulfilled in Jesus, the Divine man, the human God—God manifest in the flesh.

I believe that the first chapter of Matthew purports to give the lineage of Jesus, the Christ; and I believe it does what it purports to do. I also believe the third chapter of Luke purports to give the generalogy of that same Jesus and I believe it does it.

(I see no reason in the Bible itself, to suppose that Luke undertakes to trace Mary's line, as I have seen in print and heard from the pulpit.)

I believe the first chapter of John with all its magnificent mysteries and thrilling promises.

I believe the thirteenth verse of the 1st chapter of the Acts when it gives the names of eleven of the apostles: "Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Phillip, and Thomas Bartholomew and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James." I believe verses 24, 25 and 26 of the same chapter: "And they prayed, and said, Now, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen, That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven. apostles."

I believe all the words of Jesus including Mark 7-7 to 9 inclusive: "Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition men, as washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do. And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition."

Above all I believe in Jesus and hope I may be able to show my faith by my works; or else I shall fare as a trembling devil who only believes. I feel sure that man's salvation is just as sure with a round world as with a flat one. We are just as safe with the earth going round the sun as we would be with the sun going around the earth. When evolutionists have done their best or worst men can still be saved by turning away from their sins and by coming unto Jesus. We don't have to prove there is a God. Men know that: and besides it is God's business to show that; and, John 1-9, He "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Some fellow may not want a God—may say in his heart no God; but he is a fool. Psa. 14:1. We need not be troubled: "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

EASTER.

It is gratifying to note the increased interest taken annually by the Methodist Protestant Church in Passion Week and the services on Easter Sunday. It is safe to say that the interest this coming season will exceed that of all others in our denominational history. More churches will observe Passion Week followed on Easter Sunday with appropriate sermons and music than ever before culminating in an effort to induce those who have not confessed Christ to do so and unite with the church.

It is also an appropriate season for making offerings for the work of the Kingdom. Some denominations very appropriately lay great stress on this. The Mehtodist Protestant church, through the General Conference, has, for a number of years, named this period of the year when the offerings are devoted to Home Missions. We have published an Easter Program of music, and recitations and in addition have prepared envelopes for a sacrificial offering. These should be distributed on Palm Sunday to both adults and children and used through the entire week. The envelopes are arranged for every day that week beginning on Monday and ending Easter Sunday when they are to be taken to the church. They should represent some self-denial or sacrifice. Let the offering mean something in this respect. Teach the children to save and give. It will prove a profitable lesson. In what more appropriate way can we show our love to our crucified but risen Savior.

We believe that there is a widespread interest in this day and offering and we are looking forward with great confidence to the results. Let all who love their Lord and church have some part in this Easter service and offering.

NORTH CAROLINA BRANCHES MEETS IN COMMUNNITY CHURCH, THOMASVILLE.

Woman's Board of Home Will Meet In North Carolina.

Two events, to which the women of the Methodist Protestant church are looking forward, are the meetings of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies in North Carolina at Community Church in Thomasville April 20-23 inclusive, and the Woman's Board of Home Missions at the High Point College, May 12. It is earnestly urged that every Society send delegates and that every church send representatives to the Branch meetings in Thomasville. The ladies of Thomasville kindly invite all women who are interested in Missions to attend, and say that they will entertain all who will come. Mrs. J. W. Millikan, corresponding secretary of the Home Society, has sent out report blanks which should be filled in and returned to her. Names of those who expect to attend the meeting should be sent to either Mrs. J. W. Boyles or Mrs. A. H. Ragan, Thomasville.

Concerning the meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions. It will be held in High Point College, the delegates being entertained there. Mrs. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro the president, will preside. The meeting of this representative body of women will give the people of North Carolina an opportunity to learn of the great work which the Woman's Home Missionary Society is doing. Announcements will be made from time to time and it is hoped that many of the North Carolina women will attend the sessions.

Mrs. Wm. C. Hammer, Pres. W. H. M. S.

—Flat Rock and Tabernacle churches were represented in the Young People's Rally at Grace church last night in addition to Greensboro churches. Addresses were made by Dr. Sexsmith and Dr. Dixon. Dr. Sexsmith outlines a program of religious education for the local church. It involves provision for religious instruction on week days as well as in the Sunday school. Vacation Bible schools for children are among the most universally practicable. In six weeks, said Dr. Sexsmith, more Bible may be taught than in a whole year in Sunday schools.

Detroit News.—All the constitution guarantees is the pursuit of happiness. You have to catch up with it yourself.

A COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MATTER.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(The article with the above title, which follows, we wish to earnestly commend to every reader of the Herald, as being so sane, wise, and common-sense, it is difficult to see how any wise, just, impartial person can objest to it.—J. F. Dosier.)

There is no little discussion of the passage of enactments by States and cities to prohibit the teaching in schools, supported by public funds, of any theory that man is descended from lower animals.

Some unreasonable people insist that such measures are in opposition to science, and that they limit freedom of thought and restrain research.

A little reflection will be sufficient to show that this position is not well taken. Legislation of this kind does not assume to declare that any theory of evolution is true or false It does no more than follow well-established precedents that have been enacted on other subjects.

For example, the teaching of the Bible in the public schools has been prohibited by both States and cities; but certainly such regulations did not imply that the Bible was or was not a divine revelation of truth. They have been adopted because the differences in the belief of citizens, whose children attended the public schools, demanded such exclusion of the Bible.

There is far greater diversity of opinion among good citizens concerning the descent of man from any lower animals. Are theories of evolution entitled to consideration not accorded to the Holy Scriptures?

By some systems of common schools, instruction is confined to the elementary branches of an English education. Some thoughtful men have held, that this is as far as education by civil government should go. They believe that the taxing power should not be used to provide higher education for the comparatively small number of young men and women who are able to avail themselves of the educational opportunities offered in high schools, colleges and universities, and for such a belief they are able to offer good reasons.

But in wishing to confine education by taxation to the elementary branches of an English education, these men do not mean to assert that instruction on subjects included in higher branches should be prohibited because of its falsity or erroneousness. Their view rests on considerations of justice and the proper limitations of the educational functions and duties of civil government. Because they would confine mathematical studies in the common schools to arithmetic they do not mean to question the value of trigonometry or cast doubt upon the processes of calculus.

For the exclusion of the teaching of any theory of evolution in the common schools there is far more controlling reason. For one thing, it may be urged that if any theory of evolution were conclusively established, most teachers are not qualified to teach it and most pupils are not prepared to receive such instruction. But every informed man knows that the whole subject of evolution is in an undetermined state. Very many of the ablest scientists reject it.

For example, the distinguished head of the School of Physics in the University of Cincinnati has published recently an able treatise in which he opposes the evolutionary hypothesis.

And be it remembered that it is no more than a hypothesis. Is there not settled truth enough to engage the teachers in the public schools without their adventuring in the realm of hypothetical speculations?

But, as has been said, most teachers in the state-supported schools are not qualified to teach evolution, even if it were firmly and finally established as true.

Herein is a reason for excluding the exposition of the Holy Scriptures from the public schools. For one, I believe unwaveringly in the inspiration of the Bible; but had I children in the public schools, I would not be willing for the average teacher, or for some who account themselves above the average to expound that sacred book to my offspring. What sort of interpretation would an evolutionist put upon the first three chapters of Genesis? What would a Unitarian or rationalistic teacher tell classes studying the accounts of the birth of our Lord at Bethlehem as given by St. Matthew and St. Luke? What would a materialist teach with reference to the records of our Lord's resurrection found in all the Gospels.

I steadfastly believe the Bible, but for the reasons indicated, I do not wish it taught in the public schools. Neither am I willing for any teaching in the public schools which discredits the Bible.

Stripped of all pretexts and pretences, the reason many men oppose regulations which exclude the teaching of evolution in tax-supported schools is that they desire the civil government to put its stamp of approval on the evolutionary hypothesis.

Some argue that if it is excluded from the schools the civil government will be passing upon its truth or falsity, and declaring it false. If such reasoning is sound, the inclusion of the matter in the studies of the schools declares it true and established science. To say nothing more such civic approval of the hypothesis of evolution is quite premature.

Legislatures, city councils and school boards do not exceed their authority nor do more than their duty when they forbid the teaching in tax-supported schools of the theory that man is descended from lower animals

Such theory has never been established as true and probably never will be. But if it were clearly demonstrated it has no place in the common schools, where it would be expounded by teachers unprepared for such work and received by children and youth not prepared to receive it.

Moreover, if citizens are taxed to have instruction imparted in public schools, their representatives have some rights and duties with reference to saying what shall be taught in the schools which they are taxed to support.

It would hardly be contended that in the name of "freedom of thought" and "liberty of research" the Koran of the Mohammedans or the Book of Mormon should be studied in our tax-supported educational institutions.

No more should a materialistc doctrine of the origin of man be taght in them. This is the conclusion of common sense which can not be set aside by perfervid declamations about "liberty of research" and "freedom of thought."

No freedom of thought nor right of conscience is involved when the state says what sort of education may be maintained under its authority and supported by its funds. No efforts of research are prohibited or restrained when the civil government determines the subjects that are to be included in the courses of study prescribed for its schools.

Let any man hold such beliefs as he may consider well-founded, and let him prosecute his researches in whatever direction he may please, and none will be found to persecute him or make him afraid; but let him not whine if the state declines to pay him to propagate his views, especially to large and respectable bodies of taxpayers.

If he has the truth, he need not fear that it will perish, if he utters it calmly and confidently.

The effort of some advocates of theories of evolution to play the martyr act, and range themselves with Galileo and Bruno, is laughable. Nobody desires them to renounce their views or go to the stake. All that any of their opponents have proposed is that their wares be not purchased for exhibition and use in tax-supported schools. All other markets are open to them if they can find purchasers for their notions.

They will do well to consider, however, that in so far as their materialistic theory has obtained currency it has promoted fatalism, cast doubt upon human freedom, engendered philosophic pessimism, and lowered the dignity of human nature. It has tended to sadden and cheapen mankind.

In "Le Devoir Present" Paul Desjardine says, "Never I believe have men been more universally sad than in the present time," and this universal sadness he explains by saying, "Our misery lies in feeling that we are less men than we were sixty years ago."

Can any theory be true which degrades, depresses and disheartens men? Can any teaching be wholesome that leads us to believe that man is only a little higher than apes instead of inspiring us to think that he is only a little lower than the angels? Is it well to impart such instruction to the immature minds of children and youth?

Hand-writing Prize.—We will give a small prize to the boy or girl under twelve years of age that writes the best copy of John 3rd chapter and 16th verse and sends it to the M. P. Herald office before April 10th.

E CHURCH PAPER AND CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP."

By Bishop Francis J. McConnell.

ocial students have of late been making of what they call 'revolution by con-' These students insist that the only ng change in sociai institutions comes t through the free assent and consent of pinion of the groups concerned. Of no os is this more true than of religious de-nations. It is rather remarkable to note completely the progress of any religious p is dependent upon the good-will and eration of the elements of the group it-Outside of Roman Catholic circles it is y true that the nearest approach to free eration among any human groups is to ound in religious organizations. This is sarily so. We have long since passed from any form of compulsory attend-upon religious services. We cannot com-eople to pay for the support of churches -called community enterprise can indeed given locality bring the pressure of pub-pinion to bear upon reluctant contribu and bring them into line. A political has methods by which hesitant voters at last be got to the polls. In churches ver, we have to rely upon the voluntary -will of the members. If a listener does ike the preacher, or a worker in the or-zation does not approve of the plans of organization, all he has to do is to go where or to stay at home. No threat of ent hereafter, no social compulsions im ately at hand, are likely to have the test effect.

Persuasion Rather Than Compulsion.

This is at least part of the glory of pres-lay religious effort. We cannot have a inely religious atmosphere unless the hipers come out of free desire. After ma-ears of preaching in the few institutions he country where attendance upon reli s services is obligatory—places like pris-lunatic asylums, and some of the schools avow most earnestly that I would much er preach to a group of ten hearers pres-simply because they want to hear, than t hundred persons who are sitting befor because they are required to attend the ce. The true method of religious prog-has to be that of persuasion.

There is absolutely no way of compelling ious progress. No matter how autocrat y organized a denomination may be so fa-he control of its ministers is concerned e is no reaching the laity at the present except by the persuasion that wins thei consent. After we have made all possible vance for the laymen who attend church of habit, or out of what little expectation may have that somehow church attend will aid their secular advance, we must the perfectly obvious proposition that vast majority of church attendants come hurch out of their own willing desire. This puts upon all those who are seeking ead the church ahead, along either the practical or the more spiritual paths, y responsibility for the mastery of the of sincere persuasion. The preacher aims to secure consent and assent and cooperation The same aim must be that of him who ap peals to the church membership through the printed page. It is the task of the church press so to state religious ideas and ideals and pro grams as to win the consent of the church to the forward steps that must always be take if the truth is to keep alive.

Expert Mastery of Religious Ideas.

"May I say, first of all, that the leadership of the press in shaping religious opinion must be that of expert mastery of religious ideas and of skill in so stating those ideas as to make them effective forces in the thinking of the man who has possibly only an hour o two a week for reading a religious journal We expect of all newspapers that they will give us facts, though we are often grievously disappointed in that expectation. It is the task of the Christian paper to tell the people the facts as to what is going on in the religious world, and so to interpret these facts as to make clear their essential significance

"I have been in the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church for nearly thirty-two years. In that period I have seen a notable change of attitude on the part of Methodism toward many phases of scientific teaching and of scientific method. I have seen the church become measurably adjusted to the doctrine of evolution (using the term in its general sense as a method of God's plan in creation), to the scientific study of the Scriptures, to the utilization of psychological principles in spiritual training, to the use of scientific formulas in the Christian solution of social questions. We can sometimes tell how far an army has moved ahead by noting the distance the rear-guard has advanced Many things that extremely conservative teachers are openly saying today would have seemed rank heresy when I was first received into the Methodist ministry.

"Now, one of the most powerful forces in bringing about this change of attitude in our denomination has been the journal in whose interests we are met here tonight. Some of the best popular statements of the religious significance of the evolutionary position that I have ever seen have been in the columns of Zion's Herald. So with Bibilical criticism with religious psychology, with the social applications of the gospel truth. I do not mean that the policy of the paper has always been consistent. The late Dr. Charles Parkhurst could not be looked upon as uniformly consistent in his conduct of religious debates, but he was a great religious editor, nevertheless in his willingness to seek out and give free rein to the men who could put before the readers of his paper intelligible statements of the newer phases of truth. I have heard him say repeatedly that he sought for men whose statements would clear the air. Sometimes the clearing of the air involved the crashing of a series of thunder-storms, and back of the thunder-storms there was usually the flash of actual lightning.

"I do not think it would be easy to overestimate the importance of the popularization of religious truth in religious journals. The American people have a regard amounting almost to reverence for the highly trained specialist. It has been said that one test of a democracy is the degree of its willingness to abide by the authority of the expert. The American public certainly has respect for experts—but there is danger of overdoing this respect. Almost any man of fair intellectual ability can, by circumscribing his sphere of study, become proficient in that sphere This specialized ability, however, does not seem to me to be of any loftier order than that required by him who is to assemble the results of research, adjust these findings into some sort of consistency with one another and then put them into language which the ordinary reader, after at least moderate mental effort, can comprehend.

"Twenty-five years ago we used to speak almost with a sneer, of 'popularizers' of science or philosophy or theology. We can so use the word 'popularizer' as to make it anything but a term of reproach. No finer service can be rendered the phblic than so to marshal the discoveries of experts as to bring them within reach of the common thinking of the time. It required at least two hundred and fifty years for the Copernican theory to become part of the intellectual furnishings of the ordinary man—and that because there were no students who felt called upon to popularize the theory. Of course, popularization would have been difficult without cheap printing, but the scholarly ideal did not call for popularization. It is a matter for congratulation that at the present day men of high scholastic attainment are devoting themselves to phrasings of the profounder truths in which intelligibility by the ordinary mind is one of the chief aims.

"Our country just now is passing through a flurry over the so-called fundamentalist-modernist debate. Part of the difficulty is due to the fact that there has been until recently so little of this attempt to make clear to the laymen the exact situation in the field of scholarly religious study. When I was a youngster I was rebuked by an older minister for attempting to explain to my congregation some of the modern methods used in interpretation of the Scriptures. 'Simply state results,' said my friend. 'These things do not concern the layman. In a true sense they are none of his affair.' Now, my friend did not mean to disparage the intelligence of the Methodists. He meant simply that the laymen are too busy to trouble themselves about themes to which the student might well give himself in the quiet of his library. What however, has been the outcome of advice such as this—given, no doubt, to scores of young ministers? Manifestly, that large numbers of laymen have come to think that there is an irreconcilable conflict between scientific knowledge and Christian belief.

The Organ Of A Constituency.

"A second function of the religious press is that which we have in the back of our minds when we say that a paper is the organ' of such-and-such a constituency. In the secular realm today newspapers are all too often merely the mouthpieces of financial powers

In such case the newspaper may be an organ in an altogether unworthy way—giving forth just the sound that the controllers of the paper conceive to be best for their selfish material interests. There is a sense, however, in which a paper ought to strive to be the organ of a constituency. It should consider itself as commissioned to seize and publish the best that is stirring in the thought of that constituency.

"There is a vast deal of inarticulate wisdom abroad in any democracy which does not always find expression. Direct democratic utterance, such as that which can be expressed in a vote, ordinarily has to be expressed in one of two monosyllables. The people can say directly only yes or no. Another type of utterance, however, may be just as truly democratic—the utterance, namely, of a leader who senses what is moving in the soul of a group, and gives that thought an expression which reenforces in the minds of many followers the sentiment of those followers themselves, by bringing the sentiment of the inarticulate. In the old days of Horace Greely and Samuel Bowles and E. L. Godkin, many a newspaper reader would frankly say that he did not know his own thought on a given question until he had read The New York Tribune or The Springfield Republican, or The Nation. This did not imply that the reader necessarily took his convictions from the editor. It did mean that the editor inevitably expressed on theme after theme the cloudy unformulated notions of a worthy, though limited, group. What the reader meant was that he would very likely find in his favorite journal an expression of opinion which he would approve the instant he read it, but which he could not have framed for himself.

"Editorship of this kind is not to be dismissed by quoting the vulgar aphorism 'Give the people what they want, or what they think they want.' Journalism that follows this cynical advice runs straight to demagogism. Suppose, however, we make the advice read that we are to give the people what their better religious interests crave. There can hardly be any criticism of the attempt to meet such needs.

"I think that we ought to leave large place to that type of leadership in a religious democracy which thus gathers up what is loosely or casually stirring in the sentiment of a time, and gives it expression. In our school days we used to excuse a poor recitation by the plea; 'I know it, but I can't say it.' The teacher would ordinarily reply: 'If you can't say it you don't know it.' Probably in such a verbal interchange the pupil and the teacher were both right—and both wrong. It is possible to hold conceptions which we cannot express; and yet it is not possible to hold those conceptions with any final grasp until we can express them. It ought to be part of the task of the religious press to mold into cogent speech ideas and aspirations which most of us never could express ourselves, but which we recognize as our own the moment we see them. William James used to speak of the thinkers who have the power to 'pull triggers' in our consciousness. That is to say, the consciousness may be loaded with dynamic ideas which never will be discharged with effectiveness until that one man comes along who by a single turn of expression strikes off the spark that fires the powder.

"In every issue of every religious paper there ought to be distinct and definite attempt so to phrase some aspect of religious truth that the phrasings will voice more than the opinion of the writer alone. If an individual is entitled to utter his thought, not merely for the sake of communicating his ideas to some one else, but also for the sake of the self-realization, or the self-gratification, which comes from such expression, so also groups are entitled to some such self-realization. Oftentimes we remind ourselves after our utterances that what we have said may not be of much value to the man to whom we have spoken, but the 'say it' has been of immense relief to ourselves.

"I am going to qualify all this in a moment by pointing out the duty of the religious journalists to say many things which do not bring comfort to his readers, but I do wish to make it clear that the religious press is not discharging its full obligation until it gives a good degree of attention to the development of its constituency by uttering for that constituency truth which as profoundly gratifies the religious craving as food gratifies the bodily craving. Any religious utterance must aim at supplying religous food. The proof of the pudding has been, from immemorial times, in the eating thereof. The cook may be the best judge as to how to prepare food from the point of view of certain professional standards, but the cook is not the final authority on how the pudding tastes. The reader of a religious journal is the authority as to how the spiritual food tastes.

The Prophetic Quality Needed.

"I now turn to what is perhaps the most important consideration which I can bring to you this evening—the need of a degree of the prophetic quality in religious utterance. By 'prophetic' I mean the exaltation of the Christian ideals as over against the actual facts of particular times.—Zion's Herald.

JEWISH SLAUGHTERING.

Rabbi Alex Lyons of Brooklyn, relative to the use of wine for sacramental purposes now that prohibition is in effect, says he is "heartily in favor of the abolition of wine in all religious ceremonies so long as we remain subject to the law of prohibition." He continues, and here are significant words "Any religious ceremony is only a means to an end and can, by proper authority, be abolished or supplemented." Very justly The Animal's Friend says with reference to this statement:

This matter concerns us here only because it is a parallel case to the Jewish slaughter in our country. This, as everyone admits, is a disgusting and cruel method and outrages the principles of our humane law. It is permitted only because it is included in Jewish ritual. As Rabbi Lyons says, "any religious ceremony is only a means to an end," and if it outrages the feelings of the country we certainly have no right for the sake of the cruelly ill-used animals to allow it for the sake of an ancient barbaric ritual of a portion of the population.—Our Dumb Animals.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Dear Co-worker:

The Missionary year is drawing to a close and I am writing to extend my good wishes before the branch meeting, which will be held in Community Church in Thomasville April 21st and 22nd.

Considering that this has been a hard year for the rural people of North Carolina the reports from the various auxiliaries have been most satisfactory. Several new societies have been organized and there is more real missionary enthusiasm than I have ever seen in North Carolina. The usual amount of money has gone into the Children's Home but contributions to Bethel Home, foreign children in Pittsburgh and Ohio Valley and especially that for the mountain children for the Mission School at Pine Ridge, Ky., have been short. The latter has been appallingly short. If you can do anything during this month to help out on our Pine Ridge apportionment it will be wonderfully beneficial.

Be sure to elect your officers as early as possible and give the names of the new officers to the corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. M. Milikan, of Greensboro, I woull also appreciate it if you would give me the name of your new president. If you have not had the district meeting please take this matter up with your district chairman immediately. The district meetings are especially beneficial in that your common problems may be discussed. By virtue of their office, your president, corresponding secretary and two elected constitute your delegates to the branch meeting. It is well also to elect four alternates in case any of the elected delegates should drop out. The names of your delegates should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Boyles, Thomasville, unless the name of another person appears in the Church Herald. An unusually interesting program is being arranged for the Branch meeting and I hope to see you and other memoers of your society there.

With sincere wishes for yourself and your society. Very truly yours,

Mrs. Wm. C. Hammer.
Pres. Woman's Home Missionary Society.

REDEMPTION.

"All our vital and fundamental laws are religious at root, religion being the foundation of essential duties. If you have people legislating without any religious foundation you will get the sort of thing we have had from 1914 to 1920. When irreligious men control affairs the danger of war is greatly increased, especially now that the implements of war are so cheap....The only remedy for war is conscience, and you won't have conscience until you have religion carefully taught and inculcated."—George Bernard Shaw.

—We would call attention to the advertisement of an elderly lady wanted to superintend a truck farm. This is a good opportunity.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

On Thursday, March 11th, we left Greensboro in the worst snow storm of the season to meet appointments in the eastern part of the state. So heavy was the snow fall that it took us nearly five hours to drive from Greensboro to Raleigh.

We spent Thursday night in Whitakers with Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, and started the next morning for Creswell. Saturday and Sunday were spent with Rev. R. S. Hethcox and his people on Creswell. Saturday brought us another heavy snow storm, so there was not much to do but spend the day in the parsonage with the pastor and his delightful family. The people on Creswell charge are delighted with their pastor. He is beginning his eighth year with them, and they claim that he is the best preacher in those parts. His young people dearly love him and constantly look to him for counsel and advice.

Monday, March 15th, found us slipping over the slippery roads trying to make our way to the Spring Church charge for a meeting on Tuesday. From Enfield Rev. R. C. Stubbins accompanied us and we reached Pleasant Hill in time for dinner with Mr. and Mrs H. E. Vasser. During the afternoon and evening we held a group meeting at Spring church.

Rev. A. D. Shelton, the pastor, is making a splendid impression on the people and is getting a good start. The people are well pleased with him.

The next day found us on our way to Greenville Charge for a group meeting with Rev. H. L. Powell and his people. Another snow storm had spread its blanket of white over the earth, but we met a goodly number of people and had a good meeting.

The work on Greenville is going well considering the bad weather and the bad roads.

The people of this charge are still saying that they have the best preacher in the conference.

At night Mrs. Dixon and I both had the privilege of speaking to the "Community Betterment League" in the Triplet school building.

Thursday we headed back to Littleton Charge, where we met a good congregation at Corinth Church, for another group meeting. Here we had one of the best meetings of the week. Bro. O'Briant is still popular with his people though he has been with them for a long time. He and his good wife are delightfully situated in a good home of their own near Rosemary.

Friday morning found us headed toward Bethesda Church for the group meeting on Halifax Charge. Here we found Pastor Spence and his wife and one of the boys in bed with flu, with a trained nurse in the home to care for them. Many others in the community were also sick, so the attendance was small. We had a good meeting which we trust will mean much for the charge.

In these group meetings Mrs. Dixon discussed the S. S. work, Bro. Stubbins discussed the rural church work in its various phases and I talked about the college, the Children's Home, and our church finances. The people seemed pleased with the meetings, and I trust much good will result.

Saturday, March 20th, we held the second quarterly conference in Whitakers. This is one of our charges which always pays every cent of every assessment, and they are well up to date with their finances.

On Sunday morning I had the privilege of preaching to a very attentive audience in Whitakers. It is always a pleasure to visit Whitakers because of the associations here in my early ministry.

Sunday afternoon found us in Enfield for the first of a series of rallies in the young people's work. Dr. E. A. Sexsmith and Rev. Lawrence Little are to be our traveling companions, and associates in the work for this series of meetings for all of this week. If all the meetings are as well attended as the one in Enfield it will mean much in Kingdom service.

The A. C. B. and Church Extension.

The canvass for Church Extension money, as per conference order, has been made. We have no way of knowing whether or not the money collected has all been sent in to Mr V. W. Idol.

If there is money in the hands of any pastors or Church treasurers, please see that it is sent at once to Mr. V. W. Idol, High Point. N. C. The Board of Church Extension must Board in its work by sending in all money in hand for A. C. B.

Appointments.

My appointments for this week will run as per Herald of last week. Next Sunday will be spent with Dr. E. A. Sexsmith in Charlotte for the Sunday school and preaching hours.

Then at night we will close this campaign at the First Church, High Point.

Sat., April 3d, quarterly conference, South Davidson.

Sun., April 4th, A. M. South Davidson.

Sun., April 4th, P. M. Community Church Thomasville

Sat., April 10th, quarterly conference, Fairview.

Sun., April 11th, A. M. Fairview.

Faithfully yours, A. G. Dixon.

Rev. Geo. E. Hunt.

Just as I was leaving home for a two weeks engagement throughout the conference news came to me of the passing of Rev. Geo. E. Hunt, one of our oldest ministers.

I was glad to learn that Rev. J. H. Moton and Rev. W. F. Ashburn could attend the funeral. Sorry I could not be present.

After consultation with Mrs. Hunt, an obituary committee will be officially appointed.

We sympathize with the family in this bereavement. May the dear Father bless and direct them.

In His service, A. G. Dixon.

Obituary Committee for Dr. C. L. Whitaker.

At the request of Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, I am hereby appointing the following as the Obituary Committee for Rev. C. L. Whitaker D. D.

The first named will please act as chairman of the committee, and the others will please send him their notes concerning the life and works of Dr. Whitaker.

Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., chairman; Rev. J. R. Hutton, Rev. J. F. Dosier, Mr. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., Mr. J. M. Milikan, Mrs. W. C. Hammer.

Thank you for this service. A. G. Dixon.

Asheboro.—The following is a report of the outstanding events of the last two weeks:

One of the most enjoyable of the special services of the year was the Song Service of Sunday evening, the 14th. Several selections were given by the choir, the "Gyspy Boy" and "A Wayworn Traveler" were well rendered solos, and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" was given by the male quartet. Then, the congregation joined in singing several old songs as "Old Ship of Zion," "When I can Read My Title Clear" and others which were especially enjoyed by the older people.

A Father and Son banquet was held in the church on Tuesday evening, the 16th. Rev. L. W. Gerringer and Rev. L. C. Little were the speakers on this occasion. Mr. Gerringer stressed the factthat a man'sgreatest business is the rearing of his sons. Mr. Little advocatmore comradeship between father and son.

A Young People's Rally will be held in the church Thursday evening, the 25th, with Dr. A. E. Sexsmith, Rev. L. C. Little and Dr. A. G. Dixon as speakers. We are hoping for a real rally of the young people.

A series of cottage prayer meetings will be held next week preparatory to the revival which will begin Easter Sunday. Rev. R. A. Hunter will assist the pastor in the preaching.

Fallston.—Mr. P. A. Wright passed away Sunday morning, March 21. It has only been three weeks and two days since his wife died.

The funeral will take place Tuesday at eleven o'clock, after which his body will be laid to rest in Friendship cemetery at Fallston.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Leaving our ship by small boats we were soon put into cars at Haifa; from there we made the trip in a little while through Nazareth, Cana of Galilee, and took lunch in Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee. Had the good fortune to have a meal of fish caught from this famous "Fifth Gospel" as some one has termed it. One of the most inspiring sights was this beautiful body of water, for there were no churches built out over it to extract coin from the traveler.

This is one of the things that try the faith and the patience of the tourists in Palestine. In deed it is to my mind one reason Christianity has made such slow progress in this interesting country—too much contention.

After a hurried lunch we looked over this ancient city of Herod for a little while and then drove to the ruins of Bethsaida and Capernaum. Nothing there for the woe pronounced by our Savior is complete, for these are cities in ruins. The Horns of Hattin or the Mount of Beatitudes come into view as you travel here. Here also are to be seen the Plains of Ahma where the Crusaders were defeated disastrously by Saladin at the Battle of Hattin, 1187 A. D. Cana of Galilee now called Kefr Kenna is a crude looking village where Jesus showed his interest in the social side of life in his time as well as all ttme by attending the marriage, giving sanction to the home life and also performing his first miracle.

One night in Nazareth we spent in Hotel Galilee. I was glad of this privilege, for the two names, Nazareth and Galilee are sacred to every Christian.

Next morning we spent some time sight seeing, going through the usual boring experience of having pointed out to us the exact places at which certain things took place. This was done by the priests, of course.

The most interesting thing here to me wa to hear the boys of the Near East Relief Station sing "America" in their own language, and to buy from them a gavel made in the carpenter shop of Nazareth.

Near here also is the village where the prophet Jonah was born.

Luncheon or dinner was taken that day in the ancient city of Shechem, or Nablous as it is now called; it is one thousand feet below Jerusalem. This is one of the ancient cities of refuge. Here is also the home of the ancient Samaritan sect numbering about one hundred and seventy. This is the only home of this remnant who claim to have the original or only Penlateuch, claiming to be the only true followers of Moses and the Prophets. We went to their synogague, but as it was the hour of prayer we could not get in.

They were all praying at the same time and the confusion reminded me of an experience I once had in South Carolina with the unknown tongue sect, though I do not wish to compare these Samaritans with this modern cult, only the confusion of sounds.

Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal on either side traditional sites prescribed by Moses and carried out by Joshua as the place of cursing.

Jacob's well was the next point of interest. Of course this is autheutic and here we were permitted to drink of the deep drawn water and to purchase a small bottle full with an image of Christ and the Samaritan woman blown in the sides of the bottle. The depth of this well is eighty feet, the diameter nine feet. All agree on this traditional spot which is an unusual thing in this land of conflicting religions.

It was near here that the children of Israel first camped on their arrival at Shechem.

While in this section Mount Hermon, cover ed with snow far to the north came into view.

Shiloh was also pointed out where the Ark of the Covenant once rested. We also saw Bethel, and Beeroth where Mary and Joseph first missed Jesus from the company as they journeyed from Jerusalem.

We passed in sight of the American schoo for Boys conducted by the Friends Church but lack of time kept us moving toward the Holy City.

Passing the birth place and the royal residence of King Saul, Jeremiah the prophet Abiathar the High Priest, we were by a sharp curve brought into full view of Jerusalem The first scripture that came into. my mind was the lamentation of Jesus when he said "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem &c." a scripture that is familiar to every Bible reader.

I confess that my arrival in Jerusalem was one of anxiety for we were expected, the whole party, to be received by Sir Ronald Storrs, Governor of Jerusalem, at his mansion, Friday afternoon. Then the life-sized portrait of General Allenby which had been entrusted to me was to be delivered. But m party was sent on to Nazareth for the night and it was late Saturday when we arrived Our schedule was so close that I could not afford to leave my section and miss many things that I desired to see. So I was like the man riding to the gallows to be hanged, I knew there would be nothing going on til I got there, so tried to rest easy. But I really feared that his English dignity would be offended. After a good night's rest in Casa Nova, a Catholic Monastery, we, the most of us, went to an English Episcopal Church where we heard a very helpful sermon on the casting of the devils from the Gadarene: I wondered if that preacher did not use that because many of us, several hours before, had looked upon the supposed place where this miracle was performed.

In the afternoon all sections went to the Mount of Olives and heard Dr. Sheldon on Home Life using the wood as a theme that made home worthwhile. The cradle, the workshop, the Cross, the olive tree. I leave you to draw your own conclusions. To say that every one felt the power of the Holy Spirit in some way I believe is true. A great service out in the open. We got so much more of this than much that we heard in other places.

Much of our spare t ime was used in souvenir buying and visiting the odd shops and stores. We all enjoyed this.

Monday morning at nine o'clock found Bros. Corn and Ballard, whom I had asked to accompany me, vice Consul Aldridge with his attache, Dr. I. Jarval, Mr. Boring's spa Agent in Jerusalem, at the Governor's c to deliver the portrait. We found the Go nor a fine fellow, kind and courteous an he felt wounded in the least he never sh ed it. He spoke in the highest terms of United States and her citizens. He insiste our "taking tea" with him in his home next day which we did. We found his wi very gracious hostess. We were made to perfectly at home as there were no swa tail coats or capers that made the occa stiff. We left with a warm place in our he for them.

On account of this special mission we w given a guide and we soon caught up w the others after being shown the places interest which I shall not undertake to cribe here. Then after visiting the Tomb Lazarus at Bethany, Gethsemane, Bethlel when the time came to go to ship we w all eager to go.

Passing from Jerusalem to the sea by t we saw many signs of the world war wh some decisive battles were fought that more effect than possibly some of us thou at the time.

We embarked at Haifa in a drenching r the second time only we had been caugh a rain for the whole trip which we all th is wonderful and for which we praise dear Lord.

We are now in the Aegean Sea and h passed the Isle of Patmos and the places the Seven Churches of Asia, with Constan inople as our next objective.

Putting on "Holy shoes" in order not pollute the Mohammedan Mosques has b followed by some of us till we are disgust tho' that is the only way to see them ins

On Board S. S. Republic. February 19.

The Ham-Ramsay Party, headed by Evan list Mordecai Fowler Ham of Anchors Kentucky, is now in the closing day o great city-wide campaign in Danville, V ginia. Twenty-six churches are participat in the Campaign, which is being held in mammoth tabernacle in the heart of the c and the immense building has been too sm to accommodate the crowds from the very ginning. The Evangelist has been divid the crowds,—delivering the same sermon women only and then to men only, in orde give all an opportunity to hear.

Mr. Ham preached practically five we before he gave an invitation and the harv period is just beginning. Local religious le ers are confidently expecting the greatest h vest of souls and the most wide-spread sp tual awakening that has ever been experien in this section.

The music for the Campaign is under direction of William J. Ramsay, Choris assisted by Earl S. Rodgers, Pianist.

The meeting is scheduled to close on Ma 28th, after which the party goes to Oklaho City, Oklahoma, where they will open a tab nacle campaign on April 11th.

CLIPPED FROM OUR CONTEMPORARIES.

Union Considered by Five Conservative Bodies.

If press reports are to be believed there is a movement on foot looking toward union of five conservative religious connections in the United States and Canada. The bodies included are the Free Methodist church, with headquarters in Chacago; Wesleyan Methodist connection, with headquarters in Syracuse, N. Y.; Pilgrim Holiness movement, of Owen Sound, Ont.; Brethren of Christ, a Mennonite body of western Canada; and the Nazarent church, which is established in both countries.

Urge Clergyman Not to Smoke in Public.

Reports of a recent session of the Lutheran synod of New York say that a report by a committee on moral issues led to the adoption of this resolution: "In view of the deplorable increase of cigarette smoking among our boys and girls which is tending to seriously undermine the physical, mental and spiritual abilities of our future leaders and followers, we most solemnly and earnestly urge all ministers as examples to youth, to refrain from smoking in public." A protest by a correspondent, printed in the Lutheran, says, "If a minister's example to youth is wrong by smoking in public, surely his example will not be better, but rather worse, if he tries to do the thing in private."

Dr. Major Sees Education As Religious Hope.

In preaching in St. George's Episcopal church, New York city, Dr. H. D. A. Major, editor of the Modern Churchman, of England, held out a proper form of religious education as the hope of religion. Dr. Major said that for 18 centuries men had looked to a visible return of Christ for the establishment of the kingdom of God, but that "among educated modern-minded people this explanation has been surrendered as a primitive Jewish dream, and replaced by the idea of human progress." In proportion as civilization is built of Christian ideals, he held, will it be secure and will the kingdom come. "This," said Dr. Major, "is the work of the second reformation, which will be world-wide in its scope and range. Already we are in its earlier stages. Its weapons are not agitation and revolutionary propaganda and organization, but christian education—not the old kind of ecclesiastical and dogmatic teaching which went by that name, but the inculcation of Christian principles and the application of those principles to every side of human life, political, social, economic, personal, not by force and intimidation, but as the outcome of a growing conviction that they are the best principles in which to build a world-wide civilization."

OUR METHODIST PROTESTANT COLLEGE.

..Thrown up out of chaos are mighty forces; these combined can accomplish marvelous results. So—

Human minds agreed, and efforts centered on any one object, usually seemingly miraculously prevail and bring to pass.

Friends, if Mr. J. Norman Wills has given the accrued earnings in the main of his life up to this time and is storing up in insurance his daily accumulations, which will eventually result in one great aggregate to this college, with no selfish motive, but for the good of every child in the M. P. Church who can go and will go. And to every M. P. parent this means your child and your every child

For this we say and the glory of God and the advancement of his kingdom here on earth and in the name of Christ: If Rev. R. M. Andrews in sacrificial service resigning the ministerial work or laying it aside temporarily and laying all upon the altar, his heart, his mind, his time, his body, his soul, unreservedly, tempest tossed, heart harrowed, tried as by fire, in anguish, and poignant sorrow through our seeming indifference, importuning through months, yea, for years. If Mr McCulloch through years of boosting and sacrificial giving, and Mr. Garratt's unbending and assiduous appealing for funds. And all our ministers, God bless them every one, who at the signal for help, came flocking to the college with their pittances, their petitions and their blessed influence, throughout our ranks.

Listen, from Asheville and Henderson from Winston to Albemarle (perhaps,) they fail us not.

But down the mountains before day, and on the highways they speed.

Friends, I cannot believe it's base ingratitude on our part, nor sordidness nor blinded ignorance, nor cold indifference. We represent the kingdom of God and are made of better material. Have you thought of Mr. Dixon through his culture, superior education and meager time, exhaustively pouring out his reserve power for this college?

We men and we women, are we petitioning as a body, incessantly pleading, as the Christ till the wee small hours, yea, till the breaking of the day, yea, as George Muller, That God will focus the minds, center the hearts, and move us in masse toward this great shibboleth or stream and argosy of good to our church and that He will endow it.

They are standing here, these buildings in all their beauty, glorious in the orb of day, shimmering neath the stars, in the blue vault of heaven, and the silvery moon light.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

Thus they stand.

"Stately buildings, lifting high their arches
Harmonies of Gothic grace,
Carven wood their stairways high adorning
Strength and beauty blend in every place
Master mind and artist, Soul, together,
Wrought to make thee what thou art.
Gifts of love and sacrificial effort;
Wealth, and widows' mite,—all had their part."

Our very own teachers are there, many of them, they are concientiouusly teaching.

If I were a rich man, a rich unhappy man If she who had crowned my life with bliss had flown to you happier sphere, and my life had been left desolate. After provision for my child I would seek out a place like this, and would studiously, consider what was the best purpose to give my means to.

And I would provide a student fund, or build a dormitory for boys or girls or endow this college in her honor and happiness would come to me. Not only by reflex action, (but by her ministering spirit, guiding and directing and blessing in unknown and blessed ministrations). And her angel would bless me, and redeem me from all evil.

The Lord said unto Moses "Behold I send an angel before thee to keep thee in the way and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared."

Beware of him and obey his voice, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions, for my name is in him. We believe in these things ministering spirits. Happiness would come from the hundrels of darkenel, narrow circumscribel lives, on account of poverty. Educated here then enlarged, equipped, Christianized and sent forth on years of usefulness, to bless all man kinl that they touch.

It's a noble grand ambition, to make a broader and easier road up the arduous and difficult mountain of life, which we climb for the oncoming hosts of youth. And this is what we are doing by this college.

Hence I could but be happy. "It's grandeur akin to God."

God has not sent us sorrow to punish but to develope and make us useful, "God doth not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men."

If I were a man of means, and had lost by death, the idol of my heart, an only child, and my life overshadowed by the seemingly impenitrable gloom of this sorrow, I would face about, and see what I could do, for other precious little chillren, God's flowers in humanity's flower garden, and I would give my means to have them christianized, educated, and tended with care. That the fragrance of their lives would bless earth, and they perennially bloom through all eternity.

And if I had accumulated recklessly, I would plead forgiveness and hand it over to Him and thus consecrated and made sacred, and thus render happy through generosity here (for no really generous soul is ever miserable long). I would expect happiness in the beyond with her whom I had lost, and all these I had found, and were conserved, in deathless happiness there. For Longfellow says truly, Only those are crowned and sainted who with griefs have been acquainted.

If I were a batchelor, and had spent my life in accumlating and had to go out as I had lived, alone, to face my Judge, after embursing my relatives, and this I would do, I would diligently consider where to lay it down. And I believe if I were an M. P. it would go in this college.

I quote you this profoundly true imperishable and ever new production:

"If we work upon marble it will perish, if we work upon brass, time will efface it, if we rear temples they will crumble into dust but if we work upon immortal souls, if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God, and love of our fellow men we engrave on these tablets something which will brighten to all eternity."

If I were a man and my home was desolate because no merry prattle of childhood lips nor pattering feet had ever echoed there, I'd dedicate my all to the present development and abiding happiness of the worthy child life about me. Not living and only believing that the fittest might survive.

Then reverent souls, Oh! men of our church, women of our church, (who believe in soul supremacy), grand constituency of noble heart, for I must believe that's what we are, let's enter this field anew, of spiritual enlargement with souls intensified, with divine heat illuminated by the Holy Spirit and inspired by adorable faith, this field of incalculable fruitage, Heavenly and deathless.

And though today with grief temporarily regnant, in our hearts through solicitude for her welfare.

In the coming cycles we shall be termed illustrious distinguished founders. And our church will be admired and esteemed by christians of all communions. For from our youth of broad mental caliber, shall emerge from this college men of collossal minds and culture, transcendent spiritual insight, and scholars of sublime faith.

Then come on all of us, no forfeiture here We men of wealth come and let's give as we shall rejoice at the last testing, when we have loosed from earth's moorings, we men and women of broad acres and filled store houses from our plentitude and we the average in possession, come, we plead in unanswerable argument we poor and we very poor; in our penury, all can give. And our lives shall flow in deepest current for good strongest in influence and in increasing sweetness And the Infinite God reimburse. Come nor alienate his love through despicable selfishness.

The mandate omnipotent is give, And the return is in culminating glory. The alternative is indeed subordinate good. Abba, Father you will hear our plaintive unsolaced cry and anchor forever our tempest tossed vessel, through the awakened unfolding generosity of our church. Fannie O. Kirkpatrick

SOME CHINESE PROVERBS.

The carrying out of a kind feeling is sufficient to protect all within the four seas. By not doing so one may not be able to protect his own four limbs. (Mencius.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 4.

Jesus Appears to His Disciples.

Lesson Text: John 20:24-29; 21:15-17.

Golden Text: John 20:29.

The Central Truth: Love is the rich soil of grace out of which faith and service grow and yield much fruit.

Scriptural Points.

1. The absence of Thomas from the first meeting of the apostles indicates that the crucifixion of Jesus had extinguished the last glimmer of hope from his mind. To Him a dead Messiah was impossible, and a resurrected one even more so. To him the hope of Israel had gone into a a starless night.

2. "We have seen the Lord." The combined testimony of ten truthful men and spiritual brothers served as an idle, imaginary tale to this strong but honest doubter. He surely thought his fellow-disciples were dreaming and thought they saw Jesus, or had just seen His spirit. For ten days his doubt grew. to colossal magnitude. He insisted that he would not be satisfied with his own sight of Jesus. He would have to feel the print of the nails and thrust his hand into Jesus' side to believe that He was alive in the body.

3. Curiosity, to say the least, led Thomas to be present at the meeting of the apostles on the next first day. Probably during the week he had talked with others who saw Jesus on His resurrection day. It may be his doubts were weakening some. At any rate he came back to the fellowship of the eleven.

4. The omniscient Jesus knew what Thomas had said about Him. It is likely this omniscience fully convinced Thomas that Jesus had risen from the dead. It may the countenance of Jesus and tone of voice helped to dethrone and dissipate his doubts. It was not necessary to accept Jesus' invitation to touch His wounded hands and side. His doubts vanished and faith arose triumphantly.

5. "My Lord and my God." A complete and enthusiastic confession of Jesus as God, equal with God the Father. In ascribing to Jesus all the attributes of deity, the eclipsed faith of Thomas rose to the Pisgah heights of strength. beauty, and authority.

6. It is well to believe the evidences of the senses. It is far better to believe the record that God has made of His Son. There is a large blessing in store for those who accept the Christ upon the declaration of the gospel and upon the testimony of believers.

7. The big loving heart of Jesus craves love in return. "Lovest thou me?" is a question of earnest and unceasing longing that Jesus puts to every one for whom He died. The acceptance of His love by faith, shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, constitutes rich and full salvation. And loving Him in return becomes the motive and powerful incentive to service.

8. Three times Peter denied His Lord. Three times Jesus asks him, "Lovest thou me?" Peter was grieved the third time Jesus put the question. It is likely he recalled the three shameful denials. It is noticeable that Peter made no loud boasts of his love, as he had made of his loyalty before Jesus' arrest, He simply appealed to Jesus' knowledge of fact: "Thou knowest that I love thee."

9. It is likely that Jesus asked the same question three times just to remind Peter of the three denials. He had a great lesson to teach. Though the question was the same, the three responses of Jesus were different. "Feed my lambs," children and young converts "Feed my sheep,"—continue to feed them till they are full-grown. "Feed my sheep," that is, "Tend my sheep," exercise pastoral care over them, shield them from temptation, keep them in pastures green, and lead them to living waters.

Practical Points.

1. Doubts do not breed in a worshipful atmosphere. It is those who neglect the assembling of themselves together that come to doubt the reality, the nature, or the justice, love, and mercy of God. Like Thomas, by staying away once, you may miss a vision of the Christ.

2. An honest doubter is open to conviction. A dishonest doubter has burned the bridge behind him, and is determined to sojourn in everlasting night.

3. Jesus is still visible to the eye of faith. And spiritual vision is keen and accurate in proportion to purity of heart and holiness of life. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God;" for they do see God in everything,—in nature, in the Scriptures, in history, and in Christian experience.

4. Nothing is hid from Him with whom we have to do. "His eyes are in every place, beholding the evil and the good." "Thou God seest me." Let us walk circumspectly in the sight and presence of the sympathizing Jesus.

5. The house of God contains the feeding trough of the flock of Christ. Happy is the minister that fills this trough with the Gospel's nourishing pabulum. And happy is the parishioner who feeds upon this bread of life to the full satisfying of the soul.

6. The last evidence of love to Jesus is not love and long professions. Nor can there be a form of godliness without the power. Obedience is a sure sign of a true affection. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them; he it is that loveth me." John 14:

Rockingham.—One thing of interest to our people here is raising the money to pay the debt off our church building.

A few Sunday schools have sent us a collection to help pay this debt, and we trust a number of other Sunday schools will do likewise and with this help we can soon pay this debt off. J. H. Trolinger, Pastor.

Tabernacle Charge.—For several weeks our work has suffered because of sickness among our members. We are glad to note that some who were sick have recovered sufficiently to be in the [illegible] some are getting better and we hope [illegible] soon.

The [illegible] the last month [illegible] in both [illegible] we will [illegible] with our finances. We started out to pay the claims as we go and have been doing very well considering the fact that many of the people were not accustomed to doing that way. We hope we will co-operate in this matter and that we will be able to report everything paid in full to date at our second quarterly conference.

Last Sunday we were granted the claim for running expenses for our College. Julian paid theirs in full, and Tabernacle made a fine start on theirs. We hope to report this item paid in full at all of the churches in the near future.

Since our last report we have received several tokens of kindness from the good people of Julian and Tabernacle, which we appreciate very much.

All officials please take notice and arrange to attend the second quarterly conference which will convene at Julian Saturday before the first Sunday in April at 2 o'clock.

We wish to thank the members of Pine Grove Church on Reidsville Charge, and their pastor, Rev. [illegible] Love, for $31.00. This is part of the deficit on pastor's salary at that church last year. Thank you very much.

MRS. DIAMOND'S SECRET.

By Evangeline Weir.

Little Mrs. Diamond-bird, of Australia makes a wonderful nursery for her nestlings Where do you think she builds it? Not in a tree or the grass or a hole in the wall. She hides it underground, so that no one can disturb her babies while she is away.

The little miner selects a bank near a stream of water and digs a tunnel in the soft earth about two feet long. She works very hard to make it the right shape and size, for she must creep in and out many times before her work is finished and the babies are old enough to leave the nest. At the end of the tunnel she makes a little chamber as round as a ball with a little round doorway just big enough for her small body to pass through.

When the little room is shaped and patted with her breast and feet until it is smooth and firm, then Mrs. Diamond makes her cradle the cutest little cradle you ever saw. It is made of bits of fine bark from a gum tree, is round as a ball and fits the little nursery exactly The tiny mother bird strips off bark with her beak, carries it down through the tunnel and weaves her small cradle without a bit of light. Her eyes must be very strong to be able to do such beautiful work in the dark.

When the little cradle is finished, Mrs. Diamond lines it with fine grass, for she wants her babies to have a nice soft bed to sleep on. It is very cozy and warm, and in it the little Diamonds live until they are strong enough to creep through the tunnel into the big outside world; then they are so frightened that they want to creep back into their cradle and cover up their eyes.

Mrs. Diamond never allows visitors in her nursery, not even her husband, and it was so dark in there all the while that the babies could not see what kind of clothes their mother wore. They had no idea how beautiful she was until they saw her in the light, darting in and out among the leaves of a tree, clinging to a branch or swinging her small body from place to place, her splendid coat sparkling in the sunlight like a great diamond She called to them in sweet, piping notes and the frightened little things tried to answer with queer little sounds which brought her at once to the place where they were trying to hide from the sun. They were so happy that they crept under her wings and hid their eyes from the sun's glare against her beautiful golden breast.

In a short time the little Diamonds learned to fly, and found the tree-tops nicer than a dark cradle hidden in the ground. They could not understand why their mother had made such a beautiful nursery and placed it where no one could see it. And they never learned the reason why until they were old enough to raise families of their own. Then they made nurseries like their mother had made, and never told their children why, either, but let them find out the secret for themselves when they were old enough to build cradles.—The Presbyterian.

A STORY OF PLUCK.

Just fifty-one years ago, on a ship sailing for America was a Serbian boy, fifteen years old, with five cents in his pocket. He had left Hungary without his Mother's permission. Indeed she knew nothing of his plan until she received a letter from him which was mailed when the boat was leaving.

Neither the father or mother of the lad could read or write, but they were ambitious for him, and his Mother had said to him often: "Michael, if you wish to go out into the big world you must provide yourself with another pair of eyes—the eyes of reading and writing."

In the village of Idvor, so tiny that you will not find it on a map of Hungary, during the long winter evenings many neighbors would gather in Michael's home.

"The older men," said he, when writing the story of his life, "would sit around the warm stove, on a bench which was a part of the stove, and made of the same material, brick plastered over and white-washed. They smoked and talked....At the feet of the old men were middle-aged men, seated upon low stools each with a basket in front of him into which he peeled the yellow kernels from the ears of corn. The elder women were seated on little stools along the walls. They would be spinning wool, flax, or hemp. The young women would be sewing or knitting. I a favorite child of my mother, was allowed to sit alongside of her and listen to the words of the old men .....At intervals the young women would sing a song having some relation to the last tale."

The teacher in the poor little school which he attended never interested Michael like these old men and their war stories, but his father was determined that the boy, who naturally would have been a soldier, should never fight for Austria. So when he had outgrown the little school at Idvor, the parents denied themselves enough to send him away to a better school, fifteen miles distant. At this school he heard of Franklin, his kite and key and the discovery of electricity. The first Sunday he was at home, when the old men had collected, he told them the story. His father would have none of such stuff as that, and became angry at the boy. His mother, however, took the son's part as mothers usually do, and soothed him with her belief in what he had learned.

Like David, he came to know the stars when watching his father's oxen through the spring nights, and at the same time he learned to play his flute.

Later he was sent to Prague, a city three days away by boat, to carry on his schooling For this journey his mother provided two gay colored bags, one for his clothes and one for his food. For the journey he had a whole roasted goose and a loaf of bread. His overcoat was of yellow sheepskin, trimmed with black wool, and embroidered along the border with black and red figures. A black sheepskin cap gave the finishing touch and marked him as a real son of Idvor.

At school the lessons seems tame to the restless boy, and the death of his father aroused in him the wish to come to America He sold his watch, his sheep-skin coat, his books, his cap, in fact, every garment which he could possibly spare, and started. He had nothing left with which to pay for a mattress for his steerage bunk, or for a blanket. Many a long dark hour was spent on the upper deck hugging the smoke stack in an icy gale. One of the blasts took away his hat and a Turkish fez was all the headgear he could find on the boat.

His first night under the stars and stripes was spent on the floor at Castle Garden, and the next morning he bought a piece of prune pie with his five cents.

As soon as he reached Broadway, some boys began to jeer at his red fez, and one shoved it off. A fight followed in which he knocked his assailant down. A policeman appeared, but the boys appealed in Michael's behalf, and at that moment he got his first lesson in American fair-play.—Selected.

HIS VALENTINE.

The new postman had a funny, shrill whistle such a strange whistle that Dorothy ran to the library window when she heard it, on a November day. There stood the postman resting his heavy bag on the stone coping while he looked over a handful of letters, and just behind him was a cheerful little dog, a curly brown dog—in fact, a most business-like little dog, ears and tail well up, as he awaited orders.

"It must belong to the postman," said Dorothy to herself. "I wonder, I do wonder if he's coming every day." And the next morning when the little girl peeped out of the window, what should she see but the same small dog patiently lying before the area door waiting till his master should come out.

So it happened that Dorothy began to watch for the brown dog that trotted from house to house each day. Sometimes the rain pattered on his curls, and seemed to almost take the curl out, so flat did they lie, and later the white flakes fluttering down did their best to turn him into a small snow dog. Evidently the weather made no difference to him. He looked as if he enjoyed all kinds.

As Christmas drew near, Dorothy could almost believe that the dog knew how many interesting packages his postman was bringing to a certain happy little maid, so briskly did he trot around, and so very straight up did he hold that short tail of his. He appeared to feel his own importance at this glad season.

He raced ahead of his master New Year's Day, and barked noisily at some saucy sparrows that were perched upon a railing, then suddenly remembering that he was the Postman's dog, he settled down to his usual gait and looked straight ahead in dignified fashion.

Valentine Day was approaching. Dorothy was snipping great sheets of red paper and hurrying over to the desk to find the paste pot, or some more stamps, as she worked busily at valentines she was making for her little friends. Already a pile of snowy envelopes lay on the table, all directed and ready to pop into the letter box, each one carefully sealed with a red heart. The child drew a long sig of relief as she put on the very last stamp, and just as she did so, she heard the postman in the street below. Dorothy didn't look out but she felt sure the dog was going the rounds as usual. Her cheeks grew suddenly pink. She began to twist one curl as she always did when she was thinking especially hard, glanced at the valentines, shook her head, then called out to big brother Richard, who was reading at the other end of the room: "Richard, what would you like best to be given, if you were a dog?"

"If I were a dog," repeated the big brother quite soberly, though his eyes twinkled. "Why, I think, yes, I'm sure—"

"Oh, whisper it!" implored Dorothy. Nobody must know. And so big brother whispered, and his small sister exclaimed with a joyful giggle: "Oh, that will be lovely, Richard I'm just so glad I asked you."

Valentine's morning Dorothy hurried down to the area door the moment she heard the postman's whistle, and she was holding in her hand something daintly wrapped in red tissue paper with a scarlet ribbon wound around it.

Now the postman was already on the steps. "Good morning, Mr. Postman," said Dorothy, politely. "Here's a valentine for your little brown dog. It's just—well, it won't hurt him," and without waiting for thanks, she scampered off upstairs, half frightened at her own daring. But, once safely in the library, she ventured to glance out of the window, and she saw the brown dog going up the street. But this time he was fairly capering; his tail waved wildly; his dignity was forgotten. Gone was the red paper, gone was the dainty ribbon, but in his mouth he carried his gift. Where in all the city could a happier dog be found? Where another that had a plump turkey leg for a valentine!—Sunday Srhool Times.

A SURPRISE FOR MOTHER.

Joan and Phil Summers were keeping house by themselves while their mother was off on a three weeks' visit. Phil wondered if he were going to get enough to eat, but Joan was full of importance and pride.

"Phillip," she said when they were alone. "I have a wonderful plan to surprise mother."

"What's that?" asked Phil.

"She's always complaining about the looks of the floors and there's plenty of green paint in the shed. Let's paint the floors while she's gone.. They will have plenty of time to dry," said Joan.

Phil liked the idea, because he had always wanted to get into the paint, but had been warned by his mother not to dare touch the cans, and one couldn't get the paint out without touching the cans. Of course, this was different. Joan was in charge, and she was fourteen. Phil rushed to the shed to get the paint. Joan called him back.

"We have to mop the floor first and move the furniture," she said.

"Well, you do that while I get the paint ready," said Phil. "Men don't mop floors."

"All right," agreed Joan, wishing to keep her brother in a good humor, "only don't begin telling what men do and don't do. You aren't a man by a long chalk!"

The first room they did was not a room, it was the hall. After it was done, they realized that they could not get upstairs or into the living room. Phil found a board and made a bridge up to the stairway by putting one end at the dining room door and the other end on the banister. It took a lot of skill to use the bridge, and once Joan fell off, but she had on an old dress so it did not matter so much.

Next they went upstairs and did their mother's room. The furniture had to be moved out into the spare room. After that they were quite tired, but managed to do the bath room too. Phil made a bridge by which one could get to the bath tub and from thence crawl about on various boards placed against the basin and window sill.

When night came, the two were all tired out and glod to get to bed. Phil left a can of paint on the stairs and another in the hall in front of the spare room, because those were the two places they intended to tackle in the morning.

"We can climb up the banister and slide down it if we need to go up or downstairs," Phil said.

Meanwhile their mother had reached her friend's house, but at the door she stopped There was a large red sign on the house with the words, "SCARLET FEVER" printed in black. Some one came out on the porch. It was Mother's old school friend, Mrs. Camden

"Just look what's happened to us!" she cried. "Jimmy has scarlet fever! We had no idea of such a thing, but the doctor came and they put the sign up just now. I'm so sorry my dear. Oh! Oh" And she began to cry.

"There! There!" comforted her friend from the sidewalk. "Don't worry. Jimmy will get over it all right. Joan had it, you know and I nursed her through it in fine shape."

"But just think of your coming here and not being able to have your visit." exclaimed the distracted Mrs. Camden.

"Don't worry about that," said Mrs. Summers. "I am very sorry of course, but I enjoved the train ride, and I only hope you wont worry and that Jimmy will have a very light case. Now, where's Agnes?"

"Oh, that's another thing," moaned Mrs Camden. "Agnes has been visiting my sister in Derry, but she's due to come home today They are expecting some other folks from out West and can't keep her any longer—"

"Well," interrupted her friend, "let me take Agnes home with me. Joan will be delighted."

So it was all arranged. Mrs. Summers drove to the station and waited for Agnes' train The little girl arrived on the five o'clock local. Things were explained to her. Agnes was sorry, of course, but she loved the Summers and couldn't help enjoying the dinner her mother's friend treated her to in a nice restaurant

The only train they could take did not reach Mrs. Summers' home town until half-past eleven, but Agnes thought it would be fun to sit up late.

"The children will be fast asleep," said Mrs. Summers gleefully. "We'll slip in very quietly and surprise them in the morning! My! Won't it give them a turn to see us there! Maybe I can get up and have breakfast ready before they are awake!"

So it was that in the night while Joan and Phil lay asleep tired out with their day's work, two shadowy forms slipped noiselessly into the house. The light from the street made enough glimmer to see one's way about, if one knew the house, and Mrs. Summers did know it very well. She noticed that her shoes made a queer noise on the floor of the hall.

"The little rascals!" she thought. "They have spilled something here."

She took her little guest by the hand and led her upstairs and about halfway up they fell over the can of paint Phil had left there.

"Oh, dear! Toys all over the house!" sighed the mother. "I hope it won't wake them up."

It didn't. Joan and Phil were too tired to be awakened by anything.

"Now, dear," whispered Mrs. Summers to Agnes, "the bath room is in here and this is the spare room. The bed's all made ready for you. I always keep it ready for a guest."

She then left her little friend and slipped into her room. How well she knew the pretty room with its sloping roof! The big maple tree near the window shut out a good deal of light from the arc light outside. Mrs. Summers groped her way to where she knew her bed was, and sank wearily down on it—

That is she sank down on where the bed had been. Bang! She went down, down! She gave a scream, and at the same moment there was a great commotion from the bathroom. Agnes had tripped over another can of paint and fallen into the bath room, displacing some of the bridges Phil had constructed.

Mrs. Summers arose and groped her way to the light switch. Then she certainly did stare! The room was bare. She looked down at her pretty suit. It was covered with green paint. She went hastily to help Agnes. The poor child was paint from head to foot.

"I have a good mind to spank those brats!" said their mother, wrathfully.

But she didn't. She and Agnes cleaned up as best they could and went to bed in the spare room, where next morning the astonished Joan found them.

"Forgive us!" she implored, when she saw her mother's eye glaring at her.

"Not till I have a good breakfast," Mrs. Summers replied.

She got the good breakfast, and then she said: "Now what?"

"I resign!" Joan said, waving her hands

"Resign!" cried her mother. "I guess not! You and Phil began this job, now you finish Agnes and I are going to New York for a week or two."

Phil and Joan looked at each other in despair.

"Oh, well," said Phil, "if we hadn't done it. Mother wouldn't think of taking a trip to New York.

"That's so!" said Joan. "We wouldn't have been taken there anyhow."

They did not know how hard it was for their mother to go her way and have her previous house and belongings to come and enjoy them! But the work, and the most got done after many days of weariness.

"This old ought to last ten years," Phil remarked after the last flick of his head. "I never want to see [illegible]."

"[illegible] ed," said Joan.

Dail's Methesville Charge.—As we haven't been heard from in a long time, we'll try to report. Brother Dail has been doing fine work since conference. We are indeed glad to have him back with us. He filled his appointment yesterday with an excellent sermon to both the old and young. I am sorry [illegible] to hear it. It was certainly heroic [illegible] young people, and I hope that they will take a lesson from it.

Our Sunday school pulled through the winter months, with a very good number on roll [illegible] that [illegible] spring has opened we'll have a better one.

The Sunday school is planning to give an Easter programme on the first Sunday as it is Easter.

[illegible] wishes to Herald and its readers.

Leona Hendrix, Rep.

Matthews Chapel Greensville, Ct.—Since our last report everything has been moving along very nicely.

Our Sunday school attendance has been very good all the winter but not what we would like it to be, as the roads have been very bad, and still so, and some of the people have been handicapped by sickness.

As the long spring approaches, our attendance will increase.

Sunday was our usual preaching service day. Dr. Powell was away at Enfield, and we had lots of visitors in our Sunday school among them were Rev. Mr. Lindsey, the Christian minister from Cadburg Church. He is a student at Lynchburg college he came here to conduct services at Cashing and while there attended our Sunday school, assisting in [illegible] Bro. Powell, but he wasn't present, so Bro. Mr. Lindsey gave us a brief talk on our Sunday school lesson.

Several of our people attended the circuit Rally as Bro. Powell called it, and the quarterly conference which was held at Philadelphia Church Wednesday last, but owing to the snow which fell the night before and the bad roads there wasn't a large attendance.

We enjoyed the different talks given by Rev. Mr. Stubbins and Dr. and Mrs. Dixon. We also had Rev. Mr. Sheldon from Spring Church with us.

Best wishes to Herald and its readers.

Tabernacle Church Tabernacle Circuit.—Sunday was a good day for us at Tabernacle. Attendance at Sunday school 117; and 552 chapters read from the Bible during the past week. Offering, $12.52.

During a recital last year Brother Prichard suggested the plan of taking the number of persons present each day. We began the plan last year and have continued taking the number of persons present each week and our secretary gives it in her regular report.

Our pastor preached another one of those splendid sermons to an attentive congregation. The W. H. and F. Missionary Societies will meet next Sunday immediately after Sunday school. It is hoped that all the members will be present as it is a very important meeting.

Our second quarterly meeting will be held at Julian Church on Saturday afternoon before the first Sunday in April. Reporter.

Denton.—As we haven't had a reporter for the Denton M. P. Church for some time we have failed to let others know just what we are doing. We think it is a great help, to the other churches to report through our church paper as to what we are doing in the kingdom work.

First, we want the people that read the herald to know about the pastoral work of the M. P. Church as well as the churches as a whole of Denton Charge. At the last annual conference there were two young men assigned to this charge; at that time (as well as now) they were students at the High Point College. Well, of course we thought that we were not getting as strong and as able a pastor as we thought we should have. The young men came down and filled their first appointment; at that time we had the pleasure of meeting Rev. J. E. Carroll and Rev. T. G. Madison. Now it gives us great joy to tell that we have two young ministers that we love and they are bringing us messages that are far beyond our first expectation. We thank God for these young preachers that are so faithfully serving the Denton Charge. The Denton Church is highly pleased with Bro. Carroll and Bro. Madison.

We have a Christian Endeavor Society that we organized about one and one half years ago. We are young of course in the work but we are having good interest on the part of the young people. Our society was conducted on last Sunday evening by Miss Blanch Hoover under the direction of Rev. J. E. Carroll. The program was fine and we hope to have other programs like this at least once a month or oftener.

We are having a very interesting Sunday school under the supervision of Mr. N. V. Johnson.

Mid-week prayer meeting every Wednesday night under the direction of Mr. J. W. Frank who conducts the meeting or appoints some one to conduct the meeting. Reporter.

Littleton Ct.—March 18 was a good day for us, we met at Corinth Church for our Circuit Rally. All churches were represented but not a large gathering. About all that were there seemed to be interested. Rev. and Mrs. Dixon and Rev. R. C. Stubbins were there. Mrs. Dixon began the program by giving us a splendid talk on Sunday schools, and Bro. Stubbins followed by a very interesting talk on the country church. Then we had lunch and everyone seemed to be happy and enjoying themselves. Our people had brought a "Heap-o" dinner" and fed us all well.

After lunch we reassembled and Bro. Dixon gave us a timely talk on different phases of church work, and held our second quarterly conference. It was in every way a helpful program and we regret that more of our people were not there. Hope that Bro. Dixon with his helpers may come again. J. B. O'Brian last Saturday afternoon and on Sunday morn-were: Dr. E. A. Seasholtz, Dr. A. G. Dixon an Rev. Lawrence Little. Both sessions were well attended, vital problems were discussed, prac conference was a success. The future success of it depends upon the application made by those who heard these suggestions.

Our work here is progressing nicely. We see the need of a deeper interest and while there is room for improvement, but we are

THE BARN.

Harry and Phoebe were playing in their back yard when they saw two of Harry's friends sneaking along near the hedge:

"Hello, you Gus and George!" called Harry.

"We see you," said Phoebe.

Gus and George stuck their heads up over the fence and each put a finger to his lips. Harry and Phoebe ran to them.

"What is it?" they inquired in one breath. "We won't tell."

Gus pointed to a handkerchief on the end of a stick and George pointed to his knapsack.

"We're going to hike to California," said Gus.

"You're running away," exclaimed Phoebe.

"No, Mother said we could go," said George.

"That's queer," Poebe remarked.

"We've been walking since dinner time and now the sun is setting low in the West and we must seek a place in which to spend the night," said George in a singsong voice.

"May we rest in your barn?" asked Gus:

"Of course, you dumbell!" cried Harry, laughing. "But why don't you come in the house and rest inside. Ma would be glad to see you."

"Hist!" said George. "Don't breathe a word about our being here. We have enemies. We are being followed. Give us your word of honor that you will not betray us."

Harry was quite impressed, and Phoebe promised not to tell. The two hikers stole warily into the barn, which was an old, disused building some little distance from the house. In the loft some hay had been put for the children to play in, and there was a ladder and a bar with which Harry exercised himself.

"I think they are only pretending about things," said Phoebe.

"What things?" demanded her brother.

"Oh, California and enemies," said Phoebe.

Harry was not so sure, and he told his sister that he might sneak out "about midnight" and sleep with the boys.

It was far from midnight when Phoebe heard her brother sneak out, then she went fast to sleep. Suddenly she woke up. Something was shining in the mirror and the reflection had wakened her. She got up, and looking out of the window saw that there was a fire outside.

"The boys are making a bonfire and having fun!" she thought. "I'll go out too."

She thought it must be almost morning because it was bright outside. It did not take long to slip into her clothes and tiptoe quietly out of the house. The fire was getting brighter and brighter. As she ran towards it she thought: "Well, they certainly made a big bonfire. I wonder where they got enough wood. They wouldn't take wood from our woodshed." Then she stopped still in her tracks. There was no bonfire at all. The barn was on fire!

There never was a more frightened girl! Her first thought, of course, was of her brother and his friends. Were they inside or outside of the burning building? She ran as fast as she could to the barn and called them. There was no answer. What was it George or Gus had said about enemies following them? Maybe it wasn't just pretending. Maybe there were enemies and they had set the barn on fire on purpose to burn up the boys!

Poor Phoebe was so scared she couldn't make a sound when she tried to scream, so she turned around and raced for home. She had promised with all sorts of ceremonies not to tell about the boys sleeping in the barn, but she could at least give the alarm and maybe the fire could be put out before it was too late.

She met her father at the door.

"Some fire!" he exclaimed. "Whew! I wonder how the thing caught?"

"Oh, Daddy!" sried Phoebe, frantically. "Put it out, won't fou? Let's get some water! Quick! Quick!"

"Can't," said her father. "That fire is too far gone. The barn is doomed."

Phoebe gave a hoarse cry and rushed into the house to her mother.

"Quick!" she gasped, grabbing her mother's hand. "We must put out the fire: please!"

"Why, the child is in hysterics!" cried the mother. "Never mind, dear. Daddy will put up some cort of playhouse for you and Harry—"

"Harry!" cried Phoebe and began to sob "I promised I wouldn't tell! Oh, Mother, save Harry!"

"What?" said her mother, becoming very white. "Tell me quick!"

"I can't!" sobbed Phoebe. "But we must put out the fire!"

Her mother ran out to her father.

"John," she said, "Phoebe has something on her mind! She's saying something about Harry. Could he be in the barn?"

Dad ran to Phoebe and shook her. "Tell me quick!" he demanded. "Quick!"

"Y-Yes," faltered Phoebe: "But I promised not to tell: He is in the barn sleeping:"

"That explains everything;" muttered Dad.

Then things began to happen.

The hose was attached and mother began spraying the flames; while Dad wrapped himself in a wet blanket and got ready to dash into the flaming building.

Phoebe could not bear to see the sight, so she ran into the house, and to her brother's room and threw herself with a loud howl across his little bed.

As she did so, the whole bed seemed to heave up, and she found herself raised up on sharp waves.

"Hey!" cried an angry sleepy voice. "Who is that?"

"Oh, Harry!" sobbed Phoebe. "Are you safe?"

"Of course," growled Harry's voice. "What's the matter with you anyhow?"

"Yeh," said another voice. "What's the matter with you?"

"A—are you all here?" asked Phoebe. "Oh dear!"

"Sure!" Harry said. "Are you having a nightmare? It was too chilly in the barn, we came in here."

"The barn's on fire and Dad is going inside to rescue you," said Phoebe.

Then she was dumped on the floor, as three wiry forms sprang up and dashed out of the room. She followed close behind and saw them stop the brave father just in the nick of time.

The boys admitted that they had left a lantern burning in the loft. In some way, it must have set fire to the place. Dad did not even scold, and the boys made a night of it, dancing in the light ofthe flames, while Phoebe sat with her mother on the back porch and thanked God that the boys hadn't been in the barn..

In the morning, two sleepy hikers went hiking home for breakfast. Their mother hadn't worried because the telephone had informed her where her young ones were. She had let them go to cure them of the idea of running away, and Harry's mother refused to give them any delicious breakfast, so they would miss their own fragrant kitchen.

"I'm sorry I broke my promise," said Phoebe humbly.

"Shucks!" exclaimed Harry. "What could you do?"

"We might have been in the barn," put in Gus.

"We might have been glad to have you tell on us," George remarked.

"Bet when they get over the scare we'll catch it for burning up the barn," said Harry, and as it turned out, he was a good prophet.—Selected.

AN EMINENT ASTRONOMER'S VIEW.

The New York Times recently sent a reporter to interview Henry Norris Russell, the great professor of astronomy at Princeton University. The reporter asked: "Professor Russell, do you believe in the immortality of the soul? Do you think that the spirit lives after the body dies?"

Dr. Russell answered, "Certainly I do."

"Well," the other man went on, "that is rather strange." He picked up a candle from the table, and pouf! he blew it out.

"Now," he chuckled, "Professor Russell, it looks to me as if after I blew that flame out, the light is gone. Isn't it?"

"Yes," agreed Professor Russell; "but it is not destroyed. You have separated the flame from the wax in which it was burning. Do you realize that the light that you puffed out is this minute a million miles from here and still travelling on? You have not blown out the light. More than that, if you had isstruments delicate enough, you could discover the light of that candle out in space through endless time. You could distinguish it from all light of the stars.....You say of a body lying there with apparently no life that it is dead. The spirit has left it. But as to where the spirit is, physical science cannot say. I think that the spirit lives on in its proper realm, distinct, progressing forever."

Belief in the Bounty of God.

The reporter pressed him, "What are your asons, Mr. Russell, for believing in life afr death?''

"Not so much because of the justice of od, but because I believe—and my experiice as a scientist has taught me to believe—the bounty of God. I have observed that ir imaginations are always surpassed by e reality.....Centuries ago man dreamed ten thousand stars; but we scientists have own millions and millions of stars, and at ast two universes beyond this one, which rpasses the greatest imagination of man.... s a scientist I am taught to expect that ality will be beyond all that we have ought, and there science and the Bible

THE CURSE OF BULL-FIGHTING.

One of the most vivid descriptions of bullhting ever written is given by Ibanez in The Blood of the Arena.'' In the light of veral attempts to revive some interest in ose generally outlawed barbarities it wil t be amiss to cite some words of his upon e animals' side:

"The horses destined for the bull-fight the llowing day were almost dragged out of the ables to be examined and passed upon by e picadores. Those worn-out remnants of etched horse-flesh advanced, with tremuus flanks drooping with old age and sickness reproach to human ingratitude so forgetful past service. Some were mere skeletons th sharp protruding ribs that seemed about break through their hairy hide. Others lked proudly, stamping their strong hoofs, ir coats shining and their eyes bright autiful animals that it was hard to imagine ong outcasts destined to death, magnifi t beasts that seemed to have been recently nharnessed from a luxurious carriage. These re the most dreaded, for they were horses ieted with vertigo and other maladies, and hind these specimens of misery and infirm rang the sad hoof-beats of steeds past rk, mill and factory horses, farm horses blic cab nags, all dulled by years of pulling plough or the cart, unhappy pariahs who re going to be exploited until the last in-nt, forced to provide diversion to men with ir pawing and springing when the bull's

THE MODERNIST MINISTER'S PATHETIC QUESTION.

Modernism, rejecting God's light, leaves it blind. The heart of Modernism is denial God's Word. By this denial one is stripped vision, wisdom, knowledge, and power. Dr
A. Johnston Ross, professor in Union Theo-ical Seminary of New York, is reported as ing rerently told a meeting of ministers at ladelphia that he was asked the question his students, "What can the minister real hope to accomplish in the world as it ac-lly is today?'' These students had been filling pulpits about New York, and, in an informal meeting with Dr. Ross, they asked him to ask the Philadelphia ministers, alumni of their seminary, "to tell us what it's all about—what we really can make of our lives as ministers.'' The replies were as pathetic as the question. For example, "The minister's foremost task is to teach what are the real values.'' Apparently neither the students, nor their professor, nor the minister-alumni, knew that Christian ministers have the Gospel of eternal life, salvation from eternal death, to offer a lost world, through the Good News of the death and resurrection of the Son of God. The blind, pathetic question of those misled theological students could not be heard in any of the Bible institutes of our land, nor in the theological seminaries that are still believing and teaching the Word of God. Nor could we conceive of the question being asked by students in a medical school, "What can the physician really hope to accomplish in the world today?'' Medical students have settled that before they commence studying for their profession. And their faculties leave them in no doubt as to the answer. Similarly as to lawyers, architects, musicians,—every profession but that of the blinded, befogged, barren ministry of Modernism knows what it is commissioned to do. The New Testament gives a full and clear answer to their question,—but their New Testament is no longer to them the Word of God, but only a groping attempt to discover truth by men as uncertain as themselves. Would that Christ's word to the church in apostasy might be heard: "I counsel thee to anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.''—S. S. Times.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Martin Alexander Lineberry.

It was with sad hearts when we learned of our dear Uncle's death, February 28, 1926.

He had been in poor health for quite a while but he bore his suffering with patience and ever had a cheery word and a smile for every one.

When very young he united with the church and there remained a faithful member until he was called home. His neighbors, friends and relatives will greatly miss him as he lived a pure, noble Christian life, and was ever ready and willing to do his part.

The funeral service was conducted at the Tabernacle Church, Monday, March 1st at 2 o'clock by Rev. E. Suit, Dr. T. M. Johnson and Rev. W. F. Ashburn. Interment was made in the church cemetery.

Our hearts are sad and lonely because of his going but his noble Christian life he leaves behind will enable each of us to strive harder to meet him in the home beyond. Many times we do not understand just why things are so but we realize and know our Heavenly Father never makes a mistake and does all things for the best, and even tho' the little home circle will not be complete since he has gone we do not need to worry and shed tears, as we know all is well with him and that he is free from the toils and cares of this world.

May each of us be faithful and true and meet him in the home beyond and there be able to make the golden chain larger and brighter by the good we have done here on earth.

Mrs. John Sharpe, Jr.

The Bethesda community was greatly shocked when Mrs. I. Y. Clodfelter suddenly passed away. We will miss her in the church, for she was always there when she could come, and always took part when she could in the work of the church.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to Brother Clodfelter in the passing of a faithful wife and loving mother, and may he have the faithful companionship of Jesus to brighten up his lonely pathway, One who is nearer than all to us.

Funeral service was conducted by R. S. Troxler assisted by Rev. S. B. Wilson, of Winston-Salem, N. C.

The body was laid to rest in Bethesda cemetery.

The sketch that follows was prepared by one who knew her in her girlhood days, Rev. S. B. Wilson.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Mrs. I. Y. Clodfelter was born in Wake County, December 10, 1861, being the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Bailey. At the close of the War between the States her father sold his property in Wake County and moved to Davidson County into the Bethany neighborhood. The subject of this sketch was known by the young people as Mary Bailey. She spent her girlhood days in a beautiful happy home with her brothers and sisters, attending church and school as opportunity afforded itself. Her girlhood days are remembered by those who knew her with much pleasantness. She was loved and admired by those who knew her for deep piety and gentleness. She had complete self possession.

She became the affectionate wife of Mr. I. Y. Clodfelter. This happy marriage was blest with two sons, Cyrril and Lloyd, the former of Roanoke, Va., and the latter of the home community, Bethesda.

She loved her church and did much for its development. Her love and loyalty for her home and community are not surpassed.

She was a good home builder, house keeper and faithful wife.

She loved her home and family and community. She did not speak evil of people. Her comment was in terms of praise. The aid and assistance given the needy are to be commended.

Mrs. Clodfelter's brothers are W. D. Bailey of Arbuckle California, J. T. Bailey of the Bethany neighborhood. Her sisters are Mrs. J. A. Tussey of High Point and Mrs. S. B. Wilson of Winston-Salem. Her father and mother and two brothers preceded her to the glory world. Mrs. Clodfelter was 64 years two months and 10 days old at the time of her death. February 20, 1926.

The Life Beautiful.

Robert Christopher Pickens.

He slippit awa, and yet he left us much,
The warmth o' his smile, the dear strength of his touch,
The old, solemn beauty of a life lived dear and grand,
Of white shining purpose fashioned for tha' great land,

Of courage, patience, stong, god-like, divine
Of manner, gracious, friendly wondrous kind
Laughter deep and rich, the glad sensitive o
those years,
And all his world, knew the quick sympath
of tears,
All his world knew the stern honor of his code,
Rugged unknown, here, but the rewarding ange
there,
His legends forged, in the epic sublimely fair,
And I think those hymns he sang in the wate
of night,
Were hung gleaming stars upon some moun tain height,
The sick to comfort and lend cheer on thei
dark lone way,
To dream, to treasure—fold against thei
landscape gray,
Just slippit awa, and yet he left us much.
The warmth of his heart—fine sympathetic touch,
Just there beyond the blue for rest a quiet stay,
And then Ah, then we too shall smile and slip away.

Roberta Wallace Cobb.

Mrs. O. L. Thompson.

Caro Irene Thompson, wife of Ozzy L Thompson, was born February 17, 1891. Early in life Mrs. Thompson was converted to Christ and united with Orange Chapel Methodist Protestant Church. Although she and her husband had been living at Saxapahaw for a number of years, she still retained her membership at Orange Chapel. Her passing was a great shock to her friends and loved ones, for she was sick less than a week.

Mrs. Thompson was a sincere Christian woman, always willing to do what she could for the church, scarcely missing one of the mid-week services at the Saxapahaw church She is survived by a young husband and little son, two brothers, two sisters, and stepmother.

May grace be multiplied to Bro. Thompson and little son as they mourn the passing of wife and mother.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer at Clover Garden, M. E. Church, the burial place of the Thompson family, and the body was laid to rest in the church cemetery.

TODAY AND TOMORROW.

Part of today belongs to tomorrow, as the seed belongs to the sheaf, as the foundation belongs to the building. So today owes its best to tomorrow, for to do right today may ruin tomorrow: but the reverse is also true. Tomorrow cannot rob today. Time which does not run backward. Wash the foreboding and anxious thoughts, and fill the day with faithful work, with kindness and courage and honor; and the morrow will keep itself. Do your work in a complete, and make it a good, honest today when it comes.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Macedonia, Fallston Charge.—There is right much sickness in the community.

The Sunday school is still going, the attendance small, but would be better but for the number of our Sunday school helpers that are ill.

There are a number of cases of flu.

Mrs. Emma Cline, the primary teacher, and Miss Eula Cline, organist, were absent Sunday on account of flu.

Mr. Hoyle and wife are both sick and Mr. Hoyle's sister that has been staying there for a few weeks is now seriously ill. There is not much hope for her recovery.

There are still other cases that I haven't heard. I trust they can soon take their places in Sunday school again.

There are still others that are not ill but absent from choice.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gantt had the misfortune of losing their house and all its contents by fire the last week; the family were away from home at the time.

TWO EDITORS GONE ASTRAY.

Witness this:

The Methodist Protestant in an editoral last week said: "We are a layman's church, and yet we get less service out of our laymen than any church we know." To those who think that the way to get greater service out of the laymen is to give them a more conspicuous part in church government, the foregoing statement should give pause, if not a jolt. Those who are constantly demanding more legislation for the layman might do well to give heed to the Methodist Protestant.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

The first editor makes a disaparaging remark about the laymen of the Methodist Protestant Church that he could not possibly prove. How can he know how much personal service the laymen of his church are rendering in their respective communities? He may know how much money they put into the denominational chest, but this is by no means a sure index of the total amount of service rendered. And in order rightly to appraise the money offerings to the denomination, one needs to know how much has been left. The widow gave two mites, but it was more than all the great offerings of the rich, because it was all her living.

Is it a slight service that the laymen of the Methodist Protestant Church have rendered in successfully maintaining against great odds for a hundred years a protest against the effort to impose a form of papacy on Protestantism in America?

But even if that first editor knew that he was telling the truth in that disparaging remark, it was an error to make the remark to the public. That is not the best way to induce Methodist Protestant laymen to do better.

The second editor goes still farther astray The conclusion he suggests is not warranted by the premises, assuming the premises true. If the laymen of the Methodist Protestant Church render less service than others, is it because they are enfranchised? Do people generally do less because responsibility is put upon them? Is the Methodist Protestant Church the only laymen's church? How about the Presbyterian and the Baptist and the Congregationalist churches? Are not they laymen's churches? And do not some of these churches render an amount of service greater per man than that rendered by the churches whose laymen have not yet been fully enfranchised?

In estimating the value of the service of churches, quality is to be considered as well as quantity. A man can draw five hundred pounds and a mule can draw five thousand pounds But it is commonly believed that it is better to be a man than a mule.

—We had a call on Monday from Bro. A. E. Williams, purchasing agent for a High Point silk mill. Though he lives in High Point, he superintends the Sunday school at Giles Chapel, Richland circuit. His faithfulness to his home church is commendable.

—Last week's Recorder contained the report of the General Conference Commission on the location of Adrian College. The report recommends that the location be unchanged and that an effort be made to add $500,000 to the endowment fund and that $350,000 be raised to put the buildings in good condition.

—Prof. L. B. Hull was chairman of this commission. This week's Recorder will contain a report of his unexpected death. He was a son-in-law of Dr. S. K. Spahr, of Greensboro, who was called last Sunday to go to Pittsburgh to attend the funeral. How uncertain is life!

—Rev. O. C. Loy should be addressed at Jamestown, N. C. He was reported ill last Sunday. We trust he will soon be out again.

—Great preparation is being made in Greensboro for the Stephens revival meetings to begin the night of the second Sunday in April. A great tabernacle is being built on Greene street and prayer meetings are being held in many homes in the city.

—Next week will come the annual drive for the community chest in this city. The goal set this year is $100,000.

—Federal Judge Knox, of New York, issued ten padlock decrees March 4 against night clubs, restaurants and speak-easies alleged to have violated the Volstead act. In each case wherein the defendant made a contest the padlock decree was for one year. Those places which consented to padlocks will be closed for six months.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic for Sunday, April 11th: "How can we show our Christian Love?" 1 Cor. 13:1-13; Matt. 25:40.

Plan for the Meeting.

A week in advance, assign each verse of the scripture lesson to some member of the society and ask that each prepare a short talk on his verse. In the meeting, have the leader read a verse and the person to whom this verse was assigned will add a few comments. Use this method throughout the entire scripture reading.

Ask each member to relate an anecdote or story illustrating the power or the results of love, either from their own observation or experience or from their reading.

In your open discussion, think of ways in which Christians may show their love to members of their own families, to members of their church, to people in the community who are not church members, to the wayward, to foreigners, to the needy of other lands.

Suggested Hymns.

Appropriate Hymns for this meeting are: "How sweet, how heavenly is the sight" (No. 425 in the M. P. Hymnal); "Help us to help each other, Lord" (No 432); "Blest be the tie," (No. 429): and "When Love shines in."

Make a Poster.

Make a large poster advertising this meeting, by placing at the top of your sheet or piece of card-board in large letters and in parentheses Drummond's famous phrase, "The Greatest Thing in the World" Then in smaller letters underneath announce that this will be the subject of several short addresses in your Christian Endeavor Meeting, giving the time and place. If you can secure from some magazine or other source a striking picture of home life that exemplifies love and fellowship, place it in your poster. It will draw attention and add attractiveness to your poster. ALWAYS ILLUSTRATE YOUR POSTERS WHEN YOU CAN DO SO.

Creswell.—Creswell held its regular third Sunday services both morning and noon.

We had a splendid congregation for both sermons considering the weather.

The whole circuit was very pleased to have Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon visit our work.

We had Dr. and Mrs. Dixon with us the second Sunday night. Dr. Dixon talked to us about our college and college work, after which Mrs. Dixon delivered a sermon which was enjoyed by all. The Sunday School Convention was also very glad to have Mrs. Dixon made an address on, "The Organization of the Primary Department. Louise Hatfield.

NEWS NOTES ON MEN'S WORK.

A thrilling report was given to the joint meeting of the Executive and General Committees of the Men's Church League on February 19, by Mr. Thos. D. Taylor of Philadelphia. During the past 25 days, Mr. Taylor had personally led 162 persons to sign cards expressing their purpose to confess Crrist as their Lord and Savior and to unite at once with the Church of their choice. Twenty-three of these were led to this decision in one evening's work, on February 18, between 5 P. M. and 11 P. M. About 80 percent of these and others reached thus far in this organized visitation campaign, had never before made any public confession of Christ.

Ten churches in one district in Philadelphia have cooperated in this campaign of organized visitation evangelism. No extra meetings have been held except for the workers. They have met each evening for supper at one of the churches and gone out at once after supper to spend the evening visiting people in their homes. Over 100 persons were led to decision as the result of the first five evenings of visitation. Practically all of the work has been done by laymen, going for the most part two by two.

This campaign was led by Dr. A. Earl Kernahan, of West Somerville, Mass. His method is described in a book he has written entitled "VISITATION EVANGELISM," published by Fleming H. Revall, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York at $1.25. He points out in this book some of the weaknesses of MASS MEETING EVANGELISM, and also of PASTORAL EVANGELISM, and stresses the great power and effectiveness of organired VISITATION EVANGELISM by laymen.

The joint Executive and General Committee of the Men's Church League was profoundly impressed with the immense possibilities of this type of evangelism. The whole plan seems to hook and eye into the group fellowship plan of the Men's Church League. It is hoped that Dr. Kernahan may be free at an early date to cooperate with the Men's Church League in a community-wide campaign, looking toward an organized personal visitation of every home and every person in the community, with an earnest invitation to accept and confess Jesus Christ as personal Lord and Savior. Why should any community in North America be longer unevangelized? The gospel of Christ could be intelligently presented to every person in the United States and Canada inside of thirty day, if the laymen of the churches could be led generally to undertake such organized personal visitation. Millions of persons are only awaiting a sincere personal invitation, in order to ally themselves definitely as disciples of Christ and members of His church.

In South Brooklyn, on February 16th, at a joint meeting of the pastors and laymen of four churches of four denominations,—Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist and Reform—it was decided to organize small interdenominational groups of men, to make an organized personal visitation of the homes in their section of Brooklyn. This action was suggested by the Rector of the Episcopal Church, who urged that every group have upon it at least two men from each of the four churches cooperating. The primary effort of all these groups is to lead people into relations of personal allegiance to Christ, and then into the church of their own preference.

MONTREAL PRESBYTERY of the United Church of Canada, with about 100 separate congregations, has officially voted: "That the United Church of Canada cooperate with the Men's Church League in its campaign to have Wednesday night set apart as 'Church Night' in North America, and that an effort be made to concentrate on that night all the adult spiritual and business meetings of the week." Also, "That in order to vitalize more fully all departments of church activity, there be formed in each congregation, and under ministerial leadership, fellowships of men having common interests, to whom shall be committed some definite service for the advancement of the Christianizing the different areas of life."

Mr. R. Walton Nading, a real estate man, at Winston-Salem, N. C. and a member of the General Committee of the Men's Church League, reports: "Until about 8 months ago, I was one of the 'cold storage' Christians. Since that time I have been interested in the Evangelistic Club work and am getting more pleasure out of it than I have ever experienced. Our club has seen about 3000 people accept Christ as their Savior,—a great many of whom were the worst drunkards, gamblers etc. and now they are going night and day testifying what Jesus has done for them. I was elected Vice President of the Club and also Captain of Team 8. There have been converted at our meetings about 300 souls. We are trying to win old Winston-Salem for Christ."

TWO INTERESTING EDUCATIONAL ITEMS.

World's Work magazine calls attention to the progress of education during the past twenty-five years in Louisiana, the state in which opposition to a free public school system has been very strong. "In 1900, the value of all school property (for white children) in the state was $2,150,000. There are many high schools in the country which cost more than this. At that time 38.5 percent of the state's population was illiterate—17.3 percent of the white population and 61.1 percent of negroes."

"In twenty-five years," the editorial goes on, "a miracle has been wrought. Both white and black illiteracy has dropped to nearly half of what it was in 1900. And, as illiteracy is a measure more of past neglect than of present practice, it is fairer to look at some other indications of progress.

"In 1900, the state spent $1,180,000 on education. In 1925, it spent $20,631,000. The value of school property had risen from $2,150,000 to $40,799,000. So much for the money side. In human terms the improvement is as marked. The school session is now 170 days instead of the 120 twenty-five years ago; and the children are now taught by a teaching force 70 percent of which have a college or normal school training, while twenty-five years ago 70 percent of the teachers did not have a normal or college training. While in 1900 expenditures for education were only 85 cents per capita, the figure was raised to $11.03 last year; in similar fashion, the ratio of expenditure to wealth has jumped from 0.2 to 1.3 percent."

This is described as nothing less than a "veritable revolution" in educational effort and achievement. It certainly makes Louisiana "look good."

Of equal interest to what World's Work says about education in a newly awakened southern state is what it has to say concerning a new departure in methods of instruction at Harvard university. "President Lowell of Harvard," it says, "has developed a system of instruction in college which holds promise of being one of the greatest events in American education."

"Undergraduates at Harvard have always had advisers," the editorial continues. "In recent years assistants in the different courses have watched the students more closely to see that they understood and did their work—something like the preceptorial system at Princeton. This means that Harvard, like all the other colleges, has been stiffening its requirements.

"But the tutorial system is something altogether apart from that. It does not concern itself with seeing that a young man learns the facts that are given in a lecture course. It says to him this: 'You have elected to major in one subject, say English literature. very well, we shall give you as a tutor a man who can lead you pleasantly and profitably in that field. He will show you how to get the most from lectures, from the library,, from all the resources of the University. If your tutor sees that you are in earnest, you will be relieved of the usual attendance requirements and other evidences of the necessity of driving you to work.'

"The whole system is based upon the idea that the men in college would like to grasp a subject. It differs from the old conception that they did not want to master a subject but could, by attendance marks and penalties, be made to do so. Now the cheerful fact is, that as soon as good leadership is provided, the students show a keenness for work, an intellectual curiosity, and a joy in exercising their brains. Forty-two percent of the junior classes at Harvard are 'candidates for distinction,' that is, they are trying for honors under a tutorial system in preference to trying merely to pass under the old system. At present both go along side by side. A boy can study under either system, but that will not be true long.

"The 42 percent who are in the tutorial system contains far more than 42 percent of the leadership of the two upper classes. The men who make undergraduate opinion are now for the tutorial system and an education. If the promise of this condition is fulfilled, Harvard College will have made a most important addition to the practice of college teaching and restored itself to the position of a ational college by reason of its excellence and n spite of its location.

"But this advance will not reach its goal
nless there is more money spent upon it than Harvard College now has to spend. Quantity roduction of college graduates is a fairly heap proceeding. We have been turning them ut in great numbers in this country. But to each men as individuals costs money—more oney than America has been willing to pay.
he question is whether the money will be orthcoming to support this improvement at arvard and advances of a similar nature that e being tried at Swarthmore and Dartmouth.
will be interesting to see whether the coun-
y in general believes in individual instrucon enough to pay adequately for this most opeful step in education."

Isn't this applying, in the sphere of educaon, what we have always known? In the prouction of certain manufactured goods, hand-polishing" is far better than machine ork; and as to peaches and apples, "handcked" fruit is best. "Fewer and better chilen" is a slogan that seems to fit in well with ese facts; as does the idea that parents ould live intimately with their children, in-iring them to do their highest and best.

JESUS THE PERFECT MAN.

There is no other character like that of Jesus.

As a preacher, as a doer of things, and as a philospher, no man ever had the sweep and the vision of Jesus.

A human analysis of the human actions of Jesus brings to view a rule of life that is amazing in its perfect detail.

The system of ethics Jesus taught during His earthly sojourn 2,000 years ago was true then, has been true in every century since and will be true forever.

Plato was a great thinker and learned in his age, but his teachings did not stand the test of time. In big things and in little things time and human experience have shown that he erred.

Marcus Aurelius touched the reflective mind of the world, but he was as cold and austere as brown marble.

The doctrine of Confucius gave a great nation moral and mental dry rot.

The teachings of Buddha resulted in mental and moral chaos that makes India derelict.

Mohammed offered a system of ethics which was adopted by millions of people. Now their children live in deserts where once there were cities, along dry rivers, where once there was moisture, and in the shadows of gray, barren hills, where once there was greenness.

Thomas Aquinas was a profound philosopher, but parts of his system have been abandoned.

Francis of Assisi was Christlike in his saintliness, but in some things he was childish.

Thomas A. Kempis' Imitation of Christ is a thing of rare beauty and sympathy, but it is, as its name indicates, only an imitation.

Sir Thomas More's Utopia is yet a dream that cannot be realized.

Lord Bacon writing on chemistry and medicine under the glasses of the man working in a twentieth century laboratory is puerile.

The world's most learned doctors until a hundred and fifty years ago gave dragon's blood and the ground dried tails of lizards and shells of eggs for certain ailments. The great surgeons a hundred years ago bled a man if he were wounded.

Napoleon had the world at his feet for fourteen years, and when he died the world was going on its way as if he had never lived.

Jesus taught little as to property because He knew there were things of more importance than property. He measured property and life, the body and soul, at their exact relative value. He taught much as to character, because character is of more importance than dollars.

Other men taught us to develop systems of government. Jesus taught so as to perfect the minds of men. Jesus looked to the soul, while other men dwelt on material things.

After the experience of 2,000 years no man can find a flaw in the governmental system as outlined by Jesus.

Czar and kaiser, president and socialist give to its complete merit their admiration.

No man today, no matter whether he follows the doctrine of Mills, Marx or George as to property, can find a false principle in Jesus' theory of property.

In the duty of a man to his fellows no socio'ogist has ever approximated the perfection of the doctrine laid down by Jesus in His Sermon on the Mount.

Not all the investigation of chemists, not all the discoveries of explorers, not all the experiences of rulers, not all the historical facts that go to make up the sum of human knowledge in this day are in contradiction to one word uttered or one principle laid down by Jesus.

The human experiences of 2,000 years show that Jesus never made a mistake. Jesus never uttered a doctrine that was true at the time and then became obsolete.

Jesus spoke the truth; He lived the truth: and truth is eternal.

History has no record of any other man leading a perfect life or doing everything in logical order. Jesus is the only person whose every action and whose every utterance strike a true note in the heart and mind of every man born of a woman. He never said a foolish thing, never did a foolish act and never dissembled.

No poet, no dreamer, no philosopher loved humanity with the love that Jesus bore toward all men.

Who, then, was Jesus?

He could not have been merely a man, for there never was a man who had two consecutive thoughts absolute in truthful perfection.

Jesus must have been what Christendom proclaims Him to be—a divine being—or He could not have been what He was. No mind but an infinite mind could have left behind those things which Jesus gave to the world as a heritage.—Selected.

Now General Li has "turned the tables." He has recaptured Tientsin and forced Feng's army to retreat toward Peking.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

When the notes for Herald were finished last Monday we were in Henderson with Dr. Sexsmith and Bro. Little for an afternoon and evening meeting.

There were only a few present for the afternoon meeting, but the evening meeting was more largely attended and the workers present were thoroughly interested.

Rev. R. A. Hunter, the new pastor, is getting into the swing of things and is much appreciated by his people in Henderson. It is always delightful to mingle with the people of Henderson, and to speak to them. Many faces of other days are missed in the congregations there now, but the new faces are taking their place.

Burlington.

We drove from Henderson to Burlington in time for the evening meeting on Tuesday. This proved to be our most largely attended meeting during the week. Five pastors were present in this meeting with representatives from their charges. Other pastors would have been present but for sickness. And a goodly delegation was present from Liberty. In this meeting there was a splendid showing of Sunday school officers and teachers. This was a fine meeting.

Bro. Taylor and his people are planning to build soon. They have not yet fully determined what they will do, but will propably build a new Sunday school unit to which a new church auditorium may be attached later.

Greensboro.

Our meeting for Wednesday evening was in Greensboro, and was held in the Grace church hut.

Four pastors of the district were present and Rev. W. F. Kennett pastor of Granville charge was in the meeting. Also Dr. J. F. McCulloch, and Rev. T. F. McCulloch.

This was a well attended, enthusiastic meeting. It was a pleasure to speak to such an interested group.

Asheboro.

On Thursday evening we were in Asheboro. Three pastors, and Rev. J. F. Dosier were in this meeting, with their representatives. This was a good meeting and those present showed great interest in the work. Dr. Sexsmith held a splendid after-conference in which many questions were asked concerning the betterment of the work.

Bro. Pritchard is back in his home town but he is a new pastor on this charge. He is loved and appreciated by his people. He and his people are laying splendid plans for the work, and we predict a good year for them.

F

Winston.

Friday evening found us in Winston-Salem with Rev. C. M. Compher and his people together with two other nearby pastors with their representatives. This meeting was fairly well attended and those who were there were very interested listeners. Bro. Compher is new here, and is just getting well started. We heard several very kind expressions relative to his work. The people here are thinking of building within the near future. Their plans are not matured yet, but they are looking forward to better things.

Concord.

Here, Dr. Sexsmith and I only stopped long enough to eat supper and visit a bit with Mr. D. A. McLaurin and his good wife. Our director, Rev. Lawrence Little, planned this stop. We enjoyed the visit, but of course had no chance on so short a stop to learn much about the church work. Bro. Little remained in Concord for the morning service, while Dr. Sexsmith and I went on to Charlotte. We did learn that they are still planning for a better church building in Concord. We trust that the dear Lord will speedily lead them into the building of an adequate plant in which to worship and to serve Him.

Charlotte.

We reached Charlotte Saturday night and found the pastor and his wife rejoicing over the fact that their congregation had just cleaned up all indebtedness on the church building. We had the pleasure of joining with them in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" on Sunday morning after the pastor had announced that the church was clear of debt. It must feel good to them to be clear of debt. We hope they will soon go in debt again to build a parsonage.

Rev. Robert Short was in this meeting with his representatives from Mecklenburg Circuit. And two of our laymen from Roberta were present. We had a splendid meeting in Charlotte.

Lexington.

By driving rather rapidly we were able to get back to Lexington in time for a four o'clock meeting. Three pastors and Rev. C. B. Way were in this meeting. Also a number of people from South Davidson, North Davidson and Thomasville besides a goodly number of the Lexington people.

It was delightful to stop here for this brief meeting. Bro. Bethea's congregation and Sunday school have outgrown the room they have and if they continue to grow they must have more room soon, so they are laying their plans to build the Sunday school unit of their new church.

High Point.

Our last meeting of this service was held in our First Church High Point. The largest crowd of our rounds greeted us here. There were three pastors present. Also Dr. Andrews, Prof. Hardy and a large group of the college students. Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk was also present. This was a fine meeting, and all present seemed to enjoy it. Thus ended a tour of a little more than two weeks in which we traveled nearly 1200 miles by automobile and attended twenty-four meetings, and spoke many times to the people.

We believe that the coming of Dr. E. A. Sexsmith to our conference for the eight day trip with us in the interest of our young people will mean much.

We thank Bro. Little for planning these meetings, and we thank all those who helped to make them a success, and we thank Dr. Sexsmith for his help.

Bro. J. A. Cox, of Calvary church, was surprised last night, returning home from prayer meeting, to find his house full of people, his neighbors and friends. It was his birthday and they had planned to give him a surprise party. The evening was spent very pleasantly in conversation and witnessing some amusing contests. Mr. C. P. Barrett told some stories of courtship days which provoked laughter, though they were hardly believed to be true. Mrs. Cox served delightful refreshments. Pastor Derringer led in a song of Christian fellowship, and the evening closed with a prayer and a wish that Bro. Cox may have many more birthdays. He has entered upon his second half century, but does not look it.

Mrs. Lineberry.

At the age of seventy-five years Mrs. Martha Lineberry died from paralysis Tuesday night, March 16th, at twelve o'clock. Mrs. Lineberry was one of Randleman's best and most beloved women. "Her days were happiest when they were busiest, and her life was an inspiration and a joy to those whose good fortune it was to know her."

The funeral service was held from Mt. Lebanon M. P. Church 2 P. M., March 18. She had been a member here practically all her life, and was justly regarded as one of the church's most loyal and best.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. Mr. Barber of the M. E. Church Randleman.

OUR TASK AND OUR PRIVILEGE.

A number of pastors have asked that the amounts sent through the Women's Societies be reported from week to week in the Herald as the other budgets are reported. The Branch treasurers are ready to help do this but they need help in getting the correct report for this conference year, as they do not know how much of the money sent to them since November 1st counted in last year's conference report. If the pastors and treasurers of the local auxiliaries will help the Branch Treasurers, Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Garrett, to get these reports started correctly by sending each a statement showing just how much of the money sent since November 1st counted on last conference report and how much count on the conference report for this year 1925 and 1926—we will get started on this. Send to Mrs. Garrett the statement for the W. H M. S. and to Mrs. Taylor the statement for the W. F. M. S. Please send these reports at once as we wish to get these reports started with April.

Burlington 1st, and Fountain Place were some way omitted from the list of those paying the college assessment in full last week. These two charges and High Point English St., and Asheboro report over the top this week on College assessment. Seven new charges reporting this week leaves just 18 to be heard from. Brother Pastor, is it your fault that your division of His army is lagging behind? Brother Layman, is it your fault that your charge is not in the forefront of the army?

OUR LAST LETTER BEFORE EASTER.

We have done our best in supplying all the churches of the denomination with the Easter Programs. In addition to sending out sample copies of the service to all pastors and Sunday School Superintendents, as far as we could reach them, we have addressed a letter to every pastor and sent many other letters and appeals. We have sent many personal letters appealing to pastors and churches to make special effort with the offering.

We have also sought the co-operation of the Annual Conference Presidents, and gladly bear testimony to the fine spirit shown, and the valuable services rendered by these brethren. Many of the Presidentse have made personal appeals to their pastors and churches to rally their forces for a great Easter Service.

We have also sent out many personal letters appealing to the pastors and churches to make a special effort with the offering. Some pastors have stated that for good and sufficient reasons they can not have the service but will take an offering. We most earnestly appeal to every pastor and church of the entire denomination to join in this. The fact that the offering may be small need not cause any one to decline to take it. Every dollar helps.

In conclusion I wish to request every pastor and Sunday School Superintendent to bear the christian greetings of the Board of Home Missions and the Secretary publicly to their churches and Sunday Schools and to express our grateful appreciation of their support of the work of the Board. Without their aid the Board can do but little, with it we can do great things for our Risen Savior in advancing His Kingdom on Earth.

I will be very thankful if the pastors and superintendents will drop me a line on the day following Easter stating the results of their efforts. We again greet our Methodist Protestant friends from east to west, from north to south, in the country town and city. And now all together for a successful Easter Service.

THE BIBLE HOLDS ITS OWN.

The Bible is still the world's best seller among books. The last year's output in 150 languages, was 9,059,120 volumes, which was 2,500,000 more than the previous year, and it was also the largest output of any year during which the American Bible Society has been in operation. The Bible is not only holding its own, but is increasing in popularity. There is another hopeful sign, too: men are not merely buying the book to ward off danger as the folks used to take rabbits' feet arornd with them, but they are reading the Bible. A part of this increased interest, some believe, may be traced to the great disputes concerning religion now tearing the churches in pieces. It is indeed an ill wind that blows no good. He makes the wrath of men to praise Him.—Christian Sun.

Notice to all W. F. M. S. and W. H. M. S. Auxiliaries: Elect delegates to attend the N. C. Branch meeting to be held in Community church, April 21 to 23, and send names and date of arrival to Mrs. J. W. Boyles, Thomasville, N. C.

The ladies of Flat Rock Woman's Home Mission Society held the regular monthly meeting, Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. T. P. Hester hostess.

Mrs. Hester conducted devotional after which roll was called, showing only one member absent.

The Treas. reported the Budget paid for this year, and $1.50 sent as special for Pine Ridge Work.

Secty, of Buds of Hope reported eleven members, all dues paid, and she has sent birthday greetings to them on their birthdays during year.

Nominating Com. then read their report which was adopted as follows: Pres.; Miss Mary V. White; Vice Pres., Miss Annie Satterwhite; Sec. and Cor. Sec., Mrs. B.W. Jones; Treas., Miss Hazel M. White; Secty., Buds of Hope, Mrs. F. M. White; Record Agt., Mrs W. B. Reavis. After new officers were elected we discussed plans for the new year. The first adopted was to double our Budget for next year. Another was, to appoint a Birthday Secretary to collect from each of our members a penny for each birthday passed at our regular monthly meeting of those having birthdays during the month.

Miss Rosa Satterwhite and Mrs. F. M White were elected delegates to Branch meeting. The Study Book was the main feature of our program as a chapter had been assigned to different members and each to tell the main teachings and ideas that might benefit our Society. This was enjoyed much more than when we had each chapter as a lesson.

The President read the short poem, Service by Edgar Guest.

Mrs. W. B. Jones, Mrs. B. W. Reavis and Miss Rosa Satterwhite were appointed to fill out program blanks for next year.

April meeting will be with Mrs. B. W Jones. District meeting was discussed, but we didn't make any plans, as so many others were interested (or should be) in it.

Meeting adjourned, after which the hostess served delicious refreshments, also mints.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

It is hard to go into Constantinople without a certain amount of prejudice, for after hearing so much of the unspeakable Turk you can not but have a feeling of suspicon for him. But after you talk with the "Young Turk" you cannot help but feel that he is not as blood-thirsty as he is painted.

I talked with the guide of our party and he seemed to be elated over the freedom that had come to them; for before this they were always afraid of their heads being taken off, for they were under absolute rule of the Sultan. The present ruler, however, is doing things that seem altogether foreign to them. One thing is that they do not have to wear a veil unless they wish. The "fez" has also disappeared. In fact we saw more of the "fez" in Egypt and Palestine than anywhere else.

I do not know whether they sleep in them in Cairo or not, but they never remove them for anything else. They keep them on in religious meetings, at the table and everywhere I saw them, I mean the men. We had to land in small boats in Constantinople which always takes lots of time. We had only one half day here and that was enough for most of us.

A hurried trip through the museum was interesting. There as in most of such places over here they show you a lot that has been taken from other lands. One great obelisk stands in one of the squares there taken from Egypt many years ago as also the serpentine column. The mosques here are very beautiful from the standpoint of architecture. St. Sophia, and the Blue Mosque were visited. The huge marble columns in the latter are wonderful. They are put up in sections and are about eighty feet in circumference, four of them. When you think of the poverty of the people and the amount spent in their temples of worship, you can see at once that they put us to shame in the amount spent for their religion compared with what they themselves use.

Roberts College, an American institution was visited by a number of our folks. I did not go as it required an extra trip with extra pay and as we were on our way to the Black Sea we passed the college where we could get a fine view of it that satisfied me. They were expecting us to pass and we could readily pick out the grounds before we got in full view by the waving of Old Glory, a sight which has a peculiar effect when you are in a strange land or on strange waters. We sailed through the sea of Marmora, Dardanells and Bosphorus on this trip to Constantinople. One cannot help but feel a thrill as the ship glides through the Dardanelles as the great loss of the British comes into mind caused by the campaign here to force these waters. Some of the vessels that were sunk by Turkish shells are still to be seen. It was here that Briton lost fifty four thousand of her men in this fruitless attempt. Yet while this was going on you remember that a British submarine went under all this and sunk a Turkish man of war in the Constantinople harbor and got away safely.

May I go back to a discussion of the new Turkish Government? We have been told that the authorities in the American Colleges there have been ordered not to so much as "say grace" at the table, and the President of Roberts College came on board and took dinner with us and Dr. Sheldon asked him to speak and he said he dared not do it because what he would say might be misconstrued. Not even to say publicly, "I thank you." They seem to be suspicious of everybody. Most criminals are suspicious and when you think of the slaughter that has been practiced by them on others, especially the Americans, no wonder they look with suspicion upon others.

We were told that they liked the Americans better than any other of the allies and that they did not like us any too well. But these very reforms that are taking place within the government let us hope and pray may mean the salvation of this nation that has the stain of innocent blood in many cases upon them. When you see the bright children and the activity in this great city of a million and a quarter of people you cannot help but wish for a better day.

It was interesting to go into the main Bazar section which covered many blocks and I do not know how much space. Here as elsewhere there was an eagerness to sell their wares which led them to come down in some cases to get you to buy. It is a great practice in the east to put goods up to twice as much as they expect to get. To get away from your guide in one of these places is a hazardous thing to do. Some three got away from our party and the guide had to return for them after placing the remainder in their cars.

I would like to give a more interesting account of this, one of the most attractive cities we have visited.

The minarets of the Mosques make an imposing sight from the boat and the slant of the hill as you enter the harbor shows the city up to great advantage.

Our next stop is at Athens. Since boyhood I have been anxious to see the sights of that wonderful place and possibly in my next I will have a more interesting story to tell.

LUTHERANS PROTEST PAPAL ENCYCLICAL.

The National Lutheran Council, meeting in plenary session, has issued a statement declaring Pope Pius XI to be in error in his December encyclical instituting the "Feast of Christ as King," and dissented strongly from the proposal of the Pope that Protestant churches participate in this festival. The representatives of American Lutheran bodies charged that not without cause was the Sunday near October 31st set as the date for the celebration of this Roman Catholic holiday, a day which for 400 years has been observed by Protestants throughout the world as Reformation Sunday. It was on October 31st, 1517, that the Reformation movement was started through the act of Dr. Martin Luther in nailing his famous Ninety-five Theses on the door of the castle church at Wittenberg.

The statement of the National Lutheran Council defined the Pope's December encyclical as one step in a great program to restore the rule of the Vatican over all Christian Protestants and over all civil governments.

The first Protestant group to take exception to the proclamation of December 11th, the National Lutheran Council, appointed a special committee who are to subject the encyclical to careful study, to communicate with all sections of Protestantism and to disclose what the Lutherans declare are subtle attacks on the doctrines of religion and the distinctive principles of secular freedom.

The following preliminary special statement on the encyclical was adopted unanimously:

"Lutherans Will Not Be Caught With The Pope's Bait."

"We have read with great interest the Encyclical Letter of Pope Pius XI given out on December 11th, 1925, in which, 'with Apostolic authority,' he instituted the Feast of our Lord Jesus Christ as King. This feast is to be celebrated 'every year and in all the world on the last Sunday of the month of October (that is, the one just preceding the celebration of all the saints.' He 'commands also that on that day each year be renewed the dedication of the human race to the most Sacred Heart of Jesus which our predecessor, Pius X, of holy memory, orders to be repeated each year.'

"It would seem almost a sacrilege to speak any word except in approval of such a feast and such a dedication. All true Christian desire to see Christ honored as King and pray that the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. And we would not utter a word of dissent were it not for certain statements in the Encyclical which are not true, which are sectarian in the worst sense, and which are uncharitable; and were it not for a fact which is obviously deeping and hostile to very large groups of Christians and to widely accepted views of Christian truth.

"The Pope does not express the truth for instance, at least not the whole truth, when he says that 'the Catholic Church'—meaning of course the Roman Catholic Church—'is the Kingdom of Christ on earth.' But that it is, or by right should be acknowledged as such by all baptized Christians, by all nations and governments, is clearly implied, if not definitely stated, throughout the Encyclical.

"In connection with this it must not be forgotten that the Pope sits with his triple crown as the 'Vicar of Christ' on the whole earth. There is no institution on earth, no person or order of persons, to whom we may point and say 'Here behold the Kingdom of Christ.' That Kingdom cometh not with observation. It is wholly spiritual. Wheresoever the Spirit of God is and works through the means of grace, leading men to faith in Christ, there is the Kingdom of Christ. To accept and celebrate this Feast of Christ as King in the very spirit of the Encyclical is at least tacitly to acknowledge all the pretensions of the Pope to temporal and universal sovereignty as Christ's Vicar. To keep it in any other spirit would not change in the least, in the eyes of the Pope, the status of those so observing it.

"The Pope just as evidently assumes that the church is none other than the Roman Catholic Church; and in so doing he would brand all Christians who are not his obedient subjects not only as heretics and sectarians but as guilty of having ,put Jesus Christ and His most holy law out of their ordinary life. their domestic relations, and public affairs,' and thus responsible for 'the deluge of evils' which has invaded the world. This is clear from his first paragraph and from his quotations from his predecessor Leo XIII. Thus he makes himself the Head and leader of the most sectarian of all the sects and acts very uncharitably.

"The designing spirit and hostile purpose of the Pope are unmistakably visible in the choice of the day upon which, every year, this feast is to be celebrated. He has not forgotten the strokes of the hammer which, on October 31, 1517, resounded throughout Europe and ushered in the day of freedom for Christ's people, when Luther nailed his famous Ninety-five Theses to the Church door in Wittenberg. It is the Reformation that is aimed at in this Encyclical. We may not say that the Pope is not sincere in his expressed desire to see Jesus Christ universally recognized as King over all people and things on earth; but there can be no doubt that he thinks, and perhaps sincerely, that the best way to bring this about is to counteract, as far as possible, the Reformation and the liberating truths of the Gospel which it restored to men. Therefore the day chosen by him for this newly established feast. It is on the 31st of October, or the Sunday last preceding that date, that we usually celebrate the festival of the Reformation; and this has been done by Lutherans in all lands for four hundred years. What a master stroke it would be if His Holiness could set up a festival that would be enthusiastically celebrated with 'manifold ceremonies of vener-tion' not only by Catholics but also by great multitudes of Christians calling themselves Protestants! But we, at least, will not be caught.

"The three great principles of Christianity which were restored by the Reformation, after centuries of obscuration, are the authority of the Holy Scriptures as the Word of God, justification by faith alone in Jesus Christ without man's righteousness and merit and the universal priesthood of believers. We hold that those who believe in Jesus Christ as their God and Saviour and who accept the great principles stated above together with their plain implications are truly in the Church and the Kingdom of Christ, and are His loyal subjects. We hold further that the best way for them to show that they indeed acknowledge Him as King is to lead holy lives in accordance with Hs Word.

"May we not commend to the consideration of all Protestants the question whether they will not more certainly honor Christ as their Saviour and King by faithfully adhering to the truth of the Gospel and conforming their lives thereto than by joining in the celebration of a mighty festival marked by 'magnificent processions' and outward 'ceremonies'?"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 11.

The Story of Creation.

Lesson Text: Gen. 1:1-3; 26-31.

Golden Text: Gen. 1:1.

The Central Truth: God made man in His own image of spirituality, intelligence, holiness, and eternity in order to promote His own glory in the heavens and in the earth.

Scriptural Points.

1. "In the beginning God" was the eternal, unchangeable, holy, and merciful Author of every atom of matter, every form of life, every display of goodness, and every purpose of might.

2. "In the beginning God created" the matter of the heavens and the earth. Afterward He formed this matter into heavenly bodies and into a million forms of vegetable and animal life.

3. "And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the water." God, as a Spirit, so moved, indicating His actual presence upon the scene of creation.

4. Out of the dark, deep, and formless mass of created matter God spoke, "Let there be light." And there was light. God's speech was His method of creation. Hear the Psalmist: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.....For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast. Ps. 33:69. This discards and repudiate the much-lauded method of evolution.

5. "Let us make man." This is the first assumption of Scripture that there are more than one Person in the Godhead. Each of the three Persons of the Godhead had a part in man's creation. God the Father, the Sovereign of Deity, made the proposition, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." God the Son, the Agent of Deity, "formed man of the dust of the ground." And God the Holy Ghost, the Lifegiver of Deity, "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

6. "Let them have dominion." Man was made to rule. Self-rule became his first duty a duty in the discharge of which he failed so disastrously. Anyone who cannot control himself is poorly equipped to rule the innocent birds and beasts. Sin made man a tyrant over the creation entrusted to his care. Wanton, sportive, and needless destruction of living creatures is a sinful violation of a sacred trust. As a result of centuries of tyranny the entire creation of fish, birds, and beasts stand in mortal fear of man.

7. In His covenant with Adam God put the race upon a strictly vegetable diet, as set forth in verse 29 of this lesson. In His covenant with Noah He added a meat diet without any restrictions: "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things." Gen. 9:3. In His covenant with Moses our benevolent Sovereign put many restrictions upon this meat diet. See Leviticus, 11th chapter.

8. "It was very good." This is God's just estimate of His own creation. All things created expressed the wise thought of God, the kind purpose of God, and the effulgent glory of God.

9. "And the evening and the morning were the sixth day." This is a plain statement that the universe was created in six days of twenty-four hours each, consisting of a forenoon and an afternoon.

Practical Points.

1. Creation has established God's right of ownership of all things. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein."

2. Redemption has reinforced this inalienable right. "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's.

3. To deny or ignore God's right of ownership is a grievous sin of rebellion. "He came unto his own (world), and his own (people) received him not." Such is the reception the Creator met with when he came into the world manifest in the flesh.

4. Consecration is simply putting God in possession of His own. "Yield yourselves to God." "Consecrate yourselves to day to the Lord, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day." Ex. 32:29.

PRAYER AND A CONVERSION.

By Rev. James H. Childs.

Into my first parish between forty and fifty years ago came a young man who had been an officer in the Civil War. He had been brought up as a Roman Catholic, but had lost all interest in that faith. We were holding a series of meetings, and a goodly number were turning to the Lord. This young man attended all of our meetings; and several among us took a deep interest in him, and did our utmost to persuade him to yield himself to Christ. Always willing to listen, always respectful, he yet kept putting off. We talked with him after every meeting, but seemed to make no progress. At length, at the close of one Sunday-evening service, I felt that there was no use in speaking to him any more; and so I went straight home without a word.

But I had no sooner entered the house than I felt moved to go into a certain dark room and pray for him. There I stood in the middle of the room, and felt myself constrained to agonize in prayer, as never before, for that lost soul. I prayed aloud, talking with the Lord as fast as I could speak. I felt that I could scarcely take the time to take my breath; for, if there should be a break of a fraction of a second in the stream of prayer, the devil would snatch that soul away, whereas, as long as the stream of prayer should be kept unbroken, that soul would be safe. I was utterly unconscious of the lapse of time. Later I found that between two and three hours had elapsed. I would ejaculate: "O God, Satan must not get him. Thou art almighty; don't let the devil get him," or words to that effect. I have no distinct recollection of the words I used; but God heard, and at length caused a strange calmness to come over my spirit. I praised the Lord, and went to bed.

In the morning I saw some one coming into the yard; and I opened the door at once, and exclaimed: "I know why you have come. You have come to tell me that —— has become a Christian."

"Yes," was the reply; "that is exactly what I came for. It was likethis: George went home and went to bed and fell asleep almost immediately. After a time he had a dream. He thought he was standing outside a railroad close beside a train which was just beginning to move. He felt that it was for some reason of the utmost importance that he should travel on that train, but he had no desire in that direction. Indeed, he felt utterly unwilling. The cars were moving more and more rapidly. Soon the last car was moving past him. Still he waited until the rear end of that last car was passing him, when he made a sudden and mighty effort, and was barely able to get hold of the iron railing and swing himself upon the lowest step while the train was moving with considerable speed. That was his dream. He then awoke immediately, and said to himself, 'That dream means that it is now or never for my soul.' He got up at once, kneeled down by the bedside, and made the surrender."

And it proved to be the case that the time when he made that surrender on his knees in that cold room at the midnight hour was the very time when calmness took possession of my spirit in my home more than three miles distant. The work of grace was thorough. God took from him instantly the appetite for tobacco. He lived only a few years longer, but during all the rest of his days his life was consistent and beautiful. He grew rapidly in grace and knowledge, and then went to be with Him whom, having not seen, he had learned to love so devotedly and to serve so faithfully.—Huntington, Mass.

Of Chicago,
National Eextension Secretary of Christian Endeavor.

ANNOUNCEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

Those of us who attended the 1925 Young People's Conference at High Point will remember with what regret we learned that Dr. Ira Landrith, who was to bring us three evening addresses, was detained in Chicago by the illness and death of Mrs. Landrith.

We are happy to announce that we have been able to secure him for one address, under the auspices of the Greensboro Christian Endeavor Union. The meeting will be held in Westminster Presbyterian Church, on Asheboro street, at 7:30 P. M., on Friday, April 9.

Dr. Landrith is a nationally and internationally known lecturer, journalist, educator, statesman, and religious leader. It is a rare opportunity to hear one of America's foremost orators. In the opinion of the editor, he is one of the greatest speakers on the American platform. The Endeavorers of Greensboro cordially invite all workers from the surrounding territory to attend this meeting and hear Dr. Landrith. Young and old are invited —admission free.

DON'T FORGET THE TIME AND PIACE: WESTMINSTER PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH FRIDAY NIGHT, APRIL 9th.

Great Series Of Young People's Meetings.

We concluded last Sunday night in High Point a great series of young people's rallies and mass meetings, with Dr. E. A. Sexsmith and Dr. A. G. Dixon as the speakers. The trip began at Enfield on Sunday, March 21st, and covering the following points in succession; Henderson, Burlington, Greensboro, Asheboro, Winston-Salem, Charlotte, Lexington and High Point.

Over 1200 people attended these meetings, with a splendid representation of pastors, Sunday school superintendents, teachers and officers, and Christian Endeavor leaders. Thirty- nine charges were represented by their pastors, or other leaders.

The Board of Young People's Work wish to take this method of thanking every pastor and leader who cooperated in making this series such a signal success. We believe it is going to mean much in our work for the young people of the church.

Dr. Sexsmith Outlines Program.

In his addresses, Dr. Sexsmith outlined a "Religious Educational Program for a Local Church." In a very splendid way, he defined the terms, "Religious Education" and spoke of the Program, the Organization, the Agencies of religious education.

Religious Education, he said, is the introduction of Christian control into life. He explained that religious education did not take the place of conversion—an individual act for which every person is responsible—but that it supplemented it and made it more natural and easy. Religious education is simply the preparation of the soil that fructifies in decision for Christ and in development of strong Christian characters.

The program of religious education must include worship, instruction and activity. Worship must be graded to fit the needs of the various age groups. Worship that exalts the adult will oftentimes be above the minds and capabilities of children and, for that reason, the church must work out a graded worship program that will include all groups.

The speaker lamented the fact that most of the program of the average Sunday school was almost entirely instruction and lacked any elements of activity and worship. He believed that the average program consisted of about seventy-five percent instruction, fifteen percent worship, and ten percent activity. "To be a well-balanced program," he said "all elements must enter in about the same proportion."

The agencies being used by Methodist Protestant Churches in working out an adequate religious educational program are: the Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor society Daily Vacation Bible Schools, and Week-Day Religious Instruction. The last two are rather new ventures in most of our churches, but ought to be developed to a much greater extent.

Dr. Sexsmith gave a splendid outline of the organization for religious education in a local church. He advocated a Committee on Religious Education, consisting of five or seven members, nominated by the pastor and the heads of the various organizations of the church and should have a Director of Religious Education, either paid or volunteer, who is responsible to the Committee and who will make it his or her business to study ways and means of improving the work in the local church.

Dr. Dixon Gives Inspiration Address.

Dr. Dixon in his very splendid way gave a message on "The Church and her Young People." He showed the importance of the church in this time and emphasized the necessity of our recognizing this importance in our attitudes and actions. On the other hand, he said, the young people are of utmost importance and value to the church. He related several striking illustrations to show the importance of young people in the local church program.

His story of the young man who is working in Winston-Salem and supporting a college chum and class mate in the foreign mission field is one that will stay in the minds of his hearers for a long time. Another story of a son of a leading minister of this country who is also working and supporting his younger brother in the foreign field made us all stop and wonder if we were not missing a wonderful opportunity in failing to raise our apportionments for the General Conference Budget He pointed out that most of us cannot be foreign, or even home, missionaries, but by supporting to the limit the benevolences of our denomination we are surely working through our representatives on these fields.

Other Features.

In addition to the addresses given by Drs. Sexsmith and Dixon, the facts concerning the Young People's Conference, to be held at High Point College, July 19-26. were presented and registrations received. Also mention was made of the International Convention of Religious Education, to be held in Birmingham, Alabama, April 12-19. It is hoped that North Carolina will have a large delegation at this convention.

Summer Conference Registrations.

A large number of registrations have been received for the Young People's Conference, but, for lack of room this week, they will be held until next week. IN THE MEANTIME WHY NOT SEND IN YOURS TO APPEAR WITH THE OTHERS? Registration fees are 25 cents for children and 50 cents for adults and go toward paving the expenses of our Conference. REGISTER WHETHER YOU CAN ATTEND OR NOT. Send fees to Lawrence Little, 310 Bellemeade Street, Greensboro, N. C.

RICHES AND HAPPINESS.

Riches alone do not make men happy or blessed. The brute qualities lead away from happiness. Most people are deluded with the idea that happiness consists in gratifying desires. They do not realize that "desire is as insatiable as the ocean, and clamors louder and and louder as its demands are attended to." Gratification, satisfaction of our selfish cravings, only increases our real soul hunger. Principle alone can give permanent happiness.

Human beings starve and pinch their lives and stunt their growth by their wrong attitudes toward life. They kill every joy and blight their happiness by their own envy, jealousy, and false ambition. The sight of other people's prosperity seems to kill their appreciation and the enjoyment of possessions.

To be happy, we must approve of ourselves: and there is something within us which always condemns the selfish act, as it does the sinful act. I have never known a greedy, grasping, selfish person to be happy. Where these propensities dominate in the nature, it is impossible for the things which create love to live. These rank, vulgar weeds will kill the more tender plants and flowers which radiate sweetness and beauty, contentment and happiness.

A man can never realize complete, abiding happiness until he gets into the current running heavenward, Godward, because everything on a material plane is transitory and in constant change.—Selected.

SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

The list of "the seven deadly sins," as set forth in mediaeval theology, has taken a firm hold on the imagination of the world. The number seven had a high place of honor in the Old Testament and during the Middle Ages things good and evil fell readily into groups of seven. There were "The Seven Sacraments of the Church," "The Seven Gifts of the Holy Spirit," and "The Seven Deadly Sins."

No one who has looked at Abbey's noble painting of the Seven Deadly Sins in the Boston Public Library will ever forget the power which it symbolizes the terrific reality of the moral struggle. The seven deadly sins of classic tradition portrayed there are pride, envy, anger, covetousness, gluttony, lust, and sloth. These sins are individualistic. They all have widespread and dire social consequences, but as is natural in any list drawn up in the Middle Ages, they are sins of the individual, personal life.

Canon Frederic Lewis Donaldson of Westminster Abbey set forth the other day a list of seven deadly sins of a more social character. It is a list of arresting significance to an age of complex social forces and relationships. The seven deadly social sins according to Canon Donaldson are these:

1. Policies without principles.
2. Wealth without work.
3. Pleasure without conscience.
4. Knowledge without character.
5. Commerce and industry without morality.
6. Science without humanity.
7. Worship without sacrifice.

With these, Canon Donaldson says, the passion for the accumulation of riches at all cost preferably without earning them, is a disease of the greater mass of the people today.

These seven social sins are worth long pondering. They call not only for a litany of petition but for one of action, which says both by prayer and struggle, "From these iniquities, good Lord deliver us."—Selected.

A BOY WHO KNEW HOW.

An American boy nineteen years of age once found himself in London, where he was under the necessity of earning his bread. He went straight to a printing office and inquired whether help was needed.

"Where are you from?" inquired the foreman.

"America," was the answer.

"Ah," said the foreman, "from America. Can you set type?"

The young man stepped to one of the cases and in a brief space set up this passage from the first chapter of John: "Nathaniel said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Phillip said unto him, Come and see."

It was done quickly, so accurately, and administered a delicate reproof so appropriate and powerful, that it at once gave him influence and standing with all the office. He worked diligently at his trade, refused to drink beer or any kind of strong drink, saved his money, returned to America, became a printer, publisher, author, postmaster general, member of Congress, signer of the Declaration of Independence, ambassador to royal courts and finally died in Philadelphia at the age of eighty four. There are more than one hundred and fifty counties, towns and villages in America named after this same printer boy—Benjamin Franklin.

DUSTING DONE FOR THE DAY.

Psst!

Peter turned to see three little Tiger Cubs merrily waving their tails.

"Look, Mother, look! The red ball is rolling up in the East!" cried the three little Cubs in chorus.

All the while that Mother Tiger had been talking, lighter and brighter had been growing the sky—and Peter had never noticed it at all.

"Sure enough, dawn is here!" growled Mother Tiger, and looked pleased. "A new day in which to work a little, play a little and be happy in. Come, children, don't let the rising sun find us with mussed fur and straggly whiskers!" Mrs. Tiger set to work to wash her face and hands.

"Ker-choo!"

Suddenly the clear morning air became heavy. Something flew into Peter's eyes, up his nose, into his mouth. He sneezed, once, twice, and again.

Peter wiped his eyes, sneezed a fourth time, and, looking about turned to ask Mother Tiger if she knew what was choking him, when he caught sight of the three little Cubs. And then he didn't need to ask that question.

Three little Cubs were rolling over and over and over in the road, scratching and scraping and kicking up their legs in great glee and stirring up a cloud of dust that almost hid them from the boy. And it was the dust they kicked up that had flown into Peter's throat.

"Good gracious, stop them!" Peter grumbled. "Why are they making such a mess? Doesn't that dust bother you, Mrs. Tiger? Aren't they getting dirty?"

Mrs. Tiger chuckled.

"The children are getting clean—taking their morning bath, Two-Legs. Be a little Cub ever so neat, horrid little insects will hop in his fur. He can't dig them out, he can't wash them off, and so he rolls in the dust and rubs them off that way. Let 'em alone—they'll soon be tired and glad to stop. There! Now they are going to have a game of 'I Spy!'!"

DYING RICH.

When John Wesley died he left as his heritage a half a dozen silver spoons and the Methodist Church. Not a little of the success of Methodism has been due to the disinterestedness of its founder. Millions in money had passed through Wesley's hands, during the long and arduous years of his ministry, but it all passed through. None of it stuck to his fingers. Methodism has a tremdous argument for Christian stewardship ready at hand in the example of John Wesley.

Another great preacher who passed away recently has left a rich heritage to posterity. We refer to Russell H. Conwell, whose sole estate appears to have been a $3,000 life insurance policy left to his widowed daughter. Dr. Conwell, for many years perhaps, was the most popular lecturer on the American platform. His masterpiece "Acres of Diamonds," was delivered over 6,000 times and the lecturer was usually given a fair recompense for his services. Dr. Conwell earned and distributed millions of dollars during his life-time but kept none of the money for himself. Hence, like Wesley, he died poor. Examples like these are more potent than the most eloquent sermons upon the Christian use of money. We do not instance these two illustrious preachers because their history is exceptional in the annals of the ministry. Few preachers accumulate money or care to do so. Nevertheless it is doubtful whether many men in other professions whose legitimate earnings were as great as were those of Wesley and Conwell would have kept so little for their own personal use. The power of these men as preachers arose largely from the fact that they made their preaching real by carrying out their ideals in the business relations of their lives. —Christian Sun.

—In 1874 the famous Dr. Osler examined two of his friends for life insurance. The one now surviving was refused insurance because of valvular lesion of the heart.

—That women be admitted to the ministry in Scotland was a resolution approved by the Presbytery of Hamilton, Lanarkshire.

WHEN TED HAD HIS DAY.

Ted Hastings yawned several times, then he looked out of the window; and, seeing that the sun had not yet risen, he turned over and went to sleep again.

A little later he was awakened by his mother's voice calling up the stairway.

"Are you up, Ted?" she said. "This is your day, and you'll want the whole of it."

Every now and then, during the summer Ted's father and mother set aside one day in which he could do just as he pleased; and they could trust him to use it in the right way, for he understood that he was to regard their wishes on that day, as on all others, only it meant that he had more time for himself on that one day.

"A fine day for fishing," he said to himself as he went downstairs, for it was just a little cloudy, and the fish always bit better on cloudy days.

"Father had to go to the office a little earlier," said his mother, "so I ate breakfast with him; but I kept yours hot, and after you eat it, I'd like you to do an errand for me which father forgot. It is the grocery order and won't take long."

Ted smiled. "All right, mother; write it out, and I'll take it over. I'm going fishing with Edward and David at nine o'clock. May I have a lunch to take along with me? For I may not get back until late this afternoon."

A little later he took two baskets from his mother and hurried to the store.

The grocer was fond of Ted, for he was a manly little fellow. So he called out, "Hello Ted: what's your hurry?"

"Going fishing," replied Ted, "and I want to meet the boys at nine o'clock, for this is my day."

Several customers in the store exchanged glances. "Guess it's the little chap's birthday," said an elderly man.

As Ted passed down the street to his home he heard some one call. There at Howard Shaff's door was Howard's mother.

"Oh, Ted," she said, "will you get the doctor for me? The baby is sick, and I'm alone."

It did not take Ted long to get the doctor and he was glad to help Mrs. Shaff.

As he hurried home with his basket, he said to himself, "Good thing I made an early start."

When he reached his own gate, he met an old man who said to him, "Little boy, will you tell me where Squire Johns lives?"

"Oh, yes," said Ted; "it's about five blocks from here."

"Is it that far?" said the old man. "I got off the car at the wrong street, and I can not see very well."

"Wait until I put my basket away and I'll take you there," said Ted as he ran toward the kitchen to hand it to his mother. "I have to show this old man the way to Squire Johns' house," he said, and his voice trembled a little, for he was pretty sure he would miss the boys; but he belonged to the Boy Scouts and could not miss an opportunity to do a kindness for any one.

When he returned from Squire Johns' house, it was half-past nine; but he saw the boys in the square waiting for him. He was about to join them when he heard voices, and then two friends of his mother's passed him and one was saying to the other: "Jamie Clark's father and mother were sent for to go to the hospital at Skernsburg today, and they had to leave him all alone, poor little soul, an he's lame from a fall. I wish we could find some one to amuse him until they come back."

They passed on without noticing Ted, and he crossed the street to his companions.

"I'm sorry I kept you waiting, boys, but I find I can't go, after all, even if it is my day."

"Oh, Ted, you'll miss it!" they exclaimed.

"I know," he replied. "But here comes Tom Hatz; he can go in my place, and I'll tell you later why I can not go."

The boys went off reluctantly, and Ted turned back and went down a long street until he came to Jamie Clark's home; and there was Jamie on the porch, in his wheel chair.

"Hello, Ted," he said. "I'm awfully glad to see you. Father and mother had to go to see Jean today, and I'm all alone."

Ted sat down on the porch and began to tell Jamie about the fun he had had at a baseball game a week or so before, and Jamie listened intently and laughed heartily every now and then.

"Mother left my lunch on the kitchen table Ted," he said, when twelve o'clock came.

So Ted went in and got it for him; and then he opened his own lunch, and they shared with each other, enjoying every bite.

Now and then Ted would think of those fishes and the cool woods where the boys had gone, but he said nothing of this to Jamie.

About four o'clock he started home; and as he turned the corner of Chestnut Street, he saw something had happened, for there were potatoes lying all over the street.

He found that a wagon had broken down and the man had gone after another wagon When he came back, Ted offered to help him and several other boys came along and helped also, and before long all the potatoes were back in the good wagon.

As he was going to his own yard, some one called to him, and there were the boys, holding up a whole string of fish.

"Glad you got them," said Ted. "I had other fish to fry."

"Oh, Ted, did you go to another place?" said Edward, the youngest boy.

"No, I found them right here in this town," laughed Ted as he went in.

When father came home, he said, "Well what did you do on your day?"

Ted replied quietly, "Oh, some things I did not expect to do, father."

Just then the phone rang; and when father came back, he said: "It was Squire Johns to say that he wanted to thank my boy for bringing his old uncle to the house this morning If that is one of the unexpected things you did, Ted, three cheers for the rest," and he gave mother a knowing look.—Julia Graydon

THE RULE THAT TOMMY MADE.

"I say there, boy; want to earn a nickel?" Tommy Tolliver, the new errand boy at the factory, jumped to his feet. "Want to earn a nickel?" Tommy wondered.

"Just run around the corner to Pat Ryan's saloon and get this pail full of beer. Here's the change. We'll pay you the nickel when you come back," said one of the group of men who were eating their lunch in the corner of the room.

Tommy's face flushed. "I can't do it," he said.

"Why can't you? You ain't much of a kid if you can't carry a pail of beer two blocks."

"That's just the trouble," answered Tommy, with a flash of the eye. "I'm a lot too strong to carry a pail of beer even one block. I've had enough of the stuff. If it had not been for beer, I wouldn't be working here, doing what my father ought to be doing—taking care of my mother and the youngsters. I'd be in school, like other boys."

"Say, sonny, you better do it this time," counseled a good-natured young man, "or they'll complain to the superintendent about everything you do."

"You'll have to do it; that's all there is to it," said the first speaker. "The boss put you here to run our errands. So just you take that pail, and don't you show up here again till it's filled. Hear?" And the pail was thrust into the boy's hand.

Just outside the door Tommy hesitated for a second, thinking hard. "That man in there isn't the head man," he argued. "Of course, if it comes to the boss telling me I've got to do it, I'll have to hunt for a new place; but I'm not going to give up easy."

Straight around the corner went Tommy to the main entrance, and up the broad steps to the elevator. The elevator boy directed him to the room where "the whole push—president, vice president, secretary and treasurer—were holding an important meeting." Boldly Tommy knocked on the door, and found himself facing a room full of prosperous-looking men—so prosperous, indeed, in dress that Tommy glanced down in sudden shame at his own shabby garments.

"Well, my boy, what's the trouble?" asked the gentleman who seemed to be at the head of affairs.

"I'm Tommy Tolliver, the new errand boy in the factory," said Tommy bravely. "I just came yesterday, and the men down there say I've got to get this pail full of beer or I'll be fired quick. I came up here to find the real boss. Say, is it so? Have I got to carry their beer for them?"

The man looked seriously down into the boy's face, as he answered with another question: "Suppose you have? What will you do about it, young man?"

Quick as a flash the answer came back, in a respectful but spirited tone. "Do, I reckon there ain't but one thing to do, and that's to hunt another job. I can't go into the beer business, for anybody."

There was a subdued murmur of applause in the room. "Well, my boy, neither are we in the beer business, and I think it's about time we had some pretty stiff rules posted up in our building concerning that very thing. What do you say? he asked, turning to the other gentlemen in the room.

"I suggest that we draft such a notice immediately, have it written out on a typewriter put a copy in the pail, and send it back by this young man. Then the men can't say anything to the boy."

Before the day was over, notices were posted all over the building, forbidding the use of beer and liquor of all kinds on the premises. Neither did the president forget the new boy in the factory; but when, a few weeks later, a new office boy was needed in the head office, he sent word to the superintendent of the factory that he would like to have "the boy with the jackknife" sent up to take the position. And, although no name was mentioned, the superintendent smiled a knowing smile, and called out loud, so all could hear: "Tommy Tolliver, the president wants to see you in his office!"—The South-western Presbyterian.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Lebanon Church, High Point.—Regardless of the fact that quite a number of our people are suffering from influenza and various other diseases the attendance very nearly measured up to the average. There were 189 in Sunday school yesterday (Mar. 21). Rev. Mr. Hardy from High Point College filled both appointments yesterday in the absence of our pastor who was kept away on account of sickness. We hope for him a very speedy recovery.

Mr. Hardy preached a splendid missionary sermon at the evening hour and a thank-offering which amounted to $13.50 was taken for Foreign Missions. This service took the place of the regular Thank-offering service of the Foreign Missionary Society. A pageant which was being prepared was given up on account of sickness and death in the community.

The Missionary Society met with Mrs. A. J. Payne Mar. 3. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Pres., Mrs. Percy Payne; Vice Pres., Mrs. Frank Bailey; Cor. Mrs. J. W. Thacker; Treas., Mrs. A. J. Payne and Record Agent, Mrs. C. M. Brown. The delegate to the Branch meeting will be elected at next meeting, April 7. We are glad to announce that our budget has been raised.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Pitts have the sympathy of the church in the loss of their daughter Mrs. J. C. Clendenin. Mrs. Clendenin died suddenly Sunday afternoon at her home in Greensboro.

Mr. J. H. Harvey, a faithful member of this church, was called to his reward on Saturday evening, Mar. 20. His death was the result of a stroke of paralysis which he suffered Thursday night. The funeral will probably be sometime Wednesday; arrangements have not been completed, pending the arrival of a daughter from California.

Members of "Our Gang" have just closed a very successful meeting at this church. As a result several have united with the church and others will join later.

Mrs. Percy Payne, Reporter.

High Point.—On Sunday morning at 11:00 following quarterly conference instead of the regular sermon, Dr. Brown administered the Holy Communion in which a large number of the congregation joined. He was assisted by Rev. J. H. Stowe and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk. At the evening service Dr. E. A. Sexsmith Secretary of the Board of Young People's Work, and Dr. A. G. Dixon, were greeted by a large audience, of which the majority was young people. Rev. Mr. Little was prevented from attending the service by a message conveying the sad news of the death of Dr. Spahr's son-in-law, Prof. L. B. Hull of Pittsburgh, Penn., and he returned to Greensboro to take charge of the work at Grace Church during Dr. Spahr's absense while attending the funeral. Dr. Sexsmith and Dr. Dixon delivered splendid addresses, stressing the importance of influencing the youth of the church to realize the beauty of service for the Savior. In the youth of today lies the sole hope of the denomination. Dr. Sexsmith made a plea for the vacation Bible school, and the play life of the young people and children and, Mr. Dixon urged the older people to turn their cash into character by supporting the church, Sabbath school, college, and the various activities of our denomination. We were glad to see so many young people present including the students of the college.

The choir is busily practicing a beautiful Easter cantata, "Olivet to Calvary" which will be presented on Easter Sunday at 5:00 o'clock P. M. in the church. Messrs. Clarence Schultheiss and Norman Fidler will render the solo parts. This will be a rare musical treat to all those who attend. Prof. Dan W. Smith will direct the rendition. This will take the place of the evening service.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hinkle have returned from a week'strip to Florida.

The girl's Literary Society of High Point College, the Artemesian, gave a delightful Banquet Saturday evening in the dining-room of the college. The Faculty, the Thalian which is the boys' Society, and several former students were guests on this happy occasion. Many clever toasts and responses were given, mirth and gay repartee abounded, a tempting menu was served, and another Red Letter evening was added to the school calendar.

"Maiden that readest this simple line,
Enjoy thy youth, it will not stay;
Enjoy the fragrance of thy prime,
For oh! it is not always May."

Mrs. W. P. Pickett returned last week from an extended stay in Tampa, Fla.

The grounds of the college have been greatly improved and beautiful by the setting of many evergreens and flowering shrubs recently.

Holt McPherson, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. McPherson, has been elected one of the managing Editors of the Tar Heel, tri-weekly newspaper of the State University.

Second Church, Charlotte.—While our pastor was filling his appointment elsewhere, Brother J. C. Thomas preached for us on Sunday, March 28. Our congregations are steadily growing larger.

We are glad to announce that we have secured a hall, located more conveniently to our lot, in which to hold services until our church is erected.

The Junior and Intermediate classes of our Sunday school have prepared a delightful Easter program which they will give in our new hall, located over Hand's Pharmacy in N. Charlotte, on Sunday night, April 4. A cordial invitation is extended to all Concord.—We were very fortunate, and very glad to have our former pastor, Mr. Lawrence Little, with us Sunday. Mr. Little, at the morning service, delivered a wonderful and inspiring sermon. His subject was: "Humility." In the message the speaker challenged the young people to a higher and more consecrated life for Jesus. He also spoke of the agencies which the church should have to guide her young people in religious education. They were: Vacation Bible Schools, and week day Religious Instruction. The Daily Vacation Bible School, the speaker dwelt on more than the others, because we were all more familiar with those. He spoke of the need of the Vacation Bible School, and the training the children get from attending. We are always glad for Mr. Little to visit us, and speak for us.

The Sunday school attendance was 22 which was very good. All the departments are well organized and doing a splendid work.

A few weeks ago we held the Preliminary Bible Story Contest for the children between the ages of 5 to 14. The contest was attended by a large audience. There were about 12 contestants. Prizes were awarded to the three best from each group. In the first group Virginia Burris won first place. In the second group Agnes Litaker won first place, and Louise Robbins, and Paul Waddell won second and third places respectively. The Bible Story contest is under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and have been very successful. All the churches of the city cooperate and in the first contest those who have received first places in the preliminaries only take part. Valuable prizes are awarded the winners in the final. The preliminary contest for the next two groups, ages 14 to 20, will be held next Sunday night, taking the place of the Easter program.

Our pastor, a few months ago, gave each person a chance to vote on what he or she thought to be the four chief sins of our town. From these he took the four which received the largest number of votes. The four following Sunday evenings he preached from each of these. He began with the fourth which was "Disrespect for Life." The others in order were: "Intemperence," "Indifference," and "Immorality." From each one he preached a very helpful sermon.

Born, a son, Lawrence Earnest, to Mr. and Mrs. D. A. McLaurin, February 28.

West End, Greensboro.—We are pleased to welcome the return of our pastor after a two months' absence on a tour of the Holy Land.

Prayer services in preparation of the Stephens revival are in progress in our community. A number of homes have been thrown open for the meetings, and several of our members have volunteered their services as leaders.

Our Palm Sunday services were very much enjoyed. Mr. Ballard used as his subject for Sunday morning service "The Triumphal Entry," and Miss Effie Coulbourne sang "The Palms." In the evening the subject for the sermon was "The Weeping Christ." A large number of visitors were in attendance at both services.

Mrs. A. E. Pleasarts was hostess to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for the March meeting at her home on Silver Avenue. Under the leadership of Mrs. J. R. Holden president, this society has done much toward furthering God's Kingdom during the past year, and the delegates will go to the Branch Meeting with a splendid report. Mrs. Holden was re-elected president for the ensuing year the other officers were also re-elected. At the close of the program, Mrs. M. H. Waynick in her charming way, discussed the concluding chapter in the study book.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society was delightfully entertained at the home of Mrs. V. C. Stockard on Granite Avenue. Mrs. K. Osborne was unanimously re-elected president after a very successful year of service. This society also sends a good report to the Branch Meeting.

Mrs. W. H. Bonkemeyer entertained the Ladies' Aid Society Monday afternoon, at her home on Elam Avenue. A goodly number of the members were in atttendance.

At the eleven o'clock hour on Easter Sunday morning the children of the Sunday school will present the program issued by the Board of Home Missions. At the conclusion of this service Mr. Ballard will receive candidates for membership in the church. He will also baptize a number of babies, using water from the River Jordan, which he got for that purpose while on his recent trip. In the evening a chorus of eighteen voices will present "The Easter Evangel," an Easter cantata by Lorenz. We extend a cordial invitation to the public to worship with us at these services.

Henderson.—The missionary societies held their regular business meeting last Monday. All the old officers were reelected. A round table discussion led by Mrs. A. G. Dixon was greatly enjoyed by all, Mrs. S. B. Harris made Mrs. R. A. Hunter a life member. Immediately following the missionary meetings a young peoples meeting was held. Dr. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro, Dr. E. A. Sexsmith of Baltimore and Rev. Lawrence Little, also from Greensboro, were here. They gave us some very helpful things and we hope to put some of their suggestions into practice before long. The three spoke again at 7.30 P. M.

On March 21st Mrs. Lula Loveland Shepherd addressed the public at the evening service. Her topic was "The Dangers of the Mormons." Mrs. Shepherd came to us from the National Reform Association.

Our Junior Choir which has recently been organized sang for the first time Sunday morning in the Sunday school. We expect great things to come from this choir.

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society which was organized a few weeks ago continues to grow, under the able leadership of Mrs. H. A. Jordan.

Palm Sunday was observed at church Sunday. The choir had special music appropiate to the occasion. Reporter.

Asheboro.—The next few weeks are going to be busy times with us. This week we have a number of services in the church and in the homes of the people in preparation for our revival services which will begin on Monday April 5. On next Sunday morning we will have the Easter sermon with Easter music by the choir and at the evening hour will be the Easter service by the Sunday school. Misses Ethel Cox, Bon Phillips and Ellen Presnell have charge of the service and we are expecting it to be a good one. We are making an effort to raise $100.00 through the services to go to Home Missions.

On Monday, April 5, Rev. R. A. Hunter of Henderson will arrive to do the preaching in our special services. We now think we will have two services each day, one in the morning at 8.00 o'clock and the other at 7:45 P. M. The meeting is to run through the second Sunday and possibly longer. We shall be glad for the people on the surrounding charges to come in and worship with us. J. E. Pritchard.

Flat Rock.—Last Sunday was our regular preaching day, but Bro. Trogdon was unable to fill his appointment because of sickness. He and his wife have been ill for several days.

The Sunday school attendance was very good, and several people came expecting the pastor to be there; so after Sunday school was over, prayer meeting was held under the leadership of Bro. J. B. Ogburn.

There has been quite a lot of infliuenza throughout the community during the past month's, and a few deaths have occurred, we are glad to see some of the good members back at church again. Reporter.

State St. Church.—Sunday, March 28, was quite a big day at our church, three splendid services besides an unusually large and wide awake Sunday school.

At the eleven o'clock hour our pastor preached a fine sermon on the value of a human life. At 4 o'clock P. M. Dr. Sexsmith addressed a large congregation, his subject being The program of the Church. Dr. Dixon, Dr. Sexsmith and Bro. Lawrence Little were with us Sunday afternoon, also Mrs. Dixon, she having spent Saturday night and Sunday in Lexington was with us in the morning services also. We were all helped by the coming of these good people and many were the expressions of appreciation by a large audience Sunday afternoon. We came out to hear Dr. Sexsmith's address.

There were reported visitors from North and South Davidson charges with their pastor. Bro. Crutchfield, and Bro. Trollinger of the Thomasville First Church was there with some of his folks. These with a large number of our own folks filled our house.

Sunday night another large crowd—a house full—heard Mr. Bethea give his first of a series of addresses to be given on his trip abroad.

We are preparing for the Easter program to be rendered Sunday night at 7:30 o'clock, the practice for which is progressing nicely under able leadership.

A building committee was appointed Sunday morning and plans for getting under way with the building of larger quarters will start at once. This has become a necessity as we have literally outgrown the present capacity.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will meet Thursday afternoon with Mrs. Rodgers. Reporter.

Spencer.—Rev. D. A. Braswell, preached a good sermon Sunday 11 A. M. We have two services a month, the second and fourth. Sunday school at 3:00. We have a good Sunday school. There has been right much sickness among our members. This has taken our school down right much. But with the coming of spring we hope to do better. We are still in the home of A. L. Moore. Have tried to rent a hall but have failed so far to get one. We need more room.

Our W. H. M. S. organized July 13 with 10 members have gained 11, making 21 members. More members in our M. S. than any church, and was organized before our church was: we have had much H. M. work in Spencer to do. Our society has nearly paid for our piano and bought song books for our church. Our church is about up on pastor's salary. And have paid on the Budget $13.40, and how we can pay the rest of our part. But we do need and want a church.

Just think, not a M. P. Church in Spencer Salisbury or Rowan Co. Mr. President, won't you put us on the list for the next church? We have a few as faithful M. Ps here as there are anywhere. And if we could have a revival meeting we would gain more members I believe.

Our beginners' class lost one of our members Little Emma Lee Hackney, daughter of Mr and Mrs. D. A. Hackney, died March 9.

Emma Lee was'nt but three years old, but she loved to come to Sunday school and was present every Sunday. She loved to sing "Jes-

Henderson.—Sickness in the homes of our people, together with the inclement weather has caused a dropping off in the attendance upon some of the services of the church, especially the Sunday school. We are glad to report that most of the sick ones are improving, and we are expecting that with the coming of spring everything will soon be back normal again.

The thank-offering service, which was held a few Sunday nights ago by the women of the missionary societies, and which has already been reported in this paper, was one of the most successful meetings of its kind we have ever attended. The program was splendid, the church was full of people and the offering was something near $90.00 We congratulate these good women for being able to put on so successful a service.

We have been greatly pleased with the Christian Endeavor society. The average attendance at the regular Sunday evening meetings has been around twenty. However, we have seen the need of an intermediate society since a large number of the members were of interediate age, so on last Sunday evening an Intermediate society was organized, with fifteen members. The Seniors numbered sixteen. We are hoping that within a few weeks each society will have as many members as the combined societies have had heretofore.

Yesterday, Monday, the Dixon-Sexsmith-Little "team" arrived in our town to conduct a young people's rally. At 3:30 in the afternoon a small but interested group of workers gathered to discuss the various problems of church work. This meeting was most interesting and helpful. At 7:30 a much larger company gathered, including some from the churches of Granville charge. After a short devotional service conducted by the pastor the above mentioned brethren spoke on very timely and interesting topics. These addresses were followed with another conference with the leaders. It is thought by all who attended that these meetings were a success and that the coming of these leaders into our midst will result in much good.

We were grieved to learn of Rev. and Mrs. W. F. Kennett's accident. Glad Brother Kennett was not seriously injured and that Sister Kennett is recovering so nicely. They have many friends here, not only the members of their churches, but others in Henderson and the surrounding country who will be glad when they are able to return to their work here. Brother Kennett has always seemed almost like a father to this writer. Especially has that been true since last Conference, as our work here is very closely connected. We have spent many pleasant hours together discussing the problems which are common to all pastors. We feel fortunate, being young in the service as we are, to be so closely associated with o man who has had so many years of fruitful experience in the ministry.

R. A. Hunter.

Corinth and Littleton, Littleton Ct.—With an imaginary transfer from Corinth to Littleton, have been visiting all the year, trying to find, to reach, and get in touch with new comers, the sick, the non-church goers, and learn the whys. I find quite a number of our people are doing better than some of us who attend. Sunday school—visiting the sick. helping the homeless and orphans.

But, that is not as hard work as trying to keep together the work of our leaders of Sunday school.

That is what the writer is trying to help do. Mr. S. O. Rightmyer, (the backbone of this work here at Littleton), is in declining health, has missed a few Sundays. Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sillery, both teachers, and Miss Riggans, pianist, have been deprived of attending church on account of sickness.—The writer has not been in "winter quarters."—She has been out every Sunday, to Sunday school rain or snow, met the few who came. Have been so busy is why I haven't reported since conference. Bro. O'Briant has filled his appointments here. Administered sacrament here last Sunday.

Here at Corinth the teachers and leaders have been blessed with health. But many of the children are being kept away by sickness —We all have our pull-backs.

The eighteenth, Circuit Rally was held here. Dr. Dixon and wife, and Bro. Stubbins were our speakers. Mrs. Dixon spoke of Sunday school work, and that we should build our churches where people like to congregate or make our churches the centre of attraction Bro. Stubbins spoke of encouragement in church work, "Aim at something," he says.

After his talk we served dinner. He aimed o get some, and di l not "skip it"—(Sarcasm). After a short intermission we re-assembled. Dr. Dixon gave us many helpful suggestions. A remark that had helped him so much in life, was: "God made you too good to sin" or "You are too good to sin."

Dr. Dixon in Chair, conference was called to order, all churches represented but Littleton. T. A. Carter and W. J. Morris were nominated for delegate to annual conference.

Fifteen of our members from Littleton's Ct. attended the Young People's Conference Enfield Sunday. We gathered many good ideas for S. S. work.

Here are part of some verses I read in Bible tonight before beginning to write. Can you tell where recorded? "If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up."—"Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows."—"When men are cast down, there is lifting up."

Pleasant Grove.—Since our last report death has visited our church and taken another member. Mrs. Artie Lee Kennedy Culler, born November 19, 1899, died March 21, 1926.

Mrs. Culler had been in ill health for some ime and in a very serious condition for the past six weeks. She was carried to the hospital about four weeks ago and death was not unexpected to her host of friends. She leaves a husband and one child, a father, two brothers, four sisters and a host of friends to mourn her going.

She was converted in early life and joined Zion Reformed church. About four years ago she joined Pleasant Grove church to be with her husband. Soon after entering the hospital she told her father that while she would like to live, she was not afraid to die. She was a kind and affectionate wife and obliging neighbor.

Funeral services were held Monday morning in the Pleasant Grove M. P. Church. The services were conducted by Rev. G. L. Reynolds, pastor, assisted by Rev. D. C. Cox of Thomasville. The pall bearers were Ray Robins, David Myers, Rand Kennedy, Ed Kennedy, Charles Kennedy and Robert Kennedy.

The flower bearers were Miss Iola Beck Kellie Darr, Alice Lee Burton, Kellie Rothrock, Millie Rothrock and Willie Payne.

The beautiful floral offering and the large attendance spoke the high esteem in which she was held.

The Easter exercise will be held on Easter Sunday at 11 o'clock A. M.

The night preaching services which had been called off during the winter months began last Sunday night with a very good attendance. Mrs. Ralph J. Kennedy, Rep.

Hebron Church, Orange Ct.—Some time has passed since we reported.

We have been having preaching twice per month; only missed one service on account of bad weather. There has been lots of sickness in the community, keeping lots from attending church, but now all seem improved, and roads are better so hope our congregations will be better.

Hope the S. S. and C. E. will keep growing and that we may have all the surrounding country attending and all wake up and have the best year yet.

Our Home Missionary Society had a call meeting yesterday, paid in $16.00 dues for which we are thankful and hope it will keep increasing in interest until it will be worthwhile and an honor to the church.

Our pastor preached a fine sermon yesterday. We enjoyed it so much; it gave us new thoughts for the week.

May our church go forward in all lines for good.

Pray for our success. Reporter.

Orange Charge.—The 2nd quarterly conference met at Union Grove Church Saturday March 27th. Each church was represented. The usual business was transacted in a brotherly spirit.

The following were nominated as candidates for delegate to represent this charge in the nert Annual Conference: M. P. Efland of the Efland Church and W. B. Jones of Hebron Church.

The interests of Orange will be in safe hands, which ever of these is chosen as her representative.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Who will have all things right must be both master and servant.

n Appreciation. John C. Snotherly.

her John C. Snotherly, late of the First list Protestant church of Albemarle e of the best men I ever knew. So many ave I sat by the fireside with him, and l with eager ears to the some times sentences as they fell from his lips variably he would speak of the multi beautiful things that had come into , and in conclusion his thoughts and were always about death and heaven. narked once of the great faith of Paul e said, ''I know in whom I have be and am persuaded that he is able to at which I have committed unto hin that day.'' Great tears filled his eyes frail frame shook with enraptured when he answered, ''Paul was all t Job went farther than that, for it who said, 'I know that my Redeemer nd he shall stand at the last day upon h. . . . .yet in my flesh shall I see God whom I shall see for myself and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.''

With such a faith in a God like this, Brother Snotherly passed away on February 8 to be with Jesus.

He did not leave behind much of those things the world call riches, but the influence exerted in the community in which he lived many years before his death, will live as long as time lasts. The First M. P. church of Albemarle is there as a monument to his unfailing desire to make the world better. Back in the early years of this century, there was no church of our denomination in Albemarle, and since ''Uncle John'' was a Methodist Protest ant all his life, he conceived the idea some how that the church should come. And it came. In those early days, more of his money was put into that work, than any other man dared risk. A close friend of Brother Snotherly, did practically all the carpenter work, but when money was mentioned ''Uncle John'' saw that it came, even if it had to come from his own purse, and the majority of it came from that source.

When the church was organized and services started, he became the first Sunday school superintendent, and with the foundation he laid, the church was started in the field of service. As long as his health permitted, Brother Snotherly was a regular attendant upon the Sunday school. When the writer went there as pastor, his health had already begun to fail, and so great was the love of the people for him, their cars were often used to bring ''Uncle John'' to church.

Later, when his wife passed away, and he was left alone, the old home on Pee Dee Avenue was rented, and he went to live with his foster-daughter, Mrs. Robert Hall at Tuckertown. There among the hills, where he spent the days of early married life, where the church he loved was destroyed by storm, there on the banks of the Yadkin on February the 8th he breathed his last.

His friends were not restricted to denomination, class or color. Some of the biggest business men of the town dropped a tear of sorrow on his bier, and by their side came doctors, lawyers, bankers, laborers, and those from the most humble walks of life. These came not because of the great theories he advanced, or the great skyscrapers he erected but came because during the seventy-eight years of his life, ''Uncle John'' loved men. and taught others how to love.

Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past:
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last.

Hackney.

Little Emma Lee Hackney, the daughter of Bro. D. A. and Sister Minnie Hackney, born January 29, 1923, died March 15, 1926. She took some poison medicine and lived but a few hours. She was a bright, sweet little child. She seemed to be the pet of the community, and that brought a large number of people together at her funeral. She was a member of the M. P. Sunday school at Spencer and was a member of Sister A. L. Moore's class and they were very much devoted to each other. She had asked Sister Moore to teach her the little song, ''Jesus loves me.'' Sister Hackney is a member of our church at Spencer. Mr. Hackney is not a member of any church. We hope he will soon give his life to God and join in with us and prepare to meet his dear little daughter in Heaven. Little Emma Lee was the first one of our members at Spencer to leave the loved ones below to join the loved one on High. She will be missed at Sunday school and in the community, but she will be missed more in the home than anywhere else.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. Mr. Gordon of the Baptist church of Spencer. May our Father comfort the bereaved ones and bring us all to Heaven.

D. A. Braswell, Her Pastor.

Powell.

Mrs. Bettie S. Powell, widow of the late Silas Powell, and affectionately known to her many acquaintances as ''grandma,'' died January 26, 1926, after an illness of about two weeks with heart trouble. Sister Powell was 82 years old on January 3, having been born in the year 1844 in Warren County. Before her marriage she was Miss Bettie S. Ball. She is survived by two children, a son, O. H. Powell, with whom she had made her home for a number of years; a daughter, Mrs. O. H Young; eleven grand-children and seven great grand-children. Funeral services were conducted from the Henderson Methodist Protestant church by the pastor, and were attended by a large number of people.

Sister Powell was one of the oldest and most faithful members of our church, and although I had been her pastor but a few months I had learned to love her and to think of her as a ''Mother in Israel.'' Her going has made many hearts sad but we all have the blessed assurance and consolation that she is at rest with her loved ones who had preceded her and with her Master whom she loved so well and served so faithfully.

R. A. Hunter, Pastor.

Mrs. S. H. Marion.

Johannah Elizabeth Marion, wife of Samuel H. Marion, born September 5, 1850, departed this life, March 26, 1926. The funeral was conducted by three pastors: Rev. W. M. Wellman of Pilot Mountain, Rev. W. D. Reed of Haw River Circuit, Rev. A. L. Hunter, pastor of the church of which Mrs. Marion was a member.

She joined the M. P. Church (Pilot church) in early childhood, and lived a sweet consecrated life from that time till she passed away. She was greatly loved by all who knew her. And she was known all over the state by a large number of people. She is survived by her husband, Samuel Marion, four sons, Eddie, Julian, Samie, and Harmon Marion; seven daughters, Mrs. Mary Watson, Mrs. Lillian Hawks, Mrs. Maggie Wall, Mrs. Ada Blaeles, Mrs. Mattie Harelee, and Carrie and Nellie Marion. May grace be multiplied to her husband and children as they mourn the passing of wife and mother.

Jones.

Selina A. Jones, born July 26, 1870, died March 29, 1926.

Sister Jones was converted in early life and joined Chestnut Ridge Church where she held her membership through life.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. T. M. Johnson, at Chestnut Ridge Church, March 30th, after which the remains were placed in Chestnut Ridge cemetery.

The large crowd present on this occasion showed the esteem in which the deceased was held.

May God comfort the bereaved relatives and friends. B. M. Williams.

Big Missionary Rally at Harmony on Yarborough Circuit.

We spent last Sunday at our Harmony church near Ware Shoals, S. C. We left home Saturday in order to attend a missionary entertainment Saturday night. We had a most beautiful program consisting of special music, recitations and a play entitled the empty "Mite Box" which was well acted and much appreciated. A recitation by Miss Ruth Hughes was much enjoyed.

Your humble servant, the pastor, and daughter furnished orchestra music, playing upon seven instruments at one time.

Harmony is a small church with a large ambition.

There has been considerable sickness here for some time. But most of them are improving. Among the sick ones were Sister Mrs F. R. Buzhardt, Sister Wood, Bro. Ballentine. The pastor and family enjoy their visits to Harmony every fourth Sunday very much.

R. G. Koons, Pastor.

Asheville.—An increase program is on for Easter week. The idea is for all departments to attend all the services, for the finances to even up to date and more, for visitors to be brought to the services, for new members to be added to the roster; most of all, for men, women, and children to be saved.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held a silver tea at the church last week. The affair was very enjoyable and successful. It was in the form of a birthday celebration (the 47th) of the society. Mrs. Bates read the incidents for each year since the society was organized. A large cake with candles was used. A delightful program of music was given by Mrs. Shores and Miss Snyder and Richard Hanner and his two sisters, Misses Louise and Ailine, and Miss Verda McIntyre. Cake and coffee were served. The offering was sufficient to complete the quota for this society

We are grieved for the news that Mrs. M. D. Council is not improving. She is with her niece at Miami, Fla. Mrs. L. M. Joyner is nursing her. Mrs. Robert Greenwood will soon be out after serious illness. The family of Bro. Geo. M. Foster have been missed the past two Sundays. They are touring Florida. We welcome Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Jones of Greensboro, to our city. We were glad to have them worship with us. Mr. Jones is in business here. Mrs. Jones was Miss Viola Paris. They are living at 64 Highland St.

Ed. Harris, Jr., of the Rehoboth Church, Granville circuit, worshiped with us two Sundays ago. R. F. Williams, of Burlington, attended both services last Sunday. Miss Laura Mai Snyder, of New York, played the violin at both services Sunday to the delight of all.

Gideon Grove, Flat Rock Charge.—Our work is getting along very well; the interest in Sunday school is good though we have right much flu yet. Our pastor and his family were hit pretty hard by the flu and Bro. Trogdon has been very sick for some two weeks, but all are getting better now and we hope for them a speedy recovery.

Mrs. Vassie Friddle, one of our members, has been very sick, taking a relapse some two or three times but is convelescing. I do not believe our pastor will be able to fill his appointment Easter Sunday. Pray for us.

Yours in His name. F. J. L., Rep.

Ira Landreth's Address.—A Green Boro audience was permitted to hear last Friday night the man who was so ardently expected at the Young People's Conference last summer and who failed to come because of the serious illness of his wife. He is a speaker abounding in humor and keeps his auditors smiling most of the time. But when he wishes to make a serious impression he can so change the tone of his voice as to accomplish his purpose very effectively. He explained that he had been traveling for 24 hours without much sleep. Besides that, his only child, a daughter, is an invalid in California, and he had not heard from her that day as he usually does. He concluded with a collection for the work of the United Society of Christian Endeavor which organization he gives credit for a large part in bringing in prohibition of the liquor traffic and which organization he hopes will have a large part in bringing about universal peace. We were glad of the opportunity to hear Mr. Landreth, and would welcome another such opportunity.

—The Stephens evangelistic meetings in our city began last Sunday night in a great tabernacle built for the purpose, having room for 5,000 people. The first meeting made a good impression and Greensboro people are hopeful of splendid results. Rev. George Stephens, the evangelist, bears a striking resemblance to Josephus Daniels. He has a brother in the party who is also a minister and who looks more like a preacher than does his brother George. Miss Bennett is a worker among girls and young women. Mr. Cedarholm of California leads the choir. Miss Loes of Michigan is pianist. Mr. Heaton is business manager.

HINDU SAMMY.

A regiment of British Tommies were encamped just outside a town in India, says a writer in an exchange. They were fresh from the home country, and everything was novel to them.

One morning soon after their arrival there went trotting along the road by the camp a Hindu Christian preacher. He carried a big Bible under one arm and an umbrella under the other. Altogether he looked a quaint little figure as he ran along in the dust and the glare of the sun.

Some Tommies hailed him as he went by with an irreverent question:

"Hello, Sammy! How's Jesus this morning?"

The little fellow pulled up short and looked at them with his bright, dark, piercing eyes. Then, holding up the Bible, he said slowly:

"Do you sahibs mean to say that you who sent us this Holy Book talk of the Lord Jesus like that? Do the people of your great country send the Gospel to us poor heathen and yet insult the Saviour?"

The men looked a bit uneasy at his words, but he went on.

"You say, 'How is Jesus this morning?' Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever!"

And making the men a polite bow, the Hindu pursued his way with dignity.

That evening Sammy's wife was startled to see coming up the little garden path of their home, which was near the camp, two British soldiers. Her heart nearly stopped with fear, for she was sure her husband had somehow offended the great British Raj. The men inquired for her husband, and he came to the door. They at once seized him by the hand and earnestly they thanked him for his plucky speech of the morning.

"After you had gone," they said, "some of us felt ashamed, and we had a talk about it, and my mate and I went off into the woods, and—well—there we gave our hearts together to the Lord Jesus Christ. We've come to tell you so, feeling that it is all through what you said."

The dark eyes twinkled with joy, and between the white men and their brown brother there ran that current of sympathy which moves too deep for racial hindrances and grapples souls together in eternal friendship. —Record of Christian Work.

THE BLIGHT OF ASIA—A REVIEW.

By Rev. E. O. Watson, D. D.

The grim and horrible story of the gradual and systematic extermination of Christians and Christianity from Asia Minor by the Turks is convincingly told by George Horton in his book "The Blight Of Asia," just off the press of the Bobbs-Merrill Co. Mr. Horton was an eye-witness to the tragedy of Smyrna, being at that time the American Consul stationed there. He has the back-ground for intelligent understanding of that about which he writes having been consul and consul general in the Near East for thirty years. The author claims to be neither pro-Turk nor pro-Greek, only pro-American and pro-Christian. He writes fearlessly, clearly, convincingly. The title is in itself a succinct epitome and arraignment of the rule of the Turk. The Turk has been and is the "Blight of Asia." He has been everywhere and always destructive nowhere and at no time constructive. The extermination of the Armenian and Greek population from his territory removes the constructive element.

The main points of the story told by Mr. Horton are:

First. The Turk is the leopard of Asia. He has not changed and Mr. Horton does not believe change possible for him.

Second. The Turk's policy, especially since the proclamation of the new constitution and the rise of the Young Turk and Nationalist movements, has been the systematic extermination of Christians and Christianity, trying first to Turkify and failing in this exterminating. The result has been that "A greater number of human beings have been massacred by the Turks than in any persecution since the coming of Christ."

Third. Christian powers have quiescently looked on while all this murder was going forward and have, in some cases, even abetted the Turk. "In the course of this sad history," says the author, "Christians were armed against their hereditary oppressors and then left to the vengeance of the latter. In general they were abandoned, as no Christian power desired to offend the Turk, from whom great benefits were expected to be in turn showered on the subjects of the power that showed itself most Turkophile. The United States did not abstain from this gruesome competition."

"Naval units of Great Britian, Italy, France and the United States were present at Smyrna and anchored but a few hundred yards from the houses on the quay during the appalling shameful and heart-rending scenes that followed."...."A united order from the commanders, or from any two of them—one harmless shell thrown across the Turkish quarter—would have brought the Turks to their senses." "And this, the presence of those battle-ships in Smyrna harbor, in the year of our Lord, 1922, impotently watching the last great scene in the tragedy of the Christians of Turkey, was the saddest and most significant feature of the whole picture."..... "There are copious oil wells at Maidan ir Naftum." ...."There are rich oil fields at Mousul." The question is raised, "Has the blood of the martyrs been washed out with oil?"

Fourth. The Greeks occupied Smyrna, May 15, 1919, and administered the government of that territory until driven out by Khemal September 9, 1922. Mr. Horton says of this administration: "Despite many difficulties, the Greek civil authorities, as far as their influence extended succeeded in giving Smyrna, and a large portion of the occupied territory, the most orderly, civilized and progressive administration it has had in historic times." He tells the story in some detail, and one is, frankly, amazed at the practical and benevolent program put over. It would reflect credit and glory upon the Greeks, or any nation, as a splendid achievement even under the most favorable circumstances.

Fifth. The burning of Smyrna. Mr. Horton shows Smyrna to have been "the last of the Seven Cities of Asia Minor to which St. John wrote." He pictures Smyrna as the fairest pearl of the Orient"; as the "martyred city" that "kept the faith in Christendom from Polycarp to St. Chrysostom." "It is," he says, "more than probable that Homer was a Smyrniote" and that "the Odyssey was very probably written there." "There Polycarp was burned alive A. D., 156," and there "Chrysostom", Greek Bishop of Smyrna "was tortured and torn in pieces by a Turkish mob in front of the military headquarters of the Khemalist forces in Smyrna, on September 9, 1922." He pictures "a climate very much resembling that of Southern California;" the harbor as "one of the best in the world, comparable to that of Vancouver." A city of many attractions, Smyrna was, rich in historical treasures, enjoying a life suggestive of that of the patriarch Job in the land of Uz before calamity touched him. This "Smyrna is now a mass of ruins and a Turkish village." (Turkish Smyrna was not burned!)

The question, "Who burned Smyrna" could never have been raised but for Turkish propaganda. In the light of what Mr. Horton, an eye-witness, then American Consul with thirty years in the Near East back of him, says this question should be forever laid. He not only clearly states "The Turks burnt Smyrna," but backs up the statement with citations from unbiased sources and gives absolutely convincing details.

The main facts as given by him concerning the burning of Smyrna are that the Armenian quarter was cut off and guarded by Turkish soldiers for complete "looting, massacring and destroying;" that "they made a systematic and horrible clean up after which they set fire to it in various places by carrying tins of petroleum or other combustibles into the houses, or by saturating bundles of rags in petroleum and throwing these bundles in through the windows;" that "they planted small bombs under the paving stones in the European part of the city as a supplementary to the petroleum;" that "they set fire to the Armenian quarter on the thirteenth of September, 1922;" that "the last Greek soldiers had passed through on the evening of the eighth," and therefore "the Turks had been in full, complete and undisputed possession of the city for five days;" that "before the fire practically all the Armenians were slaughtered;" that all the Christians left were "keeping to their houses" in terror and were driven into the streets by the burning of their houses where they underwent the indescribable horrors that followed of loot, murder, rape, and herding on the quay; that "the fire was lighted at the edge of the Armenian quarter at a time when a strong wind was blowing toward the Christian section and away from the Turkish; that "Turkish soldiers led the fire down into the well-built modern Greek and European section of Smyrna by soaking the narrow streets with petroleum or other highly inflammable matter;" that they led the fire thus to the American consulate for its destruction.

Sixth. The author pays high tribute to missionaries, and appears to have thought their work with the Christians in Asia Minor worth while, but now that the Christians are wiped out, and religious teaching absolutely forbidden by the Turks, he thinks it a waste of money and a compromise of Christian principle to continue to carry on. He has no faith in the power of Christianity to convert the Turk and contempt for compromises in carrying on a Christian program with religious teaching left out. From quotations from Dr. James L. Barton, Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and others, it is clear that the Christian missionary, preacher or teacher, can remain in Turkey and continue work only by leaving Christ and all religious teaching out. Mr. Horton says: "The proposition under which our Christian schools may now operate in Turkey is about as follows: Will you please let us rebuild our buildings at our own expense with money raised in America and reopen them in those places where enough human beings remain to furnish a few pupils, and educate Turkish boys in English, arithmetic, etc., if we give our solemn word that we will not teach them any Christianity."

Christian America, certainly missionary leaders, will hardly accept Mr. Horton's opinion that Christianity cannot change the character of the Turk. On the other hand will they long continue a purely educational, non-Christian program for the establishment of the Turkish government "on a sound basis?" Such a program would call for a recasting of the whole conception of Christian missions. The situation is grave. The questions raised are vital and ominous. It is time for pause; for thought concerning the program of Christian missions not only in Turk controlled Mohammedanism, but everywhere, especially in the Near and Far East.

"The Blight of Asia" is a distinct contribution and should set at rest forever a number of controverted matters of interest to students of the Near East and all friends of world peace and progress. It is worthy a wide circulation. The price, $3.50 is a little high. But truth told in these 292 pages is not to be found elsewhere gathered in such convincing form.

TRUTH.

f all the beautiful thoughts God gives, ruth is surely most enduring—'tis plain or somehow we know, truth crushed to earth
Vill as surely rise and live again.

ruth ever lives on through endless years
hough the scorner may try, but in vain,
o crush it to earth, but sometime, somewhere,
ruth in triumph will rise again.

he boaster may sneer and think he has won victory o'er justice and right, ut on, on—my friend, just follow him on,
ee, his footsteps will lead into night.

he righteous some day shall inherit all,
he scorner to darkness must go—
or a law of God as well as of man, ou surely must reap what you sow,

he innocent woman, man or child,
as the promise of God, I'll defend, et the deceiver plan and scheme as he may est assured, child, I am thy friend.

hen if God who is truth and Infinite love,
e for us—ah who then, I pray,
an ever succeed in triumphant gain,
y being against us, I say?

Ve thank Thee, O God, for thy power and love
Ve thank Thee for thy truth to claim,
Ve thank Thee that somehow in thine own way triumphant victory we'll gain.

By Rev. H. H. Smith.

All Christians, doubtless, will endorse the ollowing words of Dr. Wilbur Fisk Tillett: The Hymnal of the Church, in its religious nd moral value to Christian believers, is econd only to one other book—the Bible."

This is saying much, but not too much, for he influence of Christian hymns upon the ves of all believers.

While all classes are debtors to the songs f Zion, the object of this paper is to note ow great hymns have influenced the lives of ome great men.

Matthew Arnold considered the hymn of saac Watts, "When I survey the wondrous ross," the greatest hymn in the English lang age. The author of the Methodist Hymnal nnotated, to whom we are indebted for many nteresting facts concerning our great hymns eferring to this hymn, says: "Among those ho counted this the greatest hymn in the nglish language, we may also name Matthew rnold, the eminent English author and liter ry critic—and he was especially severe in is criticism of many church hymns. It so hanced that the very day he died he heard this ymn sung in Sefton Park Presbyterian hurch, Liverpool, of which Dr. John Watson "Ian Maclaren") was pastor. As he went to uncheon after the close of the service, in the ome of his brother-in-law, he was heard to epeat to himself softly again and again the pening lines of the hymn; and it was only en minutes before he died that he declared was the greatest of all the English hymns. That one who had defined God as 'the Eternal Somewhat that makes for righteousness—from whom Jesus came,' should not only sing publicly but repeat to himself privately words like these,

'Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ, my God,
All the vain things that charm me most
I sacrifice them to His blood,' makes it possible for us to hope that this eminent poet and man of letters admired and loved this hymn not for its literary qualities alone. The critic's head-creed may have been defined in his 'Literature and Dogma,' while his heart hungered for a creed embodied in a hymn like this, and found joy in singing:

'Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all.'

"This incident recalls John Wesley's earnest plea that hymns should have not only religious and devotional value, but also high literary merit, 'such as would sooner provoke a critic to turn Christian than a Christian to turn critic.'"

Who can estimate the influence of a great hymn? Wesley had no use for "namby-pambical" hymns as he called them, and exercised great care to exclude them from his hymn books; but in our day sensational evangelists and publishers of cheap song books have introduced into many churches "namby-pambical" hymns and "namby-pambical" tunes.

"Sun of my Soul," by John Keble, is one of our best loved and most popular prayer hymns. Dr. Nutter says: "A visitor once asked Alfred Tennyson what his thoughts were of Christ. They were walking in a garden, and for a moment the great poet was silent: then, bending over some beautiful flowers he said: 'What the sun is to these flowers, Jesus Christ is to my soul. He is the sun of my soul.' Consciously he was expressing the same thought in the same language used by John Keble years before when he gave to the world his great heart hymn, 'Sun of my Soul.'"

Any comment on a hymn by the great Christian poet, Tennyson, should be read with peculiar interest, for, to receive favorable comment from such a source, a hymn must have both literary merit and devotional impressiveness. Tennyson regarded Reginald Heber's hymn on the Holy Trinity, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," as "the finest hymn ever written."

Joseph Addison's great hymn, "The spacious firmament on high," is said to have been a favorite with Dr. Samuel Johnson, who used to repeat it with great delight.

"Rock of Ages," by Toplady, one of the greatest of all our hymns, is a universal favorite. "The British Premier, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, made a version of it in Latin and another in Greek. Many persons, and among them Prince Albert of England, have used it as a dying prayer." Concerning this hymn, Dr. Nutter remarks: "The merits of this hymn are confessedly great. It is saturated with the spirit of prayer, and it brings out clearly the utter dependence of the soul upon Christ alone for salvation. To write a hymn so popular and so useful is a privilege an angel might covet."

Among the most popular of all our hymns is Charles Wesley's great hymn, "Jesus lover of my soul." Henry Ward Beecher said: "I would rather have written that hymn of Wesley's, 'Jesus lover of my soul,' than to have the fame of all the kings that ever sat on the earth. It is more glorious. It has more power in it. That hymn will go on singing until the last trump brings forth the angel band; and then, I think, it will mount up on some lip to the very presence of God."

Dr. Richard Watson, a theologian of the Methodist Church, during his last illness found comfort in Watts' hymn, "How sad our state by nature is!" A visiting minister related "with what pleasure the suffering divine spoke on the subject of Christ crucified. He dwelt for some time on its infinite importance as the only foundation on which to rest for pardon, acceptance with God, and eternal life. He then spoke of his own unworthiness and of his first reliance on the atonement, and repeated with solemn and deep feeling this verse:

'A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
Into Thy arms I fall;
Be Thou my strength and righteousness,
My Saviour and my all.'"

President McKinley died with the words of the hymn, "Nearer, my God to Thee," upon his lips. His last words, spoken to his physician, were: "'Nearer, my God to Thee, e'en though it be a cross,' has been my constant prayer."

TURKEY WESTERNIZED BY AMERICAN RELIEF.

Has American missionary and relief work in Turkey been worth while? Has it had any permanent influence on the Turk?

Americans have always been interested in Turkey, but with most Americans it has been the interest of supreme contempt. The "unspeakable Turk" has been for a generation the cant sneer on all tongues at every mention of Turkey. Everything that was cruel and treacherous has been comprehended in the picture of Turkish character that satisfied the Western nations, and to hear of a good Turk was an incredible as a white blackbird.

But William Jourdan Rapp, a journalist who has lived for years among Turks of the modern type, not only believes in good Turks, but also writes of them in very strong faith that some of them, at least, are on the way to be very much better Turks, thanks largely to the influence of the American philanthropic and educational work of the past few years. In his book, "Osman Pasha," just published by the Century Company, Mr. Rapp gives a new picture of the new Turkey.

He considers it in no sense absurd to hope for a time when Turkey will turn from isolated Moslem bigotry to ideals of world brotherhood essentially Western, and will count for a strong ally with all the powers of civilization that are willing to work honestly for universal peace and inter-racial justice.

Yet none of these things Mr. Rapp says in "Osman Pasha." He has not chosen to put his ideas into lecture or essay form. Instead he has left them to be taken by inference from the action of a vivid play, named "Osman Pasha" from its hero. It is a fine piece of dramatic work, well suited to the stage and doubtless on its way to success there. But the book is most impressive as revealing a spirit of modernism among younger Moslems which might even be willing to join hands with the progressive "youth movement" throughout the world and so bridge the chasm of separation between East and West.

It is interesting to observe that although Mr. Rapp would not appear to be in any sense a protagonist of Christian missions or even of Christian philanthropy, he clearly, by his dramatic inferences, does attribute the whole alteration in a certain type of Turk to the influence of missionaries and Near East Relief workers. One of the latter, a superb type of self-reliant and resourceful American girl, is the admirable heroine of the play.

The author does not suggest that Turks were convinced of Christian theology by missionary teaching, and he knows that the Near East Relief staff are restrained from all propaganda by the working code of their organization.

But the power of example is another thing. Mr. Rapp more than infers, he practically asserts, that the lives which these representatives of America have lived in remote and hidden Turkey have advertised their creed irresistibly.

The author does not see Turkey turning to Christian theology under this influence, but he does vision the more startling possibility—it almost seems that he is putting it forward as a probability—that Turkey may turn to Jesus and His altruistic teachings.

The fact that a man who has lived with the Turks and won their confidence ventures today to write in this strain, almost of itself marks an epoch in the history of the Near East. If his prophetic vision should come to pass, it would be an epoch for the world.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

On Saturday, April 10th, I drove to Fairview Church for the second quarterly conconference. The brethren seem hopeful in the work and they entered heartily into the transaction of the business of the Church.

The parsonage needs considerable repairs, and the trustees were authorized to lay plans to have this done.

One Sunday morning I had the privilege of attending the men's prayer meeting, also the Sunday school, and of preaching to a very interested congregation of listeners. It was a pleasure to be with them.

The pastor, Rev. C. G. Isley, preaches here three times per month and is doing a good work among these people. If possible this church should be grouped with some other church or churches so as to enable the pastor to get a living salary without having to turn to other work.

Haw River.

On Sunday afternoon I drove to Haw River for the night service and had the pleasure of preaching to a good congregation of people who gave earnest heed to the Word. This is a very faithful persevering band of workers They have gone forward in the face of difficulties before which less faithful ones might have given up. Just now the mills at Haw River have stopped and no one seems to know when they will start up again, so right at this time the people must have a bit of help to tide along with their church debt.

Rev. T. A. Williams is serving this church for the third year, and is giving it his very best, being able to give them only one Sunday per month.

There are four churches in Haw River and no resident pastor. This condition should be remedied in some way.

Rev. J. W. Quick.

Word came to me last week of the going home of Rev. J. W. Quick of Pageland, S. C. For some months he had been in failing health, suffering with stomach trouble and with high blood pressure. Bro. Quick was a good man and a strong preacher and he will be missed among us. An obituary committee will be regularly appointed.

Rev. D. R. Williams.

On yesterday I was grieved to learn of the severe illness of Rev. D. R. Williams of Graham. Bro. Williams has been seriously ill for a week, and during that time Drs. W. R. Goley and his son Willard, one or the other and sometimes both, have been constantly by his bedside.

Bro. Williams had flu followed by a severe heart trouble. At one time his life was despaired of and his boys were called home from New York and Boston. Let all who pray join us in very earnest prayer that God will spare to us this noble worker.

God's Acre.

It is pretty cold this morning, but planting time is here. Let me again urge that in many of our county churches groups be formed among the C. E. Societies, or Sunday school classes, or Ladies' Societies who will plant an acre or more cotton, or potatoes, or some other money yielding crop, the proceeds of which will go to the General Conference Budget. The ladies of Bess Chapel are planning to plant three acres in cotton to pay on G. C. B.

I trust many churches will do likewise.

Appointments.

This week Mrs. Dixon and I are in a meeting with Rev. G. H. Hendry in Gibsonville, and my time next Sunday will be given to this church and the Fountain Place Church.

1. April 24 and 25, Mecklenburg
2. May 2nd. 11 A. M. Commencement sermon [illegible]
3. May 2nd P. M. Grace Church, Greensboro.

Yours in the Master's Service, A. G. Dixon.

NOTICE.

The latter part of this week I am hoping to mail out the book by Dr. Lewis, "The Minister and His Own Soul." I shall appreciate it if those who subscribed will send the price, $1.25, as soon as you receive the book. I have a few copies that were not subscribed for and shall be glad to mail these to those who want them as long as they last.

Thanking you for your immediate attention and cooperation.

L. W. Gerringer, Appointed by Conference to Distribute the books.

Mt. Pleasant News.—The Sunday school is getting on nicely under the management of Mr. J. R. Stone.

The work on the new church is progressing nicely.

Everybody is welcome to attend Sunday school which is held at 9:45 A. M.

Mr. Ruffin Stone visited at Mr. Charlie Payne's Sunday evening.

On April the first the death angel came and claimed for its victim Mr. E. L. Murphey. He was born July 15, 1884. He was married to Miss Myrtle Hilton; to this union seven children were born of whom five are living and two dead. His wife, five children, six sisters, and four brothers are left to mourn his loss. From his residence in Thomasville, he moved to Martinsville, then later to Lenior, where death came. He was a faithful member to his church. The funeral services were held at Mt. Pleasant Church conducted by Rev. R. S. Troxler assisted by Rev. J. A. Palmer. It is hard for us to understand how he was called home but Jesus needed another rose in his flower pot, so he called Brother Murphey to his bright celestial home. 'Tis sad to part from thee, but if we live the life he lived we, too, shall look on his face again.

Calvary News.—Quite a number of interesting things have happened at Calvary since the pastor last wrote to the Herald.

On Tuesday evening, March 23, more than fifty sat down to a splendid banquet in the church hut. The occasion was the honoring of the two winning classes in the Sunday school Auto Contest. Miss Pearl McCulloch's class of young ladies and Miss Brooks' class of younger ladies came out together in the contest. The other adult classes of the school gave them the banquet. All present, as far as could be seen thoroughly enjoyed the evening.

Easter Sunday evening at 7:30 the Sunday school gave an Easter program. The children did well. A good offering was received. The young ladies who prepared the program have our sincere thanks for the good service they rendered their church and their Master. It is a kind of service that is not easy but that is very necessary if we are to develop the young life of our churches.

The second quarterly conference met April the 5th. The usual business of the conference was transacted. (Sometimes we have read reports of quarterly conferences that said "Business was transacted in harmony," and I have wondered why a group of church people should transact in any other way.) There are differences of opinion at Calvary but we do not expect anything else but harmony. Brothers J. N. Kirkman and L. W. Jobe were selected as nominees for delegate to Annual Conference. A committee was selected to consider the matter of providing more room for our growing Sunday school. It is hoped that some more room may be provided at an early date.

At the morning service last Sunday Miss Josie Causey was elected to the position of Recreational Director for our church and Sunday school. She will have the supervision of all the social and recreational activities of the church and Sunday school. Already she is having a small play ground put in shape back of the church. We believe that God put into the hearts of boys and girls the instinct to play, and that He would have his church supervise and direct that instinct.

The Sunday evening services, including the Senior C. E. service, and the mid-week service, will be called off during the period of the Stephens Evangelistic meeting. We are hoping and praying for a great spiritual awakening in Greensboro.

The Ladies' Aid Society is still planning to carpet our church this spring. We are sure that will add a great deal to the attractiveness and comfort of our church.

The delegates from the two missionary societies will have a good report to make at the branch meeting in Thomasville next week Both societies have raised their budgets in full.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

High Point.—Funeral services were conducted Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock for Mrs. A. C. Atkinson, who died last Thursday at her home on Route 2. Her pastor, Dr. Brown, officiated, and he was assisted by Rev. E. J. Harbinson, pastor of East End M. E. church. Mrs. Atkinson joined our church in 1914, but owing to delicate health, could not attend services regularly. Her death followed an illness of two years. The pall-bearers were Messrs. C. L. Gray, J. D. Koonce, D. E. Whitt, M. P. Sechrest, J. W. Hinkle, and S. P. Montgomery. The flower-bearers were Misses Ruth and Elizabeth Welch, Daisy Lee York, Lalah Sheppard, Edith Murphy, and Agnes Coble The burial was made in Oakwood cemetery Much sympathy is extended to the huband and children in their great loss.

The Junior Mission Circle with Mrs. R. M Andrews, as Supt. will meet in the Christia Endeavor room of the church next Saturda afternoon.

The play, "The Minister's Wife's Ne Bonnet," which was postponed on account o illness and death in some of the families o those taking part, will be given on Friday ev ening, April 23.

On Easter Sunday in 1918 Alson Gray, infan son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Gray, was baptize by Dr. Brown in the old church. Just eigh years later, on Easter Sunday of this yea young Alson presented himself for membe ship, and was received into our communio and fellowship by the same pastor. His great grandfather, Rev. Alson Gray, was one of th pioneer preachers in this section, and spe his life in founding his beloved church. Ma this young life so beautifully begun continu to be an honor to his parents and friends, an a glory to his sainted forbears.

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown returned home Thurs day night from Bremen, Ga., where she wen to visit her mother, Mrs. Adamson, who is il

With appropriate ceremony the local U. D C. Chapter presented a beautiful North Caro lina flag to High Point College at chapel ser vice on Monday, April 12, the anniversary o the Halifax Convention. The presentatio speech was made by Senator O. E. Mende hall, and Dr. Andrews accepted it on beha of the college.

The great people of the earth today are th people who pray—people who take time t pray. They have not time. It must be take from something else. That something else i important, very important and pressing, bu still less important and pressing than praye There are people who put prayer first an group the other items of life's schedule aroun and after prayer. These are the people toda who are doing the most for God in winnin souls, in solving problems, in awakenin churches, in supplying both men and mone for mission posts, in keeping fresh and stron the lives far off in sacrificial service on th foreign field, where the thickest fight is goin on, and in keeping the old earth sweet a littl while longer.—S. D. Gordon.

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE.

We are very anxious that every Sunday school superintendent and every pastor in the Methodist Protestant Church should have at once a copy of the 1926 Children's Day Service, and we have put forth our very best efforts to have this done, for we mailed last week a copy to all of them whose names and addresses we have in our files, or could secure in other ways.

If for any reason whatsoever a copy did not reach you, please drop me a card immediately, Rev. Fred. C. Klein, Berwyn, Md., and a copy will be mailed to you promptly.

We are anxious for our pastors and superintendents to see it, because it represents the splendid work of an artist in its beautiful front cover, and excellent photographs from Japan, China, and India, and the first class work of our printing establishment, The Stockton Press.

The selection of recitations, dialogues, and the pageant entitled "Hold me to the Cross" furnish material for a most excellent Children's Day service, and it is largely the work of Methodist Protestants, and has been prepared exclusively for our own Sunday schools.

The object of providing our schools every year with a distinctive Children's Day Service at considerable effort and expense is to aid the schools in their work of training the young in the things of the Kingdom, and of enlisting them, in the formative stage of their life, in its operations which seek to bring a lost world to God and the higher life.

Another and very important purpose of providing the Service is to secure the money needed for carrying on our great and growing work in the three countries where the Union Board now operates with its missionaries and native workers, and the properties that have been provided in the past by the contributions of our people through various channels.

We have long prayed that God would raise up workers for our foreign missionary work and that He would abundantly bless their efforts in reaching the heather, and in training those brought to Him so as to become consecrated workers in the further extension of the work, and God has answered our prayers most generously.

But the record unfortunately shows that the Union Board has not received enough money from the churches thus far this year to carry on the work, and has had to direct that the budgets for the year 1926-1927 shall be even less than those of last year, and that is going backward.

We as a denomination ought to help answer our prayers, yea, to render unto God the things we know are reasonably expected of us and which when given will abundantly provide funds for the work to be developed naturally.

We have done our best in the preparation of the Children's Day Service in all its parts and are necessarily compelled to look to Methodist Protestants for the money to maintain the work and provide for its growth under God's blessing.

The Children's Day offerings have formed a large part of the Union Board's income, and that income needs this year especially to be increased more than last year to meet obligations and conduct the work abroad.

We earnestly appeal to every pastor and Sunday school superintendent to send in an order for their school without delay, and to exert themselves in holding a service and in securing a large offering which will count, of course on the local church's budget.

Fred. C. Klein.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

Our landing at Civita Veechia, the Port of Rome, was interesting from the very beginning. There we took a special train which was in waiting for us. After a little delay caused by the poor landing facilities we started toward the Eternal City.

Near the sea the country is mountainous but fertile as is seen by the well tilled fields and pastures.

I am sure that I saw more sheep here than all I had ever seen all my life put together. In field after field large flocks were seen grazing in the green pastures.

The train cars like all in which we had traveled over here, were small, resembling our street cars in some measure. They are made up into compartments with an aisle on the side with a door entering each compartment from the side, each compartment seating about eight people.

Arriving in Rome a little late we were rushed through the morning program. Our first visit was to St. Peters. Here one is astonished at the wealth that has been poured into this magnificent building. It has to be seen to be appreciated so far as its beauty and grandeur is concerned. I could not help but think how money is extracted from the poor in some places to keep up this "departing glory," for it is the boost of the guides that it is not yet complete—been building for hundreds of years.

St. Peter's Square is really imposing, being about two hundred and forty seven yards wide, three hundred and fifty yards long and it is surrounded by two enormous colonnades, (the colossal work of Bernini,) composed of two hundred and eighty-four columns of two hundred and eighty-four pillars, and one hundred and sixty-two statues of Saints on the balustrade. In the middle of the square stands the Obelisk which is about twenty-six yards high with a metal cross at the top—said to contain the relics of the real cross of Christ. In front of the church is the wide stair case flanked by the statue of St. Peter, and St. Paul. From the dome a splendid panorama of the city is to be admired.

This gives you a faint idea of this gigantic building. The guides surely are Catleolies, because they tell you about these sacred relics with a seeming sincerity that would cause the unsuspecting to believe them.

I suppose if they did not affect to believe all these things the Pope would get their heads, if not physically, their craft as guides would be in danger. We saw the Vatican Museums, Sistine Chapel, Tonestries, Museum of Sculptures, Vatican or Papal Gardens; the latter is beautifull. We had pointed out to us where the Pope lived. I understand that quite a number of our people saw that gentleman the next day, but I confess, I had no desire to see him, therefore no effort or inquiries. The more I heard of the popes the less I thought of him and his system.

My party were quartered in the "Boston" Hotel, a familiar name and of course we thought we were in the Hub of Rome. Indeed it is a splendid hotel, clean and up-to-date in every way including the macaroni. After a splendid lunch we started on our afternoon tour. From the Pincian Hill a very fine view of the city.

By a mistake our chauffeur took us to the wrong place and caused us to miss some of the sights of the afternoon. Fortunately we came up with Mr. Boring, our Cruise Director and he saw to it that we were put on the right route to connect up with our party.

May I turn aside here to say that Mr. Boring sees to it that if any member of the Cruise misses anything, they are sent back even at extra expense to him. This has happened in a number of cases. As we went through the Catacombs there was a peculiar feeling experienced about like one has when passing a lonely graveyard alone at night.

To be privileged to travel the Appian Way with all the ease of a modern car, one could not help but think of the slow and tedious journey of Saint Paul as some believe he probably walked from his landing place on the other side of Italy. At any rate with the mode of travel in those days it was a hard journey.

The trip through the Colosseum was an impressive one as we were shown where the Christians were thrown to the wild beasts.

The points of interest here are too vast to undertake a description. If you have never read the history of Rome in those days you will enjoy it if you will only take the pains to do so. As for me I want to read and study three things with renewed interest. General history, geography, and most of all my Bible for if a trip like this does not stir up a renewed interest in these things there is not much profit. The wonderful statuary and paintings here by Micheal Angelo and Raphael are great to see. After dinner at seven in the evening most of us were so worn out we turned in for the night.

One of the most refreshing things that came at this hour was mail from home.

Many went sight-seeing, some to the opera but a bundle of fourteen letters from friends and loved ones in the home land caused me to spend the evening with people from home. The last mail too till we reach New York.

Next day we were left for independent action and twenty-four of my party, about half of them, secured five cars and two guides for another three hours' tour visiting the Mamertine Prison, where we saw the print (?) of St. Paul's face in a rock on the wall caused by a Roman soldier knocking him against it.

It was here that many royal prisoners brough from other lands died.

The Forum was visited, the Church of the Holy Stairs also where we saw one vast throng moving upward on their knees. It reminded one of a modern escalator. Then we could see them stoop and kiss the places where they claim the blood of Christ dropped when the crown of thorns was placed on his head. These steps they claim came from Pilate's Hall, and are the ones over which Jesus walked.

I could not help but pity these folks as they climbed upward on their kness.

Our guide was asked if this was the place where Martin Luther climbed up, but he only shrugged his shoulders and began to talk about something else. I put my hands on the old iron doors of St. John's Church which they claim are the doors that shut in the chamber where Ceasar was murdered.

Our guides tried to thwart us in our purpose to visit the Methodist College which overlooks all of Rome. But we cut out some other things in order to see this. It is a strategic point and the man who secured this for a school should be highly honored by the Methodist Episcopal Church. President Irvin of this College we found to be a very gracious host. They are doing a great work.

Our guides admitted that they had never been here before.

Doubtless many a visitor has been thrown off the way by them, and it may be that all those drivers as well as our guides will have to do penance for taking us up there.

Such frauds as are practiced here and the ways they take to advertise themselves makes one who is a Protestant glad that he is not under such a system.

One month in Rome would keep one busy and then there would be much left to tell. Two short days is all I had. So you may know after seeing so much and hearing so much about certain places where St. Peter's chains are, the bones of St. Paul &c &c. it is hard to pick out and put in one short letter that which will interest all. My next will be of Nice and Monte Carlo. N. G. Bethea.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. J. M. Stone, Editor.

Bethel Home.

This Tubercular Hospital for young men under the personal direction of Rev. Homer Casto at Weaverville, N. C., is the only institution of its kind in our denomination, so far as we know.

Women of the Home Missionary Society, do you know that our organization is the only one that helps support that Home? Mr. Casto gets help from interested friends, too, and it is splendid that he does, for we are not giving him enough to finance it.

Bethel Home is a part of the Woman's Missionary Society; how great a part is up to us. Have we realized the possibilities in that institution to care for Christian men who have tuberculosis, at a nominal price and aid them to find health again? Also a fund for the Memorial Cottage was started—this building to house women patients —but haven't we been very slow in adding to this fund? If we were needing to go to such a place—well, folks, how about it?

Mr. Casto with his abundant faith in God does not become despondent. The money did not come fast enough for the Memorial Cottage, so Mr. Casto, needing more room so badly is building an addition to the Home.

He needs money for this work. In a recent letter from Mr. Casto to our State President we quote: "Dear Mrs. Hammer—I was sorry to see that the Bethel Home apportionment was falling behind. We are now building an addition to our home and I have had visions of a big check from the treasurer soon. But I'm not worrying, it will come from some source."

May we keep Bethel Home on our hearts and pray for Mr. Casto and his work —then give as freely as we can. Let's prove to Mr. Casto we are with him. We shall confidently expect every Auxiliary in the N. C. Branch to pay every cent of the budget due Bethel Home. Will you do that and then give more if possible? Instead of the $410.00 budget for Bethel Home by the North Carolina Branch will we make it $500.00 in the report at Thomasville?

A Suggestion.

This idea comes from one of our most loyal members and we are glad to give it to you. We think it will be helpful, and our successor, as your Editor will, no doubt, be glad to use all reports from the Branch meeting in the Missionary Dept.

A part of the letter is as follows: "I would like immensely to refer to our Branch minutes all through the year. If each committee, which submits a report to the Branch, would make two copies and file one with the State Editor she could have them printed in the Missionary Dept. of the Herald, as space permits. Then each member who values these reports can clip them from the Herald to file for reference. Enough people who do not attend the Branch meeting would appreciate reading the reports to make the second copy of each report worth while."

Will the various committees think over this suggestion and bear in mind the help it will be to the new editor in keeping facts before the public?

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—APRIL 25.

The Story of Cain and Abel.

Lesson Text: Gen. 4:1-12.

Golden Text: Gen. 4:9.

The Central Truth: A man must get right with God before he can do right for God.

Scriptural Points.

1. "I have gotten a man from the Lord." Children are the most precious and promising gifts from the Author and Giver of life. They are likewise the most valuable investments for God. "So, children are an heritage of the Lord; and the fruit of the womb is his reward." Ps. 127:3.

2. It is thought by some that Eve expected that her first born would be the promised Messiah,—the seed of the woman that would bruise the serpent's head. How sadly and completely were her hopes blasted! Instead of a Savior, a murderer!

3. The first sons engaged in the pursuits of civilization. They were far from being savages. In fact the race started its career in a fair state of civilization, from which it gradually fell by the degrading operations of sin.

4. Cain and Abel were both worshipers of the true and living God: Each brought of the products of his toil an offering unto the Lord. Their offerings were different in kind, in motive, and in result. Abel's offering was a sin offering, in which he acknowledged and confessed his sins. In his offering Cain ignored. or denied any need of forgiveness. Abel looked to the Crucified Lamb of God for salvation. He exercised saving faith in the promised Savior. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he it he being dead yet speaketh." Heb. 11:4.

5. Cain's was an offering from an impenitent soul. His heart was wicked. His worship was insincere. He was a religious formalist But a mere form of godliness cannot be acceptable to God.

6. "And Cain was wroth." He surely thought God was partial. And he was mad, not with himself, but with God and Abel. He blamed both of them for his failure. He stubbornly refused to look to the sin that lay at the door of his own heart as the sole cause of his offering being rejected.

7. "And the Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth?" The Almighty God condescended to appeal to Cain's conscience and sense of duty. The Lover of souls came seeking to save this lost soul. He came all the way from heaven to lead this mad sinner back to God.

8. Instead of yielding to this entreaty from the lips and heart and hand of God, Cain went deeper into sin. He had a quarrel with Abel His jealousy made him desperate. He thought that somehow Abel had come between him and God. The more he quarreled the madder he got. At last in a fit of frenzy he seized a deadly weapon and smote his brother to the ground.

9. "Where is Abel thy brother?" God was not asking for information. He was making a second attempt to save a lost soul. To this second appeal from a loving God Cain played a profound contempt. There was in his heart the least regret that he had mitted murder. "Am I my brother's keep is the comtemptuous reply that he flung into the face of Almighty God. He dis fully denied any responsibility for his con

10. "And now art thou cursed fron earth." It appears that Cain had now out his day of grace, that he had rej God would now abide upon him the re his life. From henceforth he would be a tive from impending justice. Even the would refuse to yield its increase in res ti his toil.

Practical Points.

1. Industry is the soul of civilization, is more than a necessity of life. It is a r to the harmonious development of man and womanhood. Work makes them st self-reliant, independent. "Six days shalt labor, and do all thy work." The comma work six days is just as imperative a command to rest the seventh day.

2. Worship is the soul of religion. God man came into mutual touch and comm in every act of true worship. Man com to touch with God in penitence, in faith in consecration. God comes into touch man in forgiveness, in regeneration, a the higher life. The cleansing, renewal infilling of the soul are the delightfu sults of acceptable worship.

3. The worship of the impenitent is mo —a very stench to the nostrils of the High God. "The sacrifice of the wicked abomination to the Lord." Prov. 15:8.

4. The sacrifice of Cain was like the er of the Pharisee who thanked God f self-righteousness. The sacrifice of Abe like the supplication of the publican cried, "God be merciful to me a sinne

5. Faith is the key that opens the the hand, and the home of God, from came streaming the blessings of the ment. "But without faith is impossi please him: for he that cometh to God believe that he is, and that he is a rew of them that diligeently seek him."

6. Compensation is a law of the un Reward awaits the righteous and retri overtakes the transgressor. "Be not dec God is not mocked: for whatsoever soweth, that shall he also reap. For h soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh corrupt; but he that soweth to the shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting. 6:7, 8.

Liberty M. P. Church is organizing a new Junior society this week, under the interested leadership of the pastor, Rev. F. L. Gibbs and the president of the Senior Society, Mrs. John W. Curtis. We expect to hear splendid things from this society.

Rev. W. D. Reed, pastor of Haw River Charge and a loyal booster of Christian Endeavor, announces a new society at Midway Church on his charge. That's fine, who is next?

At the Landrith meeting in Greensboro last Friday night, the three M. P. societies, Grace, Calvary, and West End had more representatives than all the other societies in the city combined. Grace society had the largest delegation, with 34 members present and received a free registration of the five officers for the State C. E. Convention to be held in High Point, as promised to the society having the largest number. Grace society also won the banner for having done the best work of any society in the city during the last three months.

At the last meeting of the Greensboro City C. E. Union, Rev. E. Lester Ballard, pastor of West End Church, was elected President of the city union. Brother Ballard has had wide experience in C. E. work and will, no doubt, lead the city union into greater accomplishments.

The Senior society of First Church, High Point, will be hosts to the State Christian Endeavor Convention to be held June 18-20 and president of the High Point city union announces that great plans are being made for a splendid convention.

CHURCH MEMBER CENSUS.

In 1925, nearly forty-seven million persons in the United States were church members according to the annual church census compiled by the Christian Herald. That was a gain of more than 800,000 over 1924. The Catholic Church is the largest single denomination, with a membership of more than sixteen million. It gained nearly 204,000 members during the year. The Methodist Episcopal Church ranks second with a total membership of nearly nine million. It gained more than 220,000 members in 1925. The Baptists rank third with nearly 8,400,000 a gain of more than 104,000 during the year.

BILLY BUNNY'S SECRET.

The twins found a surprise waiting for them when they reached home after their nice visit at the seashore, and the twins dearly loved surprises.

A lovely, gentle old lady had come during their absence to make her home with them, and Roy and Rae were sure that she would have lots and lots of wonderful stories to tell them.

"This is Aunt Susan," their daddy said, "and you must be very good to her because she is my great aunt."

"What's a great aunt, Daddy?" interrupted Rae.

"A great aunt," smiled Daddy, "is an aunt of your father or mother. You remember Aunt Susan is my mother's sister or my aunt and so she is your great aunt. When I was little, she was very, very good to me, for my mother was ill a great deal. I remember what fine stuffed animals she would make for my little brother and me. There were ever so many cats and dogs, and once she made an elephant, and another time a rabbit with pink-lined ears and a fuzzy tail."

"Would they stand up?" demanded Roy. "And how big were they?"

"Oh, about so big," Mr. Foster said, pointing to the hem of Rae's little pink dress. "And we used to enjoy having circus parades and the cat was as big as the elephant."

Aunt Susan beamed happily at the recollection, and nodded her head so that the soft little silvery curls which framed her face trembled and bobbed as if they were eager to take part in the conversation.

"I remember," chuckled Aunt Susan, "that I'd like to make some animals now. I haven't tried it for years, but I am sure I could do it."

"Will you begin right off," begged Roy. "I'll go ask Muvver for the things," and away he went.

The next day Aunt Susan had forgotten all about the animals, although she had a fine, big bunny well started. Again and again the twins would find her looking out of the window, rocking back and forth, pretending to cuddle a little baby in her arms, and crooning a soft little lullaby song to herself.

They could not understand it, but their mother drew them aside and explained softly:

"You mustn't mind Aunt Susan's odd little ways, my dears, for she is so old that she has become like a little child again. She thinks she has one of her own babies in her arms and is rocking it. We will be very good to her for we may be like that ourselves some day."

Roy and Rae couldn't imagine how that could be, but they loved Aunt Susan already she was so sweet and kindly. So they were quite patient when they had to explain to her over and over again that they wanted a circus parade just like Daddy used to have. Then Aunt Susan would nod her dainty little head, unclasp her thin, white hands, look pleased and say:

"Of course you do, children. I'll go right at it."

And sure enough, one morning soon after Rae and Roy found a fine, big rabbit right on the breakfast table between their two places! The rabbit's ears were lined with pink velvet, and stood right up as though Bunny were listening. It had big, sturdy front paws which enabled it to sit solidly wherever it was put, without any danger of tipping over. And around Billy Bunny's neck was a handsome bow of blue ribbon.

Roy and Rae shouted with glee. It was the very finest rabbit they ever had seen. Aunt Susan was as pleased with the delight of the children as they were with the toy, and just as Rae was explaining excitedly that the elephant must be 115 times as big as the rabbit so it could lead the circus parade properly, Molly came running in from the kitchen.

"O, ma'am," she cried, addressing Mrs. Foster, "There have been burglars here, and they have stolen the silver spoons! I can only find two of them, and who knows what else is gone!"—and Molly threw her apron over her face and began to weep bitterly.

"Please," she begged, "don't be thinkin' I took 'em for they were there when I did the dishes last night!"

In the commotion which followed, Billy Bunny was forgotten for a few minutes, but after breakfast the twins carried their new treasure out on the piazza, and Aunt Susan went with them. She insisted on playing with the rabbit, for she said it liked her best. Roy threatened to go over and play with Teddy Tradels and stay the whole morning if she didn't play fair.

"There, there, children," soothed Aunt Susan, looking much troubled. "Please don't quarrel for it makes my head ache. Little boys and girls didn't quarrel when I was your age," she assured them, "and I am sure your father never wrangled with his brother about any of the animals I made him."

"P'raps they fighted when you weren't around," suggested Rae.

Aunt Susan shook her head.

"Oh, no," she said, quite shocked.

Just at this moment a big policeman came up the steps, and Mrs. Foster took him into the library. He questioned Molly about the spoons, and Rae learned that they were valuable because they were heirlooms, and heirlooms were something which people prized and passed on to their children when they had got done using them.

For several days the hunt for the spoons was kept up, but they couldn't be found.

Billy Bunny proved to be a very amiable rabbit. He never ran away and was ready to take part in any play the children planned. Rae loved to wheel him up and down in her doll carriage, and Roy liked to show him to the little white poodle next door, for the poodle would growl and look very fierce as if he were afraid of the rabbit.

Billy's fine, white coat was beginning to look quite soiled, but the children didn't mind that. They loved him better and better, and each night they took turns carrying him to bed with them.

From time to time, they urged Aunt Susan to begin work on a big, big elephant, but idea seemed to daze her.

"Let's look at the picture of an elepha she said one day. "Here is my reading gl and it will magnify a little elephant make it look like a big one. Yes, here' pachyderm."

"A pachyderm!" echoed the child "What in the world is that?"

"Why, it's an elephant," said Aunt Su

For once Rae had nothing to say. The quite staggered her.

"Teddy Tradels had his mother's rea glass one day," informed Roy, "and burned the back of my hand with it."

"I don't believe it!" scoffed Rae.

"Let me show you," persisted her bro —and sure enough in a few minutes Rae cr "Ouch! It does burn, doesn't it. Let me it."

Before Aunt Susan could object, Ray Roy ran down to the nursery where the streamed in warmly. Rae looked about something to test the glass on, and there Billy Bunny patiently waiting.

"He's only a stuffed rabbit," Rae rema ed, "and he can't feel. So I'll turn the s shine on one of his ears."

"You better stop," warned Roy, "for ly's fur is scorching. Oh, you've burne hole right through—you naughty, naug girl," shouted Roy. "See, I can put my ger right through the cloth," and suiting action to the word, Roy stuck his finge and wiggled it around so as to make the bu flop one ear in such a comical way that doubled up with laughter.

"Let me try it," she giggled, and with any more ceremony, she grabbed Billy Bu and thrust in her own small fore-finger. T a look of amazement spread over her fac

"I—know something"—she said slo "that you don't! Bill Bunny is a thief," announced. "See, he's got one of our spoons inside his ear."

Rae pulled aside some of the cotton stuff

"And it's a heirloom," she added sever

The twins felt with exploring fingers the outside of the other ear, and the st front legs, and then they ran excitedly their mother. Aunt Susan was in their m er's room visiting with her.

"Why yes," said Aunt Susan placidly, had to have something like that, you kn to make the ears stand up!"

And sure enough, when Billy Bunny operated on with a pair of shears, there every missing spoon!

Daddy laughed until he cried when he c home that night, and of course the twins' ther was pleased too.

Billy was fixed up next day so he just as good as ever, only he had one cl ear and one soiled one, and there were tle thin pieces of wood for bones in p of teaspoons.—Selected.

"Did you behave in church?" was asked a little one returned from the morning serv "Course I did," was the reply. "I hear lady in the pew behind say she never sa child behave so."—(Boston Transcript.)

THE TRAPPERS.

Well, kid, let's go," said Tom one day just before dawn to his younger brother, Dick.

Dick saw that his big brother carried his rifle, and a mysterious sack. He had never been invited to go along before, but the day before had been his ninth birthday. He felt himself to be almost a man.

"Oh, Tom," said their sister, Helen, "I hope you won't kill very many things."

"Only muskrats, rabbits, minks and anything else that I can," replied her biggest brother. "They all are at each other, cruel as can be. Besides, if I have luck and make a good haul today, I might give you a nice skin for yourself."

Their mother tried not to hear the conversation, for her sympathies were with the animals, but at the same time one must live and the boy's father had been a trapper. She was determined to educate the children and animals' fur brought in good money.

"Be careful," she cautioned, following her sons to the door. "Don't be out after dark."

"Don't worry if we're not back," said Tom. "I'll take good care of Dick."

Dick was so afraid that he might be called back and not allowed to go after all that he started off on the run, followed by Skipper their dog.

Tom sternly called them both back.

"Look here, kid," he said. "I'm captain of this party, see? Don't you dare run, or move without my say-so, or you stay home. Skipper, back into the house. You take care of Mother and Sis. Here, Buck, come with us!"

Skipper walked mournfully into the house while Buck, a wise old black dog, came proudly forward. The mother smiled at her son's masterful ways which were so much like his father's.

On trudged the young trappers, sniffing the air, a fine sturdy couple; Tom, though only fifteen, carrying himself like a man.

Dick was much subdued by his call-down but he knew better than to talk back.

"We'll go down to the swamp, it's all frozen over. I want to see if you're any good or not," said Tom. "I don't expect to get a thing today with you along. You'll probably get to fidgeting and scare all the game off. In which case, back you go to the end of mother's apron string for another year. I'm giving you your chance though. If you make good, we'll be pals and form a company—the firm of Dodson Brothers, Inc. How does that sound, huh?"

Dick could only nod his head. His heart beat fast with hope. He clenched his teeth. "I'll make good!" he muttered fiercely.

"The first thing to learn, you know," said his brother more kindly, "is quiet. You've got to know how to freeze. You've got to have control. It's our chance in life against their lives, see?"

Dick nodded again.

"Now, when we get to the swamp, we'll part company," ent on Tom. "You'll go one way, I'll go the other. Go as softly as you can. Squat or sit and listen. Study the ground Sniff the air. If you see animal tracks, come back to a meeting-place which we'll agree on, and tell me."

They agreed on a gaunt poplar tree, which towered above the trees around. "Are you afraid to go alone?" asked Tom. "It's our only chance. I'm 'fraid if I have you with me you'll scare away the game."

"I'm not afraid," said Dick, and the boys parted company.

Dick slipped quietly along the frozen swamp and every footfall seemed to make a terrible rustling among the dry remnants of rushes. He had to watch every step and tried practicing a noiseless glide. Suddenly his eyes caught something in the frozen mud of the bank. Tiny leaf-shaped tracks. Something had gone that way, but not recently, for the frost had been in possession for several weeks.

Dick thought he would follow the tracks just for practice. He wiggled his slim, strong young body in and out among the rushes, doubling over often to find the little trail. He was so intent, he was very much scared when a rabbit darted out near his foot and scampered for cover.

"Tom only wanted to get rid of me," he thought. "How can I hurt without a gun? What good does it do to see rabbits?"

He tightened the red handkerchief around his fur cap. Tom insisted on the handkerchief as a safeguard against other hunters who might mistake the youngster for game and shoot.

Well, no use grumbling, he thought. Every dog has his day. So back to the tracing of the little track!

All at once the little footprints ceased. Dick straightened out and found himself sniffing the air. He smelt something. Fur! All round he looked. Rushes, rushes, everywhere, and amongst the rushes frozen hummocks, ever and ever so many. He sat down and waited, sniffing and sniffing. There was nothing to be seen, but suddenly behind him from the awful stillness of the white woods, came a long-drawn cry, like a child in pain.

The sound chilled his blood. "Cat!" he muttered, and rising perhaps a little too hastily, began to retrace his steps to the meeting-place.

Tom was there waiting for him a little anxiously. He too had heard the lob cat's cry.

"Hello," he said. "It's seven o'clock. I found some rabbit runs and have set a line of traps. That's better than nothing."

"I saw a rabbit, too," said Dick, trying to put reproach in his voice. "Of course, I couldn't catch him in my hands."

"What else did you find?" grinned Tom.

"I found old tracks and I smelt something?"

"Smell something," said Tom. "What?"

"A furry smell," said Dick. "But I didn't see a thing."

"Lead me to it," Tom ordered shortly, shouldering his traps, axe and rifle.

Dick had a good sense of direction. He felt he couldn't get lost if he tried. So he set off without hesitation, and pointed out the little leaf-shaped tracks frozen in the mud.

"Muskrat!" whispered his brother. "Good luck! Good!"

On they went to the place of rushes and hummocks.

He saw his brother whittling rods, while he tramped up and down along the bank. Where there was a hollow sound, he knew there was a secret passage, so he drove a couple of rods down. Then with his axe he cut a trench in the ice back of the colony of houses, and set Buck and Dick there with instructions to drive the muskrats back. Then he went to the lower side of the houses and cut the ice, scooping away the rushes and mud which formed a dam.

The pond was shallow, but there was always some water. The water began to move as Tom dug and cut. Presently out from under the ice came muskrats by the dozen. Tom banged them on the head as fast as he could, but beasts escaped. He made sure that one blow killed each of them, as he was not a cruel boy.

The sun was setting over the hill as the boys sat down to count their game. Tom had been busy skinning his catch of muskrats, while Dick and the dog went off to investigate the string traps. They came back with ten rabbits. These they would take home as the flesh was good to eat.

"Dick, we've got five fine black skins, we'll get fifty cents apiece, maybe seventy-five," Tom said. "These ten are extra nice brown ones, we ought to get forty or fifty for each. And these aren't so good, but we'll get more than a quarter apiece, I bet. This is what I call a great day."

Laden with spoils, the two young trappers trudged wearily home, and the firm of Dodson Brothers was formed that very evening. Helen cried when she saw the poor little animals, but she was glad enough to eat a rabbit stew and wear later a pretty muskrat collar.—Selected.

THE JOLLY GROCER.

The store that belonged to the jolly grocer was a favorite place of Jamie's. When his mother sent him there with a list of things to buy with which she would later make good things to eat, Jamie was often tempted to linger. He liked to look at the neat rows of gaily labeled cans on the shelves, the piles of boxes containing breakfast foods or starch, or at the great pyramids of golden oranges that the jolly grocer was so expert at building on the shelf in the window. The jolly grocer was an artist. With some red apples, several stalks of celery, some lettuce and a few boxes of fruit he could make a picture, with the window for a frame, that made people stop and admire, and so, of course, come in and buy.

Jamie liked the jolly grocer very much—not only because he was generous with the sweets that sat in neat figures under the glass candy case—although that was not to be despised, either—but because he always had time to talk to a little boy, provided that his store was not full of customers; then Jamie never asked a single question, but piled his things into his basket and marched out before. Occasionally, when trade was not brisk, and the store had been swept clean and the windows polished with a fascinating brush with a long handle, Jamie would hop up on the counter while the jolly grocer went through the list and filled the basket and they would have the nicest kind of a talk.

One morning Jamie's mother had her marketing list ready very early. There was nobody in the store but the jolly grocer himself. So Jamie made up his mind he was going to find out something that had been bothering him for a long time.

"Mr. Grocer," he said, "I should like to know why people call you that."

"Call me what?" asked the jolly grocer running his finger down the list. "One dozen eggs, one pound of butter—"

"Why, a grocer, Mr. Grocer," said Jamie. "Now my father knows all about engines and he is called an engineer. You know all about flour, and sugar, and breakfast foods but people don't call you a sugareer—," he laughed—"or a breakfastfooder, or anything like that! They call you a grocer. What is that?"

The jolly grocer looked at Jamie over his spectacles, and his blue eyes twinkled. "Well," he said, "I've been in the grocery business over twenty years, and I've had all kinds of questions asked, but nobody ever asked me that before. You certainly have a busy little think-box!"

Jamie's heart sank. Perhaps the jolly grocer didn't know! Grown people did 't always know the answers to questions one asked them.

"Don't you know why people call you a grocer, Mr. Grocer," he faltered.

"Yes, I do happen to know," said the jolly grocer, "just like I happen to know where nearly everything in my store comes from, or how it grows or is made."

"My! but you must be smart!" said Jamie admiringly. "How do you know all those things? I wish I did!"

"Well, you see everyone's got a hobby, I guess," the jolly grocer confessed. "Your dad's hobby is golf, maybe, and Mr. Smith's is flowers. Mine is finding out everything I can about the things in my store."

"Why, you're just like me!" cried Jamie. "My mother and father say sometimes I'm a perfect—nuisance, I ask so many questions. But they always answer them," he added.

"Well, you're a lucky boy," said the jolly grocer. "So you want to know why people call me a grocer, do you?"

"Yes, sir, if you please, sir!" answered Jamie.

"Well, suppose we sample this new box of chocolates candy while we talk?" proposed the jolly grocer. Wasn't he just the nicest man the world ever knew, Jamie thought!

"We have to take a journey back to [illegible] "Now so far back as some of the things here in my store can be traced, it's not much more than a thousand years, which isn't so many at that."

"Whew! That sounds like a good many to me!" said the little boy.

"Well, before that time there were plenty of peddlers who traveled from town to town in England, with packs on their backs in which were fine clothes, wine, salt and spices. Their trade was mostly with the rich people and the monks in monasteries, for the poor class of people raised what they ate, mostly, and made what they wore.

"They wove their own goods, didn't they?" asked Jamie.

"Yes, and they didn't have as many new clothes as we have now-a-days," said the jolly grocer. "Well, after a while instead of people buying only from the traveling peddlers, they went into the towns where several peddlers sat together out on the streets with their wares in front of them."

"Something like our markets?" Jamie suggested.

"Exactly. That's what they were called—markets. Then there were fairs, when people from the country side flocked to town to do their trading or buying. For eggs or butter maybe they would get some salt or some tallow, or maybe some spices that had been brought from distant countries. Spices were very expensive in those days, and it was the style for the rich people to use a great many in their food. So after a while men who dealt only in spices came along—'Pepperers' or 'Spicers' they were called. They formed a guild or a Society of Spicers, but the king put such a heavy tax on them that they went out of business."

The jolly grocer scratched his head. "They had their troubles, too, I guess. After the Spicers came the Grocers," he went on. "Some smart fellows thought it would be a good thing to buy things in large quantities—en gros, they called it, although I don't think 'gros' is an English word—sounds French, to me. Anyway it means in large quantities. And that's what the name grocer comes from. En gros. Grocers are supposed to buy things in large quantities—wholesale you know."

"En gros—grocer" cried Jamie. "Oh, yes I see, Mr. Grocer! Now there's some sense in that, isn't there?"

Just then a customer came into the store so Jamie picked up his basket to go. "That was a dandy story, Mr. Grocer," he said as he opened the door. "Much obliged."

And from the way the jolly grocer's blue eyes twinkled, Jamie knew that he had enjoyed telling as much as Jamie had enjoyed hearing just why a grocer is called a grocer.

"Certainly there is no other way in which one may do as great a thing as by winning another to Christ for 'he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall cover a multitude of sins.' That is the way to help take the Gospel to the farthest ends of the world."

Lovejoy.—Our second quarterly conference convened at Lovejoy on Saturday before second Sunday in this month, but owing to the inclemency of the weather there were several churches to report. However the business was transacted in a spirit of love and harmony.

On the 2nd Sunday morning at 11 o'clock our pastor, Rev. D. I. Gaines, preached an excellent sermon using as his subject the Empty Tomb, which he handled in a masterly way.

Because of the sickness and rough weather our Sunday school and preaching services almost normal. We are hoping that when spring comes up our attendance at all the services will greatly enlarge and that we all may take on renewed energy and continue doing our part in building up the Master's kingdom of our Master.

We did not have any Easter service this year, but we are aiming to have a Children's Day service sometime later in the season.

Since our last report one of our most faithful members, Mrs. Ida Freeman, has died. We miss her very much in our song service and Sunday school.

She leaves a husband and four children and a host of friends to mourn her loss, but we are sure of the fact that our loss is her eternal gain. May we all strive to meet her on that eternal shore where partings never come any more.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Mrs. Ira Lewis and Mrs. Johnie Edwards had charge of the program and deserve special thanks for their part in making this service a success.

Since our last report our hearts have been made sad by the death of one of our oldest and most faithful members, Mr. E. B. Quakenbush. Though he was past the four score mark he wasn't too old to come to church when able and was always glad to be there.

On the third Sunday in May there will be memorial services at Orange chapel. There will be a visiting speaker, and there will be services at eleven A. M. and two P. M. We hope to have a large attendance. Reporter.

Davidson, Linebery Church.—Our church is coming fine. Our newly elected Superintendent, Mr. L. Lanier, proves his worthiness to the people by his loyalty to the church. We want cooperation in our church, and we realize that our church is coming to the front fast. We want every one to be thinking and studying over our new church, which we want and will have; let's keep it fresh in our minds, and all work and pray for this end.

I feel like every one enjoyed the Easter Program rendered at our church Sunday morning, gotten up by the Handy School Faculty. We were glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Ira Ridge of High Point to worship with us Sunday.

Everybody come out to Sunday school. Let's have the best Sunday school this year ever. Come, and bring some one else with you. Tell people what we are doing at our church. Every one pray for us. Kate Frank, Reporter.

West Lexington, Scuth Davidson Charge.—The Sunday school attendance last Sunday was the largest that it has ever been in the history of the school. There were 145 present. The new class rooms which were completed last month are proving a wonderful improvement in the Sunday school attendance. The women's class, which is taught by Bro. W. C. Gibson, put up curtains in their room last week. It was a splendid improvement and makes the room much more attractive.

The preaching service last Sunday night was attended by an unusually large congregation. Bro. Crutchfield, our pastor, delivered the last of a series of six sermons on the Lord's Prayer. The text was Matt. 6:13.

The weekly prayer services have been attended by the usual number of people for the past few weeks. On Thursday night of last week Mrs. C. B. Way was the leader. Two different laymen have been conducting the prayer services during this conference year but a change was deemed advisable so the first woman leader served last week. This week another woman of the church, Mrs. [illegible] is to conduct the service.

This writer and family [illegible] Mr. Barber and family accompanied Pastor Crutchfield to Jerusalem and Cid churches last Sunday morning and afternoon. We were at Jerusalem at 11 o'clock in the morning where a small congregation gathered for the service. Bro. Crutchfield preached on Obedience. We went to Cid in the afternoon at three o'clock where a smaller congregation than was at Jerusalem attended the service. Bro. Crutchfield preached again, using as a text Hosea 7:8, "Ephraim is a cake not turned." This sermon was commented upon as the best sermon yet preached by Pastor Crutchfield.

We are to have preaching services next Sunday at West Lexington both morning and night. In our report last week it was stated that we would have two services the past Sunday. This was a mistake. We are to have two services next Sunday which is the third Sunday.

Our church is expecting to send some delegates to the missionary meeting at Community church, Thomasville, April 20 to 22.

We are planning for our spring revival which will probably be held next month. Rev. J. L. Trollinger, pastor of First church, Thomasville, is the engaged help for the meeting.

West End, Greensboro.—Under the direction of Miss Annabel Thompson, the children of the Sunday school had charge of the services Easter Sunday morning and delightfully entertained the large congregation with their songs and recitations. The offering taken for the Board of Home Missions amounted to more than sixty dollars.

In the evening the choir rendered Lorenz's cantata, "The Easter Evangel," to the delight of a large number of listeners. Those taking solo parts were Miss Effie Coulbourne, Miss Mabel Bull, Mrs. Paul A. Burns, Rev. Lester Ballard, Mr. M. H. Waynick, and Mr. W. A. Smith.

Mr. J. R. Holden, who was painfully and seriously injured on the Pomona Yards of the Southern Railway Friday, April 2nd, is still in St. Leo's Hospital, but shows signs of improvement. We trust he may soon be with us again.

A number of our young people attended the annual meeting of the Northern District of Christian Endeavor in North Carolina, held at Westminster Presbyterian Church, this city, Friday evening and had the pleasure of hearing Dr. Ira Landrith deliver a powerful message. Immediately following this meeting a short business session of the Greensboro City Union was held, and Rev. E. Lester Ballard was elected president to succeed Rev. Lawrence C. Little, who resigned because of the very heavy work before him in launching the Young People's Summer Conference at High Point College in July. We regret to lose Mr. Little in this work, but feel that we are fortunate in getting one to serve in this capacity who is as familiar with Christian Endeavor work as Mr. Ballard.

At the church business meeting Wednesday night, the membership voted unanimously to support and aid in the Stephens revival. Already homes have been thrown open for prayer meetings, and our pastor, together with a number of our good women, have served as leaders in the prayer meetings.

Miss Emily Ward spent the Easter holidays with her brother in Washington, D. C.

The Senior Christian Endeavor Society enjoyed an outing at Carraway Mountain, near Asheboro, Easter Monday.

Misses Margaret Osborne, Mabel and Stella Bull, and Lurlei Smith are among our young people who will graduate from Pomona High school next month.

We regret to learn of the illness of Mrs. C. F. Johnson.

Mr. Ballard's sermon on "Solace in Sorrow" was timely and brought comfort to many sorrowing hearts Sunday morning. We have had several accidents and deaths and much sickness among our membership and in the community recently, but, as was pointed out in the sermon, we have much for which to be thankful. At the evening service the Lord's Supper was observed.

Winston-Salem.—The Easter programs arrived too late to be used by our Sunday school at the Easter service but the Sacrifice offering amounted to one hundred dollars, which our Treasurer has forwarded to Brother Idol.

I have written to Dr. Klein for our Children's Day programs as we are anxious for them to arrive so that we can make good use of them. C. M. Compher.

Greenville Ct.—The rally was held at Philadelphia Church the 17th of March. It snowed on the night of March the 16th. We had a beautiful white carpet to walk and drive on next morning. I reached the church about 10 o'clock; they came from every part of the charge. It looked like the pastor was to be the whole shot. I was greatly relieved and my people drew a good breath and felt better when we saw Stubbins and Shelton drive up. Brother Dixon had broken down and was in Repair Shop, we were told, so we went in and commenced. Pastor conducted devotional, Bro. Shelton led prayer; Stubbins was introduced and he gave us a rouser. We all enjoyed it. After which we all put dinner together, pastor notified, thanks returned to our Heavenly Father by Rev. R. C. Stubbins. We all ate till filled and something less than seven basketfuls was taken up. About this time we were gladdened to see Dr. and Mrs. Dixon drive up. We reassembled—Dr. Dixon in chair. The usual routine of quarterly conference was gone through. Bros. E. S. Pearson and General Whitly were nominated to represent charge in the next annual conference.

A fine spirit prevailed through the entire session of conference. Dr. and Mrs. Dixon both blessed the audience with splendid addresses. The busy day closed and we all, I think, went home, feeling inspired by the many good things brought to us by these brethren and sister Dixon. Dr. and Mrs. Dixon remained with pastor, both made splendid addresses at our League meeting at Triplet High School at night.

GOD'S GIFT OF LOVE.

Peace on earth," the angels sang
On Christmas morn;
'Good will toward men," the answer rang,
"The Christ is born;"
The mighty God, the Prince of Peace,
Hath come from sin to give release;
From weary pain and sorroy cease,
All ye who mourn.

Ring out, ye bells, glad Christmas bells,
With songs of cheer;
The message which your cadence tells,
Send far and near;
"For unto us a son is given—"
God's gift of love from very heaven;
Let fear from every heart be driven—
The Christ is here!

"Behold, good tidings of great joy,
To all shall be;"
God's peace, with which is no alloy,
So full and free;
Join with the angel choirs to sing
Their hallujahs to the King;
Give to this message joyful wing,
O'er land and sea.

THE SINLESSNESS OF THE SAVIOR.

One of the most unique and significant fac- s in the consciousness of Jesus is his con- tion of his own sinless holiness. Not that was constantly asserting his freedom from ; such a self-assertion could hardly have led to arouse suspicion regarding the clar- and candor of his moral consciousness. is never said to have categorically assert- his sinlessness.

According to the Fourth Gospel he uttered challenge, "which of you convicteth me of ?" But it is not quite certain that these rds are meant in an absolute, universal se. It is not on the ground of assertions de by Jesus himself that the Christian rld believes in his perfection. The more im- diate reasons for that belief are these: (1) fact that his life reveals to us, under the sest scrutiny, no moral stain; and (2) the t that those who companied with him. ends and foes alike, received and attested same impression. Here was a man who med to those who knew him in the flesh to holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate m sinners, and whose spirit, purposes, and ds have ever since seemed to those who e contemplated them to be free from all nixture of sin. He was tempted, without lding. He lived in constant contact with l, without contracting it. He was a friend publicans and sinners, but was untainted their sordidness and selfishness.

The sinlessness of Jesus was something re than innocence; it was fulness, positive fection of life. Jesus was no recluse; his iness was no cloistered virtue. His charac- was not of that negative, ascetic type ose ideal is to escape from the sinful world l dwell apart in holy contemplation. Nor his perfection consist in a repression or ing down of any of the legitimate powers his manhood. He mingled freely with his low-men at their work and their recrea- ns, in their joys and in their sorrows. His life was always at its maximum of energy and strength. He had no fear of being soiled by con act with the world. He joined his brother men in the struggles of life and the battle with sin, proving himself to many the Captain of their salvation, leading them on to victory and strength. These are qualities and powers without which Jesus could not have been the Saviour. He qualified himself to be the Redeemer by the achievement of the perfect life; he attained completeness through his ex perience of trial, conquest and suffering and so became the author of life to all who will join themselves to Him.

Our Lord well knew what sin was. He had felt its attractive, seductive power. At the be ginning of his ministry the path to an easy victory had opened before him if he would bow to the requirements of the age and con sent to be the wonder-worker whom popular messianic thought demanded; but he saw that this would be but a false and hollow success. His soul was most sensitive to the approach and suggestion of evil; he detected it under its most winsome and deceptive disguises. In vain did Satan clothe himself as an angel of light; in vain did his suggestions take on the guise of plausibility and prudence; the an- swer was the same, Get thee behind me! And with a piercing glance did he discern the lurk- ing selfishness in the thoughts of other men.

He could detect the taint of hypocrisy in the prayers of the self-righteous, the intoler ance which often underlay religious zeal, the envy and meaness that sought to cloak them selves in an ostentatious generosity. None ever saw so clearly and exposed so plainly the sinfulness of other men; yet he confessed no sin of his own, he betrayed no consciousness of an evil bias or a selfish motive. Just here lies the supreme proof of the sinless holiness of Christ. It is impossible that one who knew and judged sin as he did could have failed to find and confess it in himself unless he had been conscious of a perfectly holy inner life. This is the moral miracle of Jesus; this is the transcendent, inexplicable wonder of his person. Men have tried to exalt him by as- cribing to him all manner of metaphysical characteristics and powers; but that which the gospels place in the forefront of their portraiture is just this moral completeness this perfectly filial consciousness, this stain- less, untainted holiness.

Without this he could not have been the Saviour; with it he could not but be. Perfect holiness fits him for perfect sympathy with sinners; perfect love enables him to bear the burdens of a sinful world. Law, righteousness, purity—does he not know what these are? They are the very breath of his own inner life. Is he not able to honor and exalt them? They are enthroned in his every thought; they preside over his every act. If a pure spirit like his ever visits our prison-house, he will sure- ly never condone our sin, and will open no door of escape except through purification, and will offer us no refuge and no safety save in a holiness like his own. Here is One who knows sin as no other ever knew it, who judg- es it as God judges. His eye discerns its b igl ting, soul-destroying power; he sees it black against the white radiance of the eter- nal love. If he undertakes to save men, he will save them from sin to holiness. Let his method be what it will; be his specific ex- periences in our world what they may, there is but one conceivable way in which Holy Love can recover sinful man, and that is by destroying sin through replacing it—by win- ning men into sympathy, contact, likeness to the life of holy love in God.—Stevens in "The Christian Doctrine of Salvation."

COLLEGE BUILDING FUND.

I regret that I have no receipts to report this week. Will not our friends, who can pos- sibly do so, keep us in mind, and endeavor to make a payment before next week?

I do have to report, however, $500.00 from Mr. John W. Ward and wife of Keokuk, Iowa, for Annuity Bond. Mr. Garrett became ac- quainted with these good people at the Gen- eral Conference, and by following the matter up has been able to show them that by taking one of our Annuity Bonds they not only have an assured income for life, but at the end the money will go for our College, and will con- tinue to do good.

The money received for Annuity Bonds is invested in first mortgages on real estate, which are held for the benefit of those hold- ing the bonds, so their security is absolutely safe. If friends of the College will be on the lookout they may find opportunities to secure contributions on the Annuity Bond Plan, or in other ways which may be of direct help to the College.

The College is our greatest undertaking, and it needs the constant interest and sympa- thy of our people. J. Norman Wills, Treas.

LETTER FROM INDIA.

March 20, 1926.

Weekly after reading the Herald I say to myself that at the earliest convenience I too shall write a bit. But unlike the many late reporters who always say that though they have not written yet they have done much worth telling, I fear that we have not much to report. We have had neither a great revival nor a pounding, yet I must do the washerman full credit, he did send us a leg of mutton last week. Though we are not sorry that there have been no poundings yet we regret very much that we cannot report a great revival. We did have a revival in the schools but all the children except a few small ones are Christians. However we have had a fair year in many respects and in our Sunday schools we feel like it has been a very good year. Not what it might have been nor what we should like it to be yet in our department we have more than doubled in Sunday school scholars. We are very grateful for this but with the material at hand we might have numbered hundreds more. We have taken into church membership only about a dozen. Yes, there must be about a hundred thousand unsaved left in our district, yet we feel like God has been quite generous with us. There are quite a few who are being taught now and we shall baptize them about the middle of June. After one says that he wants to become a Christian we have the preacher in his district teach him until he knows the chief things about our religion. In the majority of cases he or she is unable to read so he must learn about the Bible from the preacher and he must be taught to pray and how to pray. From what I can see from the Hindu he does not do much praying. So the new convert must needs learn to pray. He must be taught to sing the Christian songs as well as new tunes. So from this you can see that the village preacher is a very important man. As a matter of fact he is about the only one fortunate enough to get an opportunity to do real mission work. The poor missionary is run to death directing, teaching, and trying to learn how to do better work. For instance I get to teach only a small class of little boys from the school in which I work. We have six Hindu Sunday schools run by this school. The masters and big boys go out every Sunday morning before our Christian Sunday school time. I have to go weekly to visit one of these places to see how the teachers do and what trouble they may have and what they could do to have a better school. It also encourages the boys and teachers as well as the Hindu children. Nothing would please us more than to be able to go into some village alone and have our little Sunday school. But it now looks like we shall be compelled to try to help make teachers instead of doing the work. Yet we are told that India must be saved by Indians if she is ever saved, and though we should prefer to work first hand yet possibly we can do more by preparing others to do the work themselves. Every Sunday two teachers and three big boys from the school go together to their respective schools. But if the teachers are not along the boys take the class and enjoy it. Two Sundays ago the boys from one of the best schools came back covered with mud and cow manure. They came back smiling and as they looked like vicims of an election after much mud slinging, I too laughed. On this day they went alone and it was a Hindu holiday and on this day they throw colored ink or paint on every one. The boys were very fortunate to get off without some of this paint as it never comes out. The next Sunday they went back and a good crowd met them. About two months ago the masters failed to go with the boys to another village so they came back running and very excited. One boy had a small bottle in his hand and they all tried to tell me at once that there was a sick man who had taken a dose of the medicine and was getting worse rapidly. It so happened that the contents of the bottle was Sulphuric Acid and the man had purchased it in the market for the pain he often had in his stomach. I sent an ox cart for the man and had him taken to the hospital where he recovered. Since that time the boys say that their school has improved. Yes, the man who sold the medicine was prosecuted and only yesterday the boys were called to testify in the case.

Up until last October I had to look after all the work but at that time Mr. Cassen had completed his first examination and took his turn while I rested a bit in study. At the beginning of the new year we divided the work. He has charge of the farm and the district work while I have the boys' school and the evangelistic work done by the teachers and boys of the school. Our school has about seventy-five boys and teaches all the standards. One little new boy came yesterday and the fnuny part about him is his inability to speak a word of this language. He does not understand a single word of what I say and I understand less of what he says. I asked his mother how she expected him to study here but she too failed to get the point. I saw him playing with the little boys today so I suppose that there must be some way to express himself.

This is the hot season and our schools have holiday at this time. The examination will soon be given and about a month later the boys and I will be given two months holiday. Mrs. Minnis and I too are taking our holiday at this time and are expecting to leave for the hills in about three weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Cassen and two of the young ladies from the other bungalow are at Mahableswar now They will stay until June when the rains are expected to come there.

There are two or three other things I should like to tell of but I see that this is getting too long even now. The man whose people were about to cut off his nose for wanting to become Christian is here now and the little lost boy named Ant; both are interesting. I shall tell you about them next month.

We received the Journal of the last conference which read like the best novel and the Herald is a pleasant visitor even though a month after date. We are very happy to see that you are doing excellent work in all line The new interest in High Point, New Colleg New Church, and the Orphanage makes proud to be a member of the same conferenc Sometimes it is all we can do not to want be in the work with you in Dixie. When read of the good work you are doing in eve community our little work looks mighty sma Yet we are happy and healthy here and hope and pray that this work too will mo up somewhat like yours is doing.

I shall try to write again soon, and tell yo a bit of what it means to be a Christian eve in this age in India.

Praying that this may be a pleasant an profitable year for all in His service, I beg remain, Faithfully, J. F. Minnis.

THE GLADIOLUS—MY FAVORITE FLOWER.

By Luther K. Long.

In order for a plant with its flower to b come a general favorite four things are ne essary:

1. It must furnish an abundance of bloo soms.

2. It must show a large variety of beaut ful shades of color.

3. It must be satisfactory as a cut-flower.

4. It must be comparatively easy to grow.

All these requirements, and more, are ful met by the modern, improved Gladiolus.

It blo soms profusely. On a long spike fro twelve to twenty large florets open in succe sion, from three to eight being open at th same time. Two or three spikes often com from a single bulb. Planted in liberal quant ties, at intervals of ten days, one may enjo through a long season literally arm-loads delightful blossoms.

The colors are almost endless in variety— shades of pink, yellow, lavender, blue, carm ine, glowing reds and scarlets, to almo black. Every year, by planting hand-pollina ed seed, growers are adding to the list ne shades and interesting combinations of color

As a cut-flower the Gladiolus is pre-emi ently satisfactory. After the first floret h opened the stalk should be cut—please do n break it off—and placed in a vase. If you c off a half inch from the stalk each mornin and change the water in the vase, all the bu will open, requiring ten days to two week Nothing is more showy and cheerful on th table, in the window, on the porch, or in th church, than large boquets of these brillia flowers.

The Gladiolus is not difficult to grow in a most any sort of soil, though it respon gratefully to especially favorable situatio and thorough treatment. I have succeeded light sand and in stiff clay; but a rich, mois loamy soil is preferable to either of thes Ground that is suited in character and ferti ity to the production of general garden crop including corn and potatoes, will be fou adapted to the growth of these flowers. Su light, moisture, fertility, and thorough cult vation are the essentials.

No flower has been so much improved du the last twenty-five years as the Gladiolus, the improvement is still going on. A few en bulbs make a good start for a collec-. Other varieties should be added from e to time. Many of the sorts increase rap-, so that in a few year one may have ugh to satisfy all reasonable requirements. he first plantings of Gladiolus should be le at the same time early potatoes and peas put in. Successive plantings well into e will provide a succession of blossoms to gathered well into the fall.

JOHN 12:32.

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, draw all men unto me."

Ve hear a great deal of urging and exhort- christian people to "hold up Christ in r lives," for in so dong, this "will draw men unto him." And also, great stress is on what they call "lifting up Christ" in- pulpit. That the preacher in the pulpit, the people in their living, must "hold up ist before the world," so the world can see , and so be drawn, attracted, to him, and be saved—all be drawn, if he be "lifted " Their idea seems to be something like "elevation of the host"—something to be ally seen—at the altar, in the celebration the mass, in a Roman Catholic Church this all sounds very nice, but it is purely iful, being a gross perversion of the mea- of John 12:32. It is passing strange that ons cannot see the verse just following the in question, i. e., John 12:33, which plain- tates the fact that in the previous verse. n 12:32, Christ referred to what death he ld die—crucifixion—on the cross, having reference whatever to preaching nor godly ig. "This he said," in verse 32, "signify- what death he should die." This settles sense of verse 32. Not preaching, not liv- but, dying—on the cross. If he be "lifted " on the cross, not a figurative "holding up ist" from the pulpit, nor in the lives of people, but his sacrificial death on the s, he would "draw all" (men supplied by translators) "unto him."

ow just what this "drawing" is, or means, ot so easy to determine, further than to that it is something Christ does himself. men. "I will draw." So as has been al- y said, it is not living nor preaching, for is done by mean, but the "drawing" is e by Christ himself. A divine work, and a human work. We can suppose—not dog- ize—that in virtue of the sacrifice offered the sin of the world, on the cross, he ld "obtain eternal redemption for us," b.9:12) and in virtue of all this, the Holy it was to come into the world, "Convince the world of sin, righteousness, and judg- t"—"drawing" and moving upon the rts and consciences of all. This "drawing " Christ does not mean, of itself, salva- , but makes salvation possible. "The grace God that bringeth salvation hath appeared ll men." (Tifus 2:11) The grace, or favor, God, has appeared to all men, the grace brings salvation. While there could be alvation apart from the "drawing" and the "grace," this of itself is not salvation. The "grace" must be received, appropriated, the "drawing" must be yielded to, in order to be saved.

So, "if I be lifted up"—crucified—"I will draw," affect "all." Not the Jew simply, but the entire world, without partiality, or discrimination. Equivalent to, "I am the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Jno. 1:9.

We've even been hearing a song sung with a great deal of gusto, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me," emphasizing the fanciful notion that it is to be done by us, by preaching and living, forgetting, ignoring, or ignorant of the fact, that the "lifting up" to which Christ referred, occurred 1900 years ago, and will never be repeated.

When you read Jno. 12:32, don't stop, but read the next verse, Jno. 12:33, and see that the latter definitely states that the former refers to his crucifixion, and not preaching and living. And not excoriate the people for not living, nor the preacher for not preaching—for not lifting up Christ—as you say, and not "drawing all unto him," according to your fanciful and false interpretation and application of Jno. 12:32. We can preach Christ and live the Christ life, but not "lift him up." This has been done, and will never be done again.

THE PRESENT STATUS OF THE MEN'S CHURCH LEAGUE AND AN OUTLINE OF SOME OF THE POSSIBILITIES OF COOPERATIVE WORK BY CHRISTIAN MEN

The Men's Church League exists to promote the increased spiritual efficiency of the evangelical churches of the United States and Canada through the enlistment and training of many more laymen as active Christian workers. The League seeks the fullest cooperation of all men's Church organizations, both denominational and interdenominational. Recognized leaders in twenty-five different denominations are members of its General Committee, and twenty-one denominations are represented on its Executive Committee.

This League held its first meeting in the Hotel Shelton, New York, on October 11, 12 1924. Fifty men were present from ten different states. These men were deeply impressed with the vast latent power of the men of the Churches, and believed that steps should be taken to enlist and train many more of the men who constitute the rank and file of Church membership for definite religious work. A Provisional Committee was formed with instructions to convene a General Conference that would be truly representative of the men of all evangelical Churches.

This General Conference was held at Columbus, Ohio, May 8-10, 1925. Registered delegates were present to the number of 240, representing 23 denominations, 25 states and the Dominion of Canada. By unanimous vote of this General Conference, the Men's Church League was definitely organized on an interdenominational and international basis. Since that time regular monthly meetings of the Executive Committee have been held, lasting from three to four hours each. The General Committee has been gradually expanded until it now numbers 235 members scattered widely over the United States and Canada.

An all-day semi-annual meeting of the General Committee was held in New York on September 23, 1925, with forty members and invited guests present. As one of the main results of the study of how to enlist and train many more laymen for active Christian service, the SMALL-FELLOWSHIP-GROUP plan has gradually emerged as supplementing other plans of organization already in use in the Churches. This plan was officially adopted on February 19, 1925, by a joint meeting of the Executive Committee, together with such members of the General Committee as could attend. This plan was summarized in this official action in the following paragraph:

"The Men's Church League believes that the best way to set millions of Christian laymen at work for Christ and the Church is to organize them into small fellowship groups of not more than twelve each to work toward christianizing the geographic area near their homes or the area of life where they work. There should be a meeting of these separate groups once each week for reports, conference and prayer. It is a great advantage if all the groups in any one Church can meet at the same hour each week at the Church for their group fellowship. They should also have a meeting all together at frequent intervals for the sharing of group experiences and plans. The leaders of all such groups in any community should also meet for conference at least two or three times each year."

This SMALL-FELLOWSHIP-GROUP plan has been widely published and favorably commented upon, both by the religious press and by alert religious editors of the secular press. It is of interest to note some of the denominational comments on this plan:

In a published article, under date of March 6, 1926, entitled "Spiritual Fellowship in Small Groups," the following sentences occur: "There is much that is heartening to Friends in the small group plan of organization of the men of the men of the churches which has reecently been proposed by the Men's Church League of New York City. Their recognition of the individual responsibility of the laymen of the Church brings them very close to the Friendly point of view....We feel that in this plan the Men's Church League is taking a long step forward in going back to the Light within each individual soul."

In the Methodist Advocate of February 17, published at Nashville, Tennessee, by the Southern Methodist Church, in an editorial on the Men's Church League, the following paragraph occurs: "Methodists will at once be reminded of that potent agency for spiritual growth and Christian work which John Wesley devised, the class and the class meeting. The Men's Church League is the Methodist class meeting brought down to date."

The editor of The Moravian, Published at Nazareth, Pa., Dr. Charles D. Kreider, says: "The purposes of the League seem to me to correspond so well with many of the methods of the Moravian Church that I shall be glad at all times to cooperate with it in any way that I can."

In a letter from Dr. Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the following paragraph occurs: "The idea of small living groups is a fine idea. It has been a living principle in the history of the Church from the time of the Apostles and will continue to be so and I trust may take on new life with the present promotion. One can be sure, furthermore, that wherever new life springs up, it will find expression in just such vital personal and social action."

This same basic idea is being urged widely in Canada by Dr. John Mackay, Principal of Manitoba College at Winnipeg, who has already published two manuals for the guidance of small organized groups of twelve or less. In a letter from him under date of March 4, the following statement occurs: "Our work here is spreading very rapidly. 1500 copies of the first volume, and 200 to 300 of the second have gone out since Christmas, and this week I was asked to present the Movement to the Ministerial Association of Winnipeg, and to the Presbytery of Winnipeg of the United Church of Canada. Both these bodies were enthusiastic in regard to the Movement, and I have more requests for assistance and organizing than it is possible to meet."

At the present time the question is being seriously considered by the administrative secretaries and Boards of some entire denominations of urging this SMALL-FELLOWGROUP plan as a very valuable feature of the method of organizing and training for the members of all of their Churches. One favoring consideration is that this can be easily worked into any plan of men's organization that may already exist.

The SMALL-FELLOWSHIP-GROUP plan is also being worked out interdenominationally in various communities, especially in connection with community evangelistic efforts. It is felt that an organized group of men and another of women, in each geographic area of a city or county, can actually discover the people in their own area who are not professing Christians, and can with greatest naturalness and influence undertake to evangelize their own neighborhood. It is believed that all such work should stress the duty and privilege of every person to be vitally related to Christ as Savior and Lord, leaving the question of which Church each shall join to his own individual preference. If every community-wide evangelistic effort could be accompanied by such organized personal visitation to every home and every person in the community, it cannot be doubted that the lasting results of such efforts would be greatly multiplied. The permanent SMALL-FELLOWSHIP-GROUP plan of organizing the members of a Church or community seems to be not only an ideal way to prepare for special evangelistic campaigns, but also probably one of the surest and best ways to follow up and conserve such efforts. New converts should be added at once to working groups and thus enlisted and trained for fruitful service in extending the Kingdom of Christ, both locally and universally.

Turning to some of the possibilities of cooperative work by Christian men, one feels that this field is so vast as to be almost unlimited. In the field of Evangelism, first of all, is there any real reason why any community in the United States or Canada should not be definitely evangelized within a reasonable period of time? Are there not the Christian men and women in practically every community who are willing to be organized and directed into such activity as shall carry to our whole population the message of the gospel, together with an earnest invitation to accept and follow Christ? There are nearly thirty millions of evangelical Church members in the United States and Canada. If even one out of six of them can be enlisted for active personal service, this would be a force of five millions of men and women. Five millions of people each spending at least two hours a week in personal visitation evangelism could surely reach every person in these nations with a vital spiritual message within a few years at longest—perhaps in a much briefer period than this. Should not this be the definite goal, what ever period may be required to reach it?

This spirit of aggressive evangelism toward our entire population would soon develop a greatly expanded program of systematic religious education. Our Sunday school work would be vastly extended and improved Week-day religious instruction would be so organized and multiplied that tens of millions of young people would be helped to find God and so to find themselves and the spiritual meaning of life. Community centers for organized recreation and religious training would be multiplied. The bulk of the crime that is now being committed would be prevented in the future by reasonable and practicable methods of bringing essentially our whole population under definite moral and religious influence.

The expansion of this program to include other backward races and nations would be inevitable. Personal evangelism extended to its logical boundaries means adopting a sensible program for evangelizing the world. In addition to all the other methods that have been used and that should be expanded, there may be uses for the Radio on the various mission fields, which would greatly multiply the power of the missionary force. With appropriate broadcasting and receiving stations covering all main centers of population in a province or a nation, why may not the voices of the leading prophets and teachers of all countries be heard by practically the entire population of these nations? The immense spiritual possibilities of the Radio await demonstration over great areas of the world.

To undertake such a program of really Christianizing our own nations, and sharing our religious knowledge with other nations and races of the world, would call for a new era of Christian stewardship and sacrifice by all earnest Christians. We should like to see a serious effort made to guide large potential givers into the most fruitful lines of spiritual investment. There is a real danger that so large givers may bestow great sums on i practical or unwise enterprises, and that n ny other possible givers may not know wh the most important and fruitful investmen really are. The Men's Church League m well appoint a Commission to make an earn study of some of the most helpful uses which to devote wealth. Might it not also reasonable to suggest to persons of resour beyond the needs of their children that making their wills, they give at least as mu to the work of Christ in the world as th have to their families? Our Lord declar that "He that loveth father or mother mo than me is not worthy of me; and he th loveth son or daughter more than me is n worthy of me. And he that doth not take h cross and follow after me is not worthy me." (Matthew 10:37, 38). If this princi were to be followed in the making of wills Christian men and women, large sums wou be made available for promoting religious e ucation, world-wide missions, and other ba Christian enterprises. Even better than givi at least half of one's property to the Lord death is the principle of giving at least h of one's regular income to the work of Chri In this way, a person becomes in a true sen his own executor. Money transmuted in [illegible] multiplies much faster th in stocks in more material investments.

In Winston-Salem, N. C., an evangelis campaign was conducted nearly a year a that deeply affected the men of the city. this present time, there is an active Men Evangelistic Club in that city, with near 1,000 members. This Club is divided in eighteen organized "teams" that hold mee ings and give their testimony in church prisons, factories and any other place th may open to them. In a recent single we seventy such meetings were held by the "teams." About 3,000 persons have profess conversion to Christ as Savior and Lord as result of the efforts of this one Men's Cl In some individual churches holding a ser of evangelistic meetings running through t weeks, a different "team" from this club to charge of the meeting each evening. In o case 75 men of one team went 80 miles to h one meeting. Many of the worst drunkards a other types of sinners in the community ha been radically changed and are now witne ing boldly for Christ.

Another form of Christian service by l men that seems destined to spread widely o the world is the organized "Visitation Ev gelism" being led primarily at present by A. Earl Kernahan. In twenty-three months active campaign work, Dr. Kernahan has rected about 6,000 laymen and women in ganized visitation of people in their homes. the result of this effort over 42,000 pers have signed cards declaring their purpose confess Christ as their Savior and to unite once with the Church of their choice. The Men's Church League is hoping to arra with Dr. Kernahan for close cooperative re tions with him in his future work as soon s present engagements are filled. Doubtless her men will be developed who will be competent to direct similar efforts.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

This last week was spent mainly in Gibsonlle where Mrs. Dixon was assisting Rev. G. . Hendry in a meeting, and where I preach- three or four times during the meeting. 'eather conditions were somewhat against e meeting, but it was in many ways a good eeting. We feel that the church was rengthened and six conversions and a few clamations were the visible results of the eeting. I visited Rev. D. R. Williams of Gram twice during the week and found him imoving in health. He is slowly and we trust rely coming back to heath, and we hope that thin a few weeks he will be able to take up s pastorel duties again. Let all praying peoe, who read this, continue to pray that God ll fully restore him to health, and spare him r many years to the work he loves to do.

Sunday morning I preached in Gibsonville d Sunday evening in the Fountain Place urch, Burlington. So far as we are able to dge both of these Churches are in splendid ndition. It seems to us who know the conditons, that the time has come when each one these churches should have the full time rvices of a pastor, so after consultation with e Committee on pastoral supply at Gibsonle, I asked the Gibsonville Church to permit me to release Rev. G. H. Hendry from rther obligations there and let him give his tire time to Fountain Place Church after ay 1st. This they agreed to do, so after May Rev. J. D. Hardy will serve the Gibsonville ople for the remainder of the year and Bro ndry will move to Burlington.

The Gibsonville people regretted to give up o. Hendry, but realizing the needs of our ung and growing congregation in West Burgton the great majority of them voted to nt the request for the change.

We thank them for this consideration, and nfidently believe that the change will work greater things in Kingdom service in both se communities. May God bless and direct Cooperation.

Several of the district chairmen are planng district rallies for Saturday and Sunday ay 29 and 30. They will notify pastors in ir respective districts.

My observation is that those district rallies ve been very helpful where there has been fficient cooperation. There is a need for ser cooperation and friendship between our arges which are in contigious communities f we knew each other better we would love h other more." Make it a point to attend rally in your district and get acquainted h more of the Methodist Protestants near u. You will also hear much in the addresses d discussions that will be helpful.

The Summer Conference July 19 to 26.

In accordance with conference action our stors' Summer Conference and our Young oples' Summer Conference will meet in the gh Point College on July 19th. The Young oples' Conference will run through to July 26, just one week. We are hoping that all the pastors will plan to stay through the entire conference with their young people and their workers. This should be, and we believe it will be, the very best Summer Conference we have ever had. Cooperation on the part of all of us will make it so.

Please let all pastors plan their work so as to be able to attend this conference from July 19th to 26th. And we are asking all charges to excuse their pastors from the regular services on Sunday, July 25th, provided they are in attendance at this conference.

God's Acre.

We are anxious to know how many groups of young people, as others, will select and plant an acre or more of ground in some money-producing crop and put the proceeds into the General Conference Budget. We are anxious to see this tried out. The missionary and educational work of the General Church is a part of our job, and we ought to lay our plans to help share in this great work.

St. Paul.—Last Sunday the attendance of the Sunday school was very good.

Brother Moton brought to us two very inspiring messages at the morning and evening services.

Mrs. Moton, who is the teacher of the Philathea class, is able to be out again. She has been confined to her home with the flu. The class is very grateful for her being able to be with them again.

The Ladies' Aid held their regular meeting this month with Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hunter on Bessemer Avenue. The Society had never met with Mrs. Hunter before and a very delightful time was enjoyed by everybody. Delicious refreshments were served.

The Easter program was rendered on Sunday night of Easter Sunday and was very interesting. The Sunday school appreciated the untiring efforts of Miss Flossie Jones who had charge of the program.

We extend a cordial invitation to all who are not in Sunday school anywhere to come and worship with us.

Nellie Wade, Rept.

Siler City.—Sunday was a beautiful day. A large number were present at the morning and evening services. Mr. Johnson and Mr. McNeal of Elon College favored us with several violin and saxophone selections during the day.

Plans are being made for the first meeting of the Junior Christian Endeavor. We hope to get things going and begin at a early date.

The Senior Christian Endeavorers enjoyed a social and business meeting Saturday night at the church. Ten new members were received.

The Ladies' Missionary Society will meet with Mrs. L. L. Wrenn Tuesday evening.

AIMLESS ARROWS.

John R. Mott, in an address, gave ten constructive points for Christian culture, as follows:

1. Have far-sighted plans for culture of our spiritual life.
2. Observe a quiet day or half day.
3. Keep the morning watch.
4. Fight for your prayer life.
5. Always keep before you a devotional book
6. Count the day lost if you do not daily turn on the searchlight of the Bible.
7. Avail yourselves of the privileges of the Christian Church.
8. Observe the vital relation that exists between body and soul.
9. Always seek to relate some other one to Christ.
10. Preserve a right attitude toward your temptations.

VERY DESIRABLE.

The children and youth especially are having their thoughts turned to the day which the church has set aside in recognition of their place in the Kingdom.

It is the first special day which was set apart by our denomination for the purpose of centering, in a signal and impresive manner, the attention of our people on the foreign missionary work of the church, and of enlisting the enthusiasm and energies of the young in securing the means for the development of that important work.

For 41 years the Board has published and sent to the Sunday schools a Children's Day Service consisting of new music, carefully selected recitations, etc., and in recent years the Service has been illustrated, and large illustrated posters and other features have been provided.

The Children's Day Service has done more than any othes single agency in the church, we believe, to create a widespread missionary spirit among our people, and annually, from the services held with the supplies furnished by the Board, a goodly share of the income for the support of the growing work has come from the Children's Day offering, while the inspiration and information imparted have made deep impressions which fact has been shown in more devotion and labors at home and in greater effort and liberality in behalf of the work in distant lands.

No pains, no reason ble expense have been spared in the effort to make the very best Children's Day Service for our own Sunday schools, and it has been generally conceded that no better service has been published in the interest of foreign missions, certainly not for Methodist Protestant schoo's, as ours has distinctive features provided especially for them, and found in no other.

Our Sunday schools have appreciated the Board's efforts, and last year a larger number of schoo's ordered the supplies, and we anticipate a still larger number this year as would seem to be indicated by the fact that in the first five days that orders have reached us there have been 97 orders received, and establishes a record.

Your Sunday school, Brother superintendent, cannot afford, for its own sake, its influence in the community, its obligation to the young and the future of the church, to fail to hold a Children's Day Service, and remember all the supplies are sent to you free of cost, and the offering will count on your church's budget.

Last year we celebrated the 10th anniversary of the Children's Day Service which was instituted in 1885 by the Secretary, Rev. F. T. Tagg.

This year we celebrate the 40th anniversary of the organization of the first Methodist Protestant Church in the heathen world, organized in Yokohama, Japan, July, 1886, by the writer.

Every consideration involved calls for a church-wide use of the Children's Day supplies by our Sunday schools, and earnest efforts to raise the largest possible offering for foreign missions.

Your order ought to be sent to me at Berwyn, Md., without delay, and be assured of prompt attention in sending what you order.

If all our Sunday schools will heartily cooperate in holding a service, and in securing a good offering, the Union Board will be able to get out of much of its present financial difficulty, and for this we depend upon you. Do not fail us, we beseech you.

Fred. C. Klein.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

After the number of letters I have written of my trip I find that as I come to write about our last stop there is a shortage in my power to think out clearly just what I would like to report. I am not sure whether this is a lessening of my interest or whether the contrasts seen are so great or what. But really I find myself tired trying to give an interesting write up. If you have gotten anything to interest you out of these notes it is because the writer has been willing to sacrifice some of the enjoyments that are to be experienced with congenial company on board, for I must say that our people in the cruise generally speaking are so pleasant that one delights to be with some of them all the time.

I have tried my best to make these reports like letters to my best friends. If you have taken the time to read them I thank you, for had not several asked me on leaving home to write I would have given it up as a bad job several days ago. But not being of the kind that likes to give up I have kept writing.

The original plan was to spend only Sunday in Nice, or the port villa France, but our cruise director found by speeding up the ship some we could make the port by Saturday noon. In my own mind I had decided should we not get there till Sunday I would not go ashore. But our delightful drive came Saturday afternoon.

We took the Upper Cornice Road to the top, or nearly to the top of the mountain overlooking the Mediterranean. We were twelve hundred feet above sea level and the wind from the snow capped Alps beyond us sent a chill through us as we reached the top.

There were many interesting villas on the way up. We reached the ruins of Ceasar's tower and from there took the Lower Cornice Road to Monte Carlo. It seemed to be the desire of all to look in upon that wonderful place. Like the rest of the party I wanted to see. I had no desire to learn how the game was played, for it is truly a game of chance But a desire to look into the faces of the professional gamblers and see if my opinion would be confirmed that I had of those who practiced this in other places. Yes, I found it there too. There is an expression on the face of the regular gambler that is different I need not discuss that here. But I believe I can pick them out in any company of people

The roulette wheel seemed to be the favorite device here, for there were many tables. Some where one was limited, as to the amount staked and there was one section where there was no limit. The strange thing about it th were about as many women as men at tables.

A Canadian in there while we were lo ing on had lost thirty two thousand doll while a woman made seven hundred. Do ask me how it is done, for I never tried learn.

One of my friends who was there dur the World War showed me what was kno as "Suicide's Place" where they jump i the sea after losing all. That is if t choose drowning. I was told that there an average of one suicide a day of th whose fortunes took wings and few aw Hard faces that sat around those tables. T ty minutes looking on satisfied me for time.

This is one of the most beautiful places all Europe. There are many people who there for vacation we were told who ne go about the Casino. It seems to me th should be some concerted action on the p of the powers to put an end to this infe

Our drive along the Reviera was delight flowers in bloom, oranges hanging above and many things in nature that makes section a very attractive place. Wish th was that power in my mind to put into wo some of the natural beauties seen here.

After coming back to the ship for din quite a bunch of us went ashore and took electric car up to Nice which was three m from the ship. Then was when the fun beg The conductor could not understand Eng and every one was wanting to know where get off. The only thing he could say was fare which was eighty centines going, (ab three cents) coming back it was more beca it was after ten o'clock. Then we had tro sure enough because the conductor could explain that later in the night the fare higher. But there being some French la on who could speak English it was explai I do not know when I have enjoyed the of a thing more. He was a jolly fellow be mopped his forehead to show us we n him sweat.

We only found the Souvenir stores which is different from our country. So extent of our purchases was very limited. were told that Nice was a wide open city. Bro. Ballard and I took a walk around Promenade Sunday afternoon and we n saw any grocery or dry good stores open. we made that trip for it gave me a be opinion of the country of my ancestors.

Nice is a city of about ninety-thousand here we saw some of the most beautiful bu ings. The store fronts in the business sec are not to be surpassed any where.

We enjoyed a splendid sermon on b Sunday morning by Dr. Lambert, a Luth minister from Pennsylvania.

Five o'clock our ship pulled anchor New York.

One of the touching scenes as we were ing was to see many of our sailor boys co on board drunk. They were examined as came up the gang-way and if a bottle found, which I saw done it was pitched rd without waiting to see what it was. here were more here than any place we e anchored. After seeing this I did not der why they gave them shore leave so om.

his is Tuesday afternoon and we are ex- ing to pass through the Straights of Gi- tar into the broad Atlantic some time to- it.

rom Nice to New York is three thousand e hundred and fifty four miles. Practically thousand.

shall attempt some time before reaching York to give you a write up of the S. S ublic which will be quite a task to get it

BOARD OF EDUCATION ITEMS.

The annual meeting of the Board of Education will be held in the office of the Secretary, Publication Building, Wednesday, May 19th at 9:00 A. M.

The members of the Board, besides the Executive Secretary and the President of the General Conference, are as follows: Rev. G. I. Humphreys, D. D., Chairman, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Recording Secretary: Rev. E. T. Howe, Mr. Ralph A. White and Mrs. H. M. Johnson.

The income from Ministerial Education return payments this year totals to date, April 17, $2266.50. That compares with $1673.50 or an increase of $593.00. If those who have indicated a purpose to send something before the end of the month are able to carry out their plan this sum will be increased. Our present overdraft on this Fund with Mr. Staley is $1836.00. Unless the unexpected happens we shall run behind this year fully $1500.

The plan of sending circular letters of information to present and many former beneficiaries is proving a useful innovation. The purpose is to keep those who have benefited from the service of the Board informed of our situation and responsibilities, thereby maintaining their interest in our work. The many voluntary expressions of appreciation make us more convinced than ever of the value of the plan.

The returns from Rally Day to the end of March were as follows:

1. Maryland, $3418.38—D; 2. Ohio, $3262.92—D; 3. Pittsburgh, $1304.24—D; 4. Indiana $836.10—D; 5. Eastern, $787.92—D; West Virginia, $576.47—I; 7. Onondaga, $370.72—I; 8. Kansas, $305.58—I; 9. North Carolina, $279.26—D; 10. Illinois, $257.13—I; 11. Michigan $250.00—D; 12. Alabama, $125.00—I; 13. Iowa-Missouri, $120.36—D;, 14. Arkansas $77.63—I; 15. Texas, $75.00—I; 16. Kentucky. $17.50—D; 17. Georgia, $12.42—I; 18. Colorada-Texas, $10.00—I.

D.—Decrease. I.—Increase. The comparison is made with the full returns from last year We have yet to learn the income for April of this year. It is to be noted the increases are confined almost entirely to the smaller conferences. The total income to date for Rally Day is $12121.80 which is $1307.47 less than at the same date last year.

The Board of Education is facing another situation which has greatly handicapped our work this year. The total receipts from the General Conference Budget last year were $25083.34. To April 1 this year they were but $11028.24 or $14055.10 less. It is expected considerable will be distributed to the Board this month due to the fact that the Maryland Conference has just held its annual session. For the year, however, we are facing a diminished income of at least $13000. It means that five of our six schools will have deficits this year ranging from two to five thousand dollars. The larger demands for help on the part of our ministerial studens also has increased our embarrassment.

A similar situation faces us relative to the Student Loan Fund. The seventeen students we are helping this year require $2550 of which nearly $1100 is still unprovided for. We have received annuity gifts recently totaling $1100 but according to the action of our Board these funds must be invested and cannot be used for current obligations. We anticipate receiving considerable before the end of April but are fearful of a distressing deficit here also.

The Board of Education is supposed to receive out of the denominational budget a little over $100.000 provided the entire sum is raised. When we are receiving but 15 percent of that amount it is impossible to do the work we are asked to do and certainly not what we have the opportunity to do. Even though we received but thirty-five or forty thousand dollars from the budget it would increase our effectiveness and general usefulness three or four times what it is. This is not a complaint but a statement of simple fact.

It is not the policy of the Board of Education to go in debt to finance its program. However, when the Budget fails our schools run behind. They are forced to depend upon the Board appropriations to meet their requirements, for the income from student charges only cover two thirds of the amount needed to maintain the college or seminary. If each institution had sufficient endowment the situation would not be so serious but they do not have. If the church intends to maintain its own educational enterprises it must furnish the funds with which to do it.

The total enrollment in our schools this year is 1318 or a ten percent increase over last year. Of this number 384 are Methodist Protestants as compared with 350 last year. Last year's enrollment showed 87 ministerial students. This year 84. That is not an unusual variation, the number fluctuating even more widely.

Of the 100 members of the faculties 44 are Methodist Protestants and every one of the one hundred is a member of the church and in most cases is an active Christian.

Frank W. Stephenson, Sec'y, Board of Ed.

MARRIED.

Rich-Williams.

The Asheboro M. P. Parsonage was the scene of a quiet marriage on Saturday afternoon, April 17, when Miss Lucile Williams became the bride of Mr. Henry Rich. Mr. Rich is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Rich, while Mrs. Rich is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Williams. Both the bride and groom lived on the same street and within a city block of each other. We are glad to know that they will make their home here in Asheboro where both are attendants of our church, Mr. Rich being a member of our church. The ceremony was performed by the writer in the presence of the required number of witnesses. This bride and groom set a good example to other people by attending church twice and Sunday school in addition, on the first Sunday of their married life. J. E. Pritchard.

State Street, Lexington, has been over top for some time but have free will offeri in this week on two counts. Reminds one the man who said last year that he paid assessment early so that he could pay m later.

This is our first attempt to publish with budgets the amounts paid to the mission societies. We are attempting to publish the amounts that will count on this confere year—not the missionary year. Will pas and auxiliary treasurers note casefully an these amounts are not correct please notify or the Branch treasurer that we may get t amounts correct. It is impossible for me or Branch treasurers to tell which of the amo sent in in last November were counted on Conference year's report. We do not want counted twice neither do we want some counted at all. Help us get started corre and then it will be easy to publish these ports.

THE BIRMINGHAM CONVENTION.

The writer has just returned from the International Convention of Religious Education held in the City Auditorium, Birmingham, Alabama, April 12-19. It seems fitting to give the space of our Young People's Page this week to a kind of summary of the happenings there, although it would be impossible to give an adequate idea of its bigness and its far-reaching significance in the short space we have.

What The Convention Is.

This convention is the quadrennial meeting of the International Council of Religious Education and is made up of all the Sunday School Associations and the Religious Educational Councils of thirty-five denominations in the United States and Canada. At the Kansas City convention four years ago the state Sunday School Associations and the denominational agencies merged their over-head organization in a great council that will mean much in the unification and correlation of program and activities. Dr. Hugh S. Magill, formerly President of the National Education Association of the United States, is the general secretary of the International Council and is working out a splendid program.

Where It Met.

The convention was held in the large and commodious Municipal Auditorium, which has a seating capacity of 8,000. At a number of the sessions, every seat was taken in advance of the beginning of the program and on Sunday night, thousands were unable to obtain seats. The main convention sessions were all held in the auditorium. The exhibits, which were a major part of the convention interest, were on display at a number of the churches near the auditorium and at the Y. W. C. A (Of especial interest were the exhibits of the World Sunday School Association in the Y. W. C. A. This was a collection of Sunday School material gathered from all over the world.) In the afternoons, special conferences were held for pastors, superintendents, directors of Religious Education, children's workers, adult workers, young people's leaders, denominational editors and publishers, city and state executives, etc.,

Who Went.

Over 7,000 delegates were in attendance from all parts of the United States and Canada, as well as a few from Latin and South America. Among the representatives from foreign countries were Dr. William C. Poole, pastor of Christ Church, London, and president of the World Sunday School Association, and president of the India Sunday School Association. Both of these made addresses on the closing night of the convention.

North Carolina was well represented, both by the State Association Office and by local churches and colleges. Among the delegates were D. W. Sims and Miss Flora Davis, of the state association; Dr. W. A. Harper, of Elon College; Dr. J. C. Leonard, of Lexington; Mr. C. F. Finch and Rev. Dwight L. Fouts, of Community Church, Thomasville; Rev. Lawrence Little and William Hunter, of Grace Church, Greensboro; as well as a large number from other points. (It would be of interest to note that our North Carolina road system came in quite often for favorable comment.)

Entertainment.

Delegates were entertained in hotels and in homes in the city. The writer preferred to stop in some home because of the opportunity of making a personal contact with some of our workers in Birmingham and was placed in the home of the musical director of our Methodist Protestant Church in the city, Mr. J. W. Morgan. Surely nobody could have been more cordial and royal in their reception than were Mr. and Mrs. Morgan. They have a beautiful and well-arranged bungalow home in the suburbs and knew how to make visitors at home The pastor of the church, Rev. J. S. Eddin was most cordial and placed himself and h automobile at the disposal of our M. P. delegates.

Welcome.

The program on the opening night was out of the ordinary. The editor has often longed to attend a convention where the usual and highly over-done "welcome addresses" might be left out. But the persons chosen for this task in the Birmingham Convention certainly knew how to give spice and variety to this routine part of a meeting. We were assured that this was an "average convention" for Birmingham, but that this was the only one to come "up to the average," and that we were "as welcome as a sweetheart would be to an old maid." And we were! Birmingham certainly outdid herself in making us all welcome. Automobiles met the delegates at the railroad station, and, under the direction of a capable corps of Boy Scouts, conveyed everybody to the convention hall and directed them to their homes. On Friday afternoon, over 1000 automobiles were secured for a free trip sight-seeing over Birmingham and its environs.

The Program.

Space is too limited to give any adequate report of the very splendid program. In later issues we hope to give interested leaders and workers the benefit of our note-book that is filled with ideas and suggestions from the addresses of the speakers, but we shall not attempt to do so now. We shall just give a running sketch of the outstanding features. The sessions began each morning at 9:00 a. m. with a Fine Arts program, led by Prof. H. Augustine Smith, of Boston. Dr. Smith is an outstanding exponent of worship and fine arts, in religion and demonstrated to the satisfaction of every delegate that worship programs may be highly enjoyable and delightful without the jazzy type of music so many of our churches have.

The theme of the convention was "Building TOGETHER a Christian Citizenship," and every address had some bearing on this very appropriate subject. Tuesday, the topic was, "The Responsibility of the Church in building a Christian citizenship," with addresses from such outstanding leaders in the religious field as Dean Athearn, of Boston University; Luther A. Weigle, of Yale; and Prof. Artman, of Chicago University.

Thursday was Laymen's day. Some of the most prominent laymen in America made addresses. Including among these were Russell Colgate, of Colgate and Company; L. W. Simms, of Toronto; Cecil H. Gamble, of "Ivory Soap" fame; J. L. Kraft, cheese manufacturer; and George Gordon Battle, a former Tar Heel and now one of the leading attorneys of New York City. These men are splendid examples of Christian consecration and stewardship.

Thursday night, Ex-Governor Pat M. Neff, of Texas, gave a ringing message on "Making America Dry" and kept his large audience spell-bound for an hour and ten minutes. This address was broadcasted and most of Birmingham, as well as many thousands in other places, heard this Christian statesman as he challenged the Christian leaders of America to conserve the benefits from the eighteenth amendment.

Sunday was the peak of the convention in interest and attendance. In the morning, delegates were privileged to attend the churches of their choice. Dr. James I. Vance, of Nashville, preached the convention sermon on Sunday afternoon. Sunday night, Bishop Robinson, of India, brought a fraternal message from his country and gave us an insight into the missionary problems of India. Dr. Poole, of London, gave the closing message on "World Brotherhood and Cooperation." I wish every person in America could have heard this message. It would make us all more humble if we could realize our selfishness and greed, our lack of concern for the welfare of the rest of the world, here in our so-called "Christian America". At some later time, we hope to give a brief report of this address.

THE LOAD.

I recently watched a man, said the minister, who was carrying heavy loads up a flight of stairs, and marveled at his strength and skill. It seemed incredible that anyone could carry such weights and be none the worse for it. Half the load that man carried would have injured an ordinary man. I asked him how he did it.

"There's a knack to it," he said. "You have to learn it. It isn't strength so much as it is adjustment. You've got to know how to get under the load, and there's only one right way of doing it."

Adjustment is no less important for burdens of another sort. "There's a knack to it," a way of carrying our troubles that makes them seem lighter. If the load is breaking us, we should readjust it.

THE DAY OF REST.

"Sunday, a Day of Rest!" cried Mrs. Vincent as she bustled around her kitchen while her husband sat placidly smoking his pipe. "You may call it so," she went on, "but as for me, I know it is the day I work the most."

"O come, Mother," replied John Vincent "You know you need not do so, unless you choose."

Just then, Jimmy called down over the banisters: "Mother, I can't find my tie anywhere."

At the same time, Martha called out from the bathroom: "Mother, you didn't give me a clean towel."

"If those children don't drive me crazy, I'm sure I don't know who will," said Mrs. Vincent, wiping her flour-covered hands on her check apron. "John, you just look to the baby if she wakes while I'm upstairs."

It did not take long to give Martha a towel, but it took quite a time to find Jimmy the exact tie he wanted, for though Jimmy was only eleven, he was quite fussy in the matter of ties.

"Be sure you turn the tap off, Martha," exhorted Mrs. Vincent as she went downstairs to the now crying baby.

"Why does this child always howl all Sundays," asked her husband. "Can't you quiet her?"

"She doesn't howl," exclaimed Selina "Anyway, hold her another minute. I've got to look at those pies. O my," as she opened the oven door, "they're nearly burnt. I only just got down in time. Why didn't you take them out, John? Haven't you a nose?"

"You told me to look after the baby," observed the husband. "You said nothing about pies."

"O well," said Selina resignedly. "They're all right. Give me the baby. She's hungry That's what's the matter with her. I never have time to feed her as early as usual on Sundays."

For a few minutes peace reigned supreme and John ventured a remark. "Why don't you bake your pies on Saturdays?"

"Just like a man," flared up his wife. "As if I'd done nothing all Saturday! Didn't I tidy every blessed room in the house, to have the place look nice for Sunday? Didn't I clean the windows and wash down the steps outside? Didn't I do the shopping and pay the week's bills, Isn't there a cake in the cupboard? Do you think that made itself?"

John whistled. It was beyond him, this problem of woman's work on a Sunday' "I think I'll go for a stroll," he announced.

"You may," snapped Selina, "for all the use you are. A man about the place only delays the work, besides I've got to sweep up the kitchen before I put in the roast."

John waited to hear no more. He took his departure as quick'y as he could. He did not grumble. He was good-natured man. He'd return for dinner. Selina was generally quieted down after the triumph of serving her family the "best meal in the neighborhood." As he walked slowly towards the park, he met Mrs. Watson with her husband and children. "Coming with us to church?" called Mrs. Watson.

"Not this time," answered Mr. Vincent. "Maybe you'll see me tonight, if my wife is not too tired. The children will represent the family." The Watsons walked on. "Yes," thought John. "The children always do represent the family, still I'd like to take my turn, now and then, if Selina weren't so busy." He sighed. He could remember the time when his wife and he had really rested every Sabbath day and walked, arm in arm, quietly to church. Meanwhile, as John sat musing on a bench in the park, his wife bustled the children off to church, tidied the bedrooms, rocked the baby, put the roast in the oven, peeled the potatoes and put on the vegetables. "I'm all done up," she said out loud to herself as she sat down for a few minutes. "I guess I'll have a cup of tea or I'll never be able to finish the day's work."

"Work!" cried a friendly voice from the doorway. "Did I hear you talk of work, on the blessed Sabbath?"

"Oh, it's you, is it," cried Mrs. Vincent. "Come right in. I see you've been to church Mrs. Anderson. You look that fine, I'm a bit ashamed of myself. There, take off your coat have a cup of tea. Sure I know it's the Sabbath day, and this is the first minute I've had to rest before the children return from church."

Mrs Anderson glanced around. By this time the kitchen was spotlessly clean and all signs of the morning's rush cleared away.

"I often wonder how you manage," asked Selina. "You get to church every Sunday: don't you?"

"Yes, I do," replied the visitor. "The children help a great deal or I'd never manage it. Where's your husband?"

Mrs. Vincent laughed as she sipped her refreshing tea and told Mrs. Anderson how John said he was chased from his own home every Sunday morning!

At that moment he returned and greeted his visitor. "Well," he said, "You two look pretty comfortable. I guess the Sabbath commotion is over for a week!"

"If Mrs. Anderson will excuse me, I'll go and change my dress," said Selina. "You'll stay to dinner, won't you?" she asked her visitor.

"Thank you kindly," said Mrs. Anderson "The children have gone off for the day. I was a bit lonely."

There was no more lonely feeling for Mrs Anderson the rest of the morning. The children returned from church and Martha bustled about setting the table, Jimmy lounged in a corner with a boy's paper, and Mr. Vincent between quieting the baby, basting the meat and straining the potatoes was kept busy until his wife descended the stairs in all her finery. Of course she took matters in hand after she entered the kitchen! First, putting on a huge apron, she made the coffee, then dishing the vegetables, she invited all to sit down

It was a dinner for a great feast day, and Selina was in her element as she felt how her visitor appreciated the meal. The meat was done to a turn, the potatoes had just enough salt and not too much, the cauliflower, with its perfect white sauce, was as tender as could be. Then came the fruit pies with their accompaniment of cup custard.

"We'll have the chocolate cake for tea," said Mrs. Vincent. She wanted everyone to know that there was a chocolate cake!

When dinner was over and the children set to wash up, Mrs. Vincent fed the baby and put her to sleep. "Now for a real rest," she sighed contentedly from the depths of an armchair. "I hope you enjoyed your dinner? Was it all right, Mrs. Anderson?" she smiled.

"It was the best meal I ever tasted, Mrs. Vincent," answered her visitor. "And, if you'll excuse my saying so, it was all wrong."

Mr. Vincent looked horrified. Selina sat up stiffly in her chair. "What was the matter with it," she asked. "Didn't I serve up the right sauces?"

Mrs. Anderson could not forbear a smile. "My dear," she said. "Your sauces were excellent and in good taste. You understand how to serve a most perfect dinner, but, if you'll excuse an old woman, and I am years older than you, my dear, it was all wrong to serve up such a dinner on Sunday."

Selina breathed a sigh of relief. Her meal at least, had been perfect, and no one could complain of her hospitality.

"When did you cook this dinner, if I may ask," put in her visitor, gently.

"This morning, of course," answered Mrs Vincent. "I always cook on Sunday mornings while you are in church."

"That's why I never see you and John there any more, I suppise," said Mrs. Anderson. "Ah well! A man needs a thorough good meal once a week!"

"So he does," agreed Mrs. Vincent. "I do my duty by him all right, in that way." She smiled complacently.

"You feed his body all right, my dear," said the visitor. "But you starve both his soul, and yours."

"What would you have me do?" asked Selina. "I can't be everywhere."

Mrs. Anderson shook her head. "It's all wrong," she said. "I wish I could help you."

"How do you do?" asked Mrs. Vincent, beginning to feel uncomfortable.

"I cook most of the meal the day before. The children do their share. They peel the potatoes and tidy the bedrooms before church. Then I never baste my roast. I put it in a steamer, leave a slow, coal fire and find it ready on my return. Sometimes we have a cold dinner on Sundays."

"I do not think my family would like that," said Mrs. Vincent.

"O yes they would, provided they had a good hot dinner some other day. Ham, cold roast beef or chicken make a delicious Sunday first course, if you add a good salad. This takes little time to prepare. Fruit, the most healthy thing you can possibly give, is healthier if given raw. No one can complain of ripe, red apples, juicy grapes or oranges, to say nothing of raisins and nuts. Try this one Sunday, my dear," said Mrs. Anderson, leaning over towards Mrs. Vincent. "Believe me, even your husband would enjoy such a meal better, if he gained the pleasure of taking you to church. Ask him?"

Mrs. Vincent looked over at John. No need to ask him. She read the answer in his eager face.

"We'll try it once and see how it works," she said.

It worked splendidly. With the children's cooperation, many of Sunday's tasks are done on a Saturday. Martha takes alternate Sundays to look after the baby. The dinners, whether hot or cold, are still delicious, and chaos no longer reigns supreme in the Vincents' house on Sunday.

"It's like the olden days when we were sweethearts," said Mr. Vincent as he walked arm in arm, with his wife to church.

Mrs. Anderson overheard him as she passed "That's what you are still," she assured him with a smile. "See how well your wife looks, since she has learned to rest one day of seven."

John looked at his wife. "She looks no older than on the day I married her," he replied, and Selina answered him with a blush

Then she turned to Mrs. Anderson and said: "Come in to dinner today, after church It's only a cold dinner since it's the day of rest, but I think you'll enjoy it all the same."

"Thank you kindly, I'll come," said the old lady. "Your dinners, whether hot or cold always do you credit. They're still the best in the neighborhood, my dear."—Mrs. Nester Noel, in The Leader.

A PRAYER.

Prof. Addison Hogue.

Our God and Father,
Our God and Saviour,
Our God and Sanctifier, hear in Heaven, Thy dwelling place, the prayer we now present unto Thee in behalf of our beloved Church. Thou seest how Thy work languishes in our hands, and what numbers of Thy professed followers pursue their pleasures, and give to Thee so stingily out of what is left. We read in Thy holy word how Thy Son, our blessed Redeemer, though He was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through His poverty, might becoem rich. We profess to make Him our pattern, and His precepts our rule of life. He told us to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and to trust our Heavenly Father to give us all the things He knows we have need of. But Thou knowest that so many of us put these last things first, and do so little towards helping forward the coming of Thy kingdom. He told us that His followers must renounce self and take up the cross; and yet so many of us make self the first object, instead of living for Him who died for us. These great sins we humbly confess unto Thee in deep and humble repentanee. O Lord, hear. O Lord, forgive. O Lord, revive Thy work in the hearts of Thy people. Give us an ever-increasing love for Thee; and as Thy infinite love for us gave us Thine unspeakable gift so may we learn the joy of giving to Thee. Let not our Church bring reproach upon Thy name and dishonor upon itself by failing to come up to the help of the Lord in every good word and work to which it has put its hand. O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto Thee but unto us confusion of face, as at this day. O our Lord, incline Thine ear and hear; open Thine eyes and see our great spiritual needs Help us, Thou infinite Spirit, to walk worthily of Thee unto all pleasing, in every good work bearing fruit, and earnestly striving in all holy living and godliness to hasten the coming of the day of God. O Spirit of God, come upon our Church mightily, that we may reconsecrate ourselves to the service of Him who bought us with His own most precious blood and then may we bring forth abundant fruits worthy of our new repentance; and to Thee shall be the praise unto the ages of the ages. Amen.—Selected.

THE WRONG USE OF LIBERTY.

This is an age when liberty is invoked by men of every profession and advocates of every cause, so that one is reminded of Madame Roland, who, when about to be guillotined, exclaimed, "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!"

Liberty is claimed by the man who insists upon making a beast of himself and becoming a nuisance to his neighbors.

It is claimed by men whose salaries are paid by the taxes of the people, who, notwithstanding, claim liberty to teach doctrines that undermine the faith of many.

It is claimed by men in theological seminaries, when they teach doctrines contrary to the views of those who endowed the various chairs.

It is claimed by the modern girl who shocks us with her short skirts and her imitation of masculine habits.

It is claimed by the theaters and moving picture houses, when they debase the minds of the young and wreck the lives of many.

All of them take refuge behind what they claim is liberty, when in reality liberty has nothing to do with it.

Take prohibition, for example—liberty has nothing to do with prohibition.

The law does not forbid a man to get drunk. If he can find pleasure in it, no one can complain.

When, however, his being drunk makes him a nuisance in public, and causes others to suffer, then the law forbids it, just as it does when he makes his wife and children suffer by spending his money on drink.

I can fire my gun in the country and no one can interfere with my liberty; but when I do the same thing in a town or city, the law forbids, not that it would interfere with my liberty, but because it would keep me from interfering with the liberty of other people.

The trouble about whiskey is that the drinking man is never content to keep within the bounds of his own liberty. If he would, there would never have been any Volstead amendment; but because he is always interfering with the liberty of other people, the law had to be enacted.

In like manner, we have to deal with the abuse of freedom of thought. Each man thinks as he pleases. If he thinks that there is no God, or that he has ascended from Simian ancestry, no one can forbid him. He is merely indulging in freedom of thought. If this freedom reduces him to a beast, the Lord will deal with him in due time.

When, however, he tries to teach such a view to my child, and I am paying his salary, I can forbid such teaching, without being charged with interfering with his freedom of thought.

This plea of being controlled in thought appeals to the ignorant, who are not accustomed to look below the surface of words—and that explains its popularity with those who are restricted in their teachings.

These would-be scientists are really not sincere in raising the cry of persecution. They know better, but as it is a plea that will deceive the multitude, they do not hesitate to use it.—Presbyterian Standard.

N. M. Harrison, Sen., Sunday school superintendent, Bethesda Church, Littleton, N. C., a pack of books.

I am much pleased to see that the offerings are increased both in number and quantity, but just at this time I am through these lines asking something that I have not before asked, and that is, that all churrhes and Sunday schools, double their contributions for the Home during the month of May.

I feel sure all friends of the Home will enjoy reading such a report, and the Supt. will be glad to record such a one. Please don't forget this request when the collection plate passes you.

Thank you. E. G. Lowdermilk, Supt.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Rev. J. W. Quick.

On Monday, April 5, about 4:25 o'clock Rev. John Wesley Quick passed to his reward. Brother Quick had been in bad health for about two years. Much to his sorrow he had to give up the active ministry sometime in the early part of last year, not being able to carry on in his worn and weakened condition.

For about eleven and one half years he served as pastor of Pageland Circuit only giving up the work when he did because of his health. The people loved him. Some said that after he became ill they were willing to pay him if he could sit in the pulpit: they just loved him and wanted to see him before they. Brother Quick did work that will pass before the great Inspector on high.

For about eighteen years he was Postmaster at Pageland, S. C. The office was small when he was made Postmaster but under his faithful care it grew to an office of importance. He went about his duties when others would have been in bed.

Brother Quick was born October, 1872, and besides his wife he leaves one son David, and four daughters, Mrs. E. E. O'Neil of Monroe N. C., Mrs. E. C. Meyers, of Wilson, N. C., and Misses Vance and Mary of Pageland. Several brothers and sisters survive him also.

He had been suffering with high blood pressure for some time and only a few days before his death he was taken with pneumonia.

The funeral was held in Rose Hill Methodist Protestant Church Tuesday at 2 P. M. the services being conducted by the writer assisted by Revs. A. T. Stoudmeyer of the Baptist Church and W. G. Elwell of the M. E. Church. The burial was at Rose Hill cemetery. The great concourse of people and the many beautiful floral designs attested the love and respect in which he was held.

We pray God's blessings upon the family and relatives.

C. E. Phillips, Pastor Pageland Circuit.

Mt. Zion.—We are still up here most of us at least, but a lot of us have missed Sunday school since Christmas; last three Sundays were beautiful and this is the order of attendance: 47—45—43 present. Today, the third Sunday, being Bro. Hunter's regular appointment we had 95 present for Sunday school and Bro. Hunter had a wonderful sermon for us and we all enjoyed it very much. But that Sunday school attendance bears on my mind—yes, I know we have had a lot of sickness—but the number present for the Sundays a year ago from these named above was as follows 127—133—149. There's something more than sickness the matter?

Since I put myself in my Master's hands I received that I would not shirk any duty or work that God's people called on me to do and I shall continue to do. But the situation does become embarassing; for instance. I am asked by the people of my church to serve them as Superintendent of Sunday school: therefore I am trying in my weak way to serve in that capacity. Then the church meeting of officials appointed me to serve the church as reporter to The Herald and Brother Hunter instructed me that my duty in that capacity was to report conditions as they actually are and happen. So you see where I am placed. I'm sure I have the sympathy of at least every Superintendent.

Listen, Mt. Zion people, if we have good reports that show that we are really doing worthwhile things I am ready and very anxious to report, but I shall continue to report conditions as I find them.

We always have a "patch of blue" though regardless of how black the clouds may become. Brother Hunter has arranged for a revival at Mt. Zion with a Gospel team of the Billy Sunday Club of Winston Salem to conduct service every night for five successive nights, starting tonight. Pray for us, folks that pray, that we all may get closer to God during this revival.

The woman's board (both societies) met on the evening of Sunday, April 11, for business meeting and had good meeting.

Bro. E. S. Stone is just back from Lawrence's hospital of Winston where he took treatment for appendicitis. We are glad he is improving. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Mikles have come to live with us for a few months, Mr. Mikles' school having closed in the Blue Ridge recently.

We didn't have an Easter program this time. But we hope to have a Childen's Day exercise soon.

We have had in our midst an epidemic of Mumps and Influenza and a lot of people have been detained at home because of this fact. But as our reporter from Shoals said in her report, God is calling us back by reminding us that it's planting time: spring is here and everybody loves spring-time. I have faith in our people up here to the extent that we will have better Sunday school attendance. May God add His blessings to every church and Sunday school. C. W. Allen, Rept.

Asheboro.—Sixteen new members were received on profession of faith at the morning service. There are several more to be received soon. Counting the twelve which had already been received, we have added twenty-eight to the roll since conference. Our revival closed last Wednesday evening. Rev. R. A. Hunter of Lenoir-Rhyne who did the preaching greatly endeared himself to the people of Asheboro and will always be welcomed back whenever it is our good fortune for him to come.

J. E. Pritchard.

Friendship Station.—Our pastor filled his appointment Sunday morning at 11 o'clock with a large crowd as spectators, and preached a most wonderful sermon. After which the Lord's Supper was administered with a large number partaking of it.

Our second quarterly conference was held on Saturday night at 7:30 o'clock, April 3 with a very large crowd attending the conference. Business was transacted in brotherly love.

As the conference year comes to a close may we strive to do our Master's will more each day of our lives. O. L. Hatley, Rept.

Henderson.—On our return from Asheboro where we assisted Rev. J. E. Pritchard in a ten days' meeting, we found that the work here had been well cared for. On Sunday during our absence Mr. Welch, Secretary of the local Y. M. C. A., filled the eleven o'clock appointment, and from reports made a splendid talk. The evening service was taken over by the Senior Christian Endeavor Society, and although, on account of the inclement weather, was not largely attended, was a splendid service. We wish to thank all who had a part in making these services a success.

Last Sunday morning 210 were present at Sunday school, a number of the classes having one hundred percent present. The congregations at both preaching services were splendid, and the Senior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor meetings were attended by some forty young people. I think perhaps the most encouraging feature of the work here is the large number of young people and chidren who not only attend Sunday school and church services, but who through the Christian Endeavor societies and other agencies are being trained for leadership in the church.

R. A. Hunter.

We were glad to welcome Rev. R. A. Hunter back after a ten days absence. Rev. Mr. Hunter has been helping Rev. J. E. Pritchard in a revival meeting in Asheboro. He reports a fine meeting, several decisions made for Christ.

Our new church directory is out and we find that the young Ladies' League with the help of the pastor have turned out a good piece of work.

At a call meeting of the ladies of the church Sunday morning, it was voted to ask the Branch Missionary meeting here next year. We hope that we can succeed in getting it.

The second quarterly conference will meet after prayer meeting Wednesday night. The pastor has asked for a full attendance.

The choir director has announced that the choir will give a cantata Sunday night week.

The Senior Christian Endeavor society had a very successful social last Thursday night, which they called an "All Fools' Frolic." The plans given in the Christian Endeavor World were carried out, with a few changes. The invitations sent out were written backwards and a mirror had to be used in order to read them. Handkerchiefs were tacked to the floor and when someone innocently suggested that a handkerchief was dropped they were fooled in trying to pick it up. April fool candy was passed around at the same time good home made candy was being passed. Needless to say, that some didn't like the taste of theirs.

The different contests were, Observation Test, Memory Test, and Intelligence Test, also a Fan Ball contest. The Musical Medley was greatly enjoyed, by those who were listening, as well as "The gathering of the Nuts." After the games, everyone was asked down to the basement to a delicious chicken supper. But they found out it was only another "fool."

as the plates had chicken food on them and the tea was cold coffee with salt for sugar. "Confessions of a fool" follows this, while waiting for the real refreshments which consisted of cream and cake. Every one expressed themselves as having a good time, even those who got the badge "I am once a Fool," "I am twice a Fool," "I am a confirmed Fool," pinned on their shoulder. Reporter.

Shiloh Notes.

Bro. Leonard of Albermarle, who is one of Shiloh's own home boys, wants to hear from Shiloh, we have not been asleep by any means. No sir! Shiloh is wide awake! Come, Brother Leonard with your family and see home folks.

Our Sunday school has 200 on roll. Our attendance today was 200. Now say, "O, yes it was third Sunday—preaching Sunday." True enough! But almost all present are members of our Sunday school. Our Worker's Council has set a goal of 300, and we mean to reach it. We hope to have a Sunday school large enough to burst out our walls; then while they are out, put in some much needed Sunday schools rooms.

The Sunday school has been doing some organizing. From a mixed class of old and young men, we have organized two classes. The younger men have organized into a young men's class, with Bro. J. L. Evans as teacher. A finer bunch of young men can not be found and they could not have selected a better teacher. They had 31 present today. They are manifesting keen interest in their new class.

When the young men left the men's class the number left was conspicuous for their hoary heads and small number. Nothing daunted, they organized a Brotherhood Class with C. W. Sink as president and Mrs. W. L. Shoaf as teacher. A better hearted and more teachable bunch of men you never saw. To teach such a class is a pleasure. The Brotherhood class had 26 members present today. The two classes combined have doubled their attendance since organizing separately three weeks ago.

One of the livest things of our church is our Christian Endeavor Society of which Mrs. Crotus Koontz is president. They have about 35 on roll with an average attendance of 20. Each member takes an active part in the work, and enjoys it, too. We are expecting to see great results of this important work in years to come. These young folks will be a blessing to any church in which they may be called upon to work. Training plus the leadership of God's Spirit is a mighty force for effective work in the Kingdom of God.

Our beloved pastor, R. S. Troxler, preached a powerful and soul-stirring sermon today on "Our Religious Life." The house was comfortably filled with a very attentive congregation. His subject for the next third Sunday will be "The Problems of This Life."

On Sunday, April 4th, at three P. M. one of the most beloved women of this community was laid to rest in Shiloh cemetery. A grandmother in Israel. Mrs. Riley Leonard, had lived to the ripe old age of 89 years. For many years, she was an active member of Shiloh church, but in her last years she held her membership in the First M. E. Church of Lexington. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Mr. Shelton, and R. S. Troxler, pastor of our church where her funeral was held. She had been a church member nearly eighty years, and a few days before her death she expressed her joy over her consciousness of her fellowship with God. Blessings on her memory! Mrs. Wiley Shoaf.

A very interesting as well as helpful meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society, met Wednesday night, April 14; at the new president Mrs. J. H. Harkey, Rev. A. Ridge presided over the meeting. Some unfinished business was settled and a number of good suggestions were offered for the improvement and the uplift of the Society. A membership committee was appointed and they are making a thorough canvass, and we will see results of this at our next meeting.

Only a few members were present but each one seemed to be full of interest and eager to do something. We are looking forward to a successful year. Although late starting we are expecting to accomplish great things for our church. Mrs. D. W. Sides, Reporter.

Tabernacle Church, Tabernacle Circuit.—Yesterday was another good day for us at Tabernacle. We were glad indeed to see so many at Sunday school. Attendance wah 167. Yet that is not what it should be.

A large congregation attended preaching services. Quite a number of visitors from neighboring churches were present. We welcome them, and invite them to come again.

There will be a memorial service at this place on the third Sunday in May. We are expecting two services aside from the service at the cemetery.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.
Reporter.

North Davidson Charge.—We held our second quarterly conference on Saturday, the 17, at Shiloh Church; the atterdance was good. All churches were well represented and made good reports from all departments of the church.

As spring is opening up, everything is taking on new life.

We are expecting our Sunday schools to show a better report this year than last, as well as all the organizations of the church.

The Christian Endeavor society of Shiloh a few Sundays ago organized a society at Friendship, which is doing a good work. About thirty present last Sunday evening; the program given by the young people was interesting.

I am justly proud of my two societies.

All churches are doing good work and making progress. We are expecting a good year's work.

On the first Sunday in April Friendship church gave another real surprise. After service I went to my car. I found it just loaded with all kinds of good things to eat and some money. It looked like a rolling grocery store; but I tell you it looks good when it gets to a preacher's pocket.

We certainly do appreciate these good things. I have a big job, a good people, may God richly bless them, and help us to do our best service. R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

New Hope, Big Pot Circuit.—We now have a splendid Sunday school with better attendance every time we open up.

We had an Easter service on Easter Sunday morning. The children had much fun in the program for before Easter we almost gave up trying to have an exercise but the children learned their pieces well considering their practice.

We intend having a Children's Day some time before long, but we haven't commenced preparing for it yet.

Our pastor, Bro. D. I. Garner, gave us an interesting sermon last Sunday. "Every sermon gets better," was the remark some of the members made. We were glad to have two of our oldest members out last Sunday, Bro. J. T. Williams and Sister Lanie Tucker.

Among our visitors were Miss Louzena Presnell and Mr. and Mrs. Everett Nance of Asheboro.

Pray for us that we may do more for the Master this year than ever before.
Mrs. Noah Williams.

Siler City.—Yesterday was a great day for us at Siler City. The Sunday school, preaching services and Christian Endeavor seemed to take on new life. It was indeed an inspiration to the writer to see a large congregation at both morning and evening services. Mr. Paul McNeil and Lindsay Johnson with their violin and Saxophone rendered some beautiful music. Their vocal duets were also great additions to the services. The Senior C. E. reports ten new members. We have, also, taken steps to organize a Junior C. E. Society. Mrs. Lewis Woody and Miss Lebas Stone have been elected to carry on the work.

One of our faithful members, Mrs. Jim Cooper, is now in the St. Leo Hospital. We pray for her a speedy recovery. F. L. Gilbert.

Midway, New River Ct.—Our pastor, Rev. W. D. Reed, has filled all his appointments with splendid sermons. At his last appointment he organized a C. E. Society with Mrs. B. P. Butler president, Mrs. J. E. Dobbs, vice president, and Milton Wright, secretary and treasurer. We are hoping that this will be a great help to the young people.

Our Sunday school has been moving along nicely during the winter months, tho' the attendance is not what it should be. But we come now as spring opens up that we will have better attendance and more interest. We had prepared a little Easter program but because of sickness could not have it on Easter Sunday. We had it the following Sunday night. The children acted their parts well, and the collection was $16.00. Mrs. G. W. Apple.

Laurel Hill, Toluca Charge.—We are glad to report that our Sunday school is progressing nicely, although our superintendent has been absent for several Sundays on account of sickness. We are praying that God will restore him to his health and strength and that he will soon be back in Sunday school with us. Mr. Joe Sain is also real sick. If it be God's will we hope that he will get well, and if not we hope to meet him some day in a better world.

Rev. J. M. Morgan, our pastor, filled his appointment Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. He preached us a great sermon.

Our hearts were made sad last Tuesday morning when the death angel visited Mr. Joe Canipe's home, and took Mr. Canipe away. He was 65 years old. He is survived by his wife, one daughter, and one son. Mr. Canipe will be greatly missed by all who knew him. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Mr. McSwain Wednesday morning at eleven o'clock at Laurel Hill, the body was laid to rest in Laurel Hill cemetery.

Our Easter program was well rendered Easter Sunday morning at ten o'clock. The program was furnished by the Sunday school girls and boys. We were glad to have Rev. Vance Heavner with us to deliver us a good message Easter Sunday morning at eleven thirty. "Pray for our success at Laurel Hill."

Mrs. Mary E. Hayes.

(Granny Hayes.)

Death has come and taken our loved one.

Grandmother died April 7, 1926, aged 85 years, eight monhs, 24 days.

She had been in declining health for over six months. But she bore her suffering with great patience, never impatient nor discouraged. She always had a kind and cheerful word for every one.

The funeral services was conducted at Chestnut Ridge Church, Thursday morning at eleven o'clock, by her pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, assisted by Rev. T. A. Williams. The funeral service was carried out as Grandmother wished it to be. The theme that she had selected was, "Prepare to meet thy God." The songs were: "There'll be no Dark Valley when Jesus Comes," "Shall we Meet Beyond the River," "Tell Mother I'll be there." To conduct the singing, Prof. T. O. Pender. To assist in services, Rev. T. A. Williams.

Grandmother was willing and ready to die. I have often heard her say, "I am prepared to die. I have no fear of death, I am only waiting for God to take me home." We feel perfectly sure that Grandmother is sweetly resting in heaven, after her long journey on earth.

Surviving are one daughter, Mrs. R. K. Pender, of Mebane, N. C., five sons, S. N. and A S. Hayes of Mebane, T. R. Hayes, G. O. Hayes of Durham, and C. E. Hayes of Charlotte. Besides a number of grandchildren and great grandchildren. Also one brother T. R. Squires of Mebane.

The flower bearers were: Mabel McDode. Elevene Hayes, Louise Hayes, Mabel Hayes, Mrs. Thelma McGrannahan, Lucille Hayes, Mrs. T. O. Pender, Mrs. R. G. Baker.

Grandmother joined the church when she was fifteen years of age. She tried to live a true Christian life during her 71 years of membership. She missed only one revival meeting (which was during her recent illness).

Grandmother was always good and kind. She tried to do her duty toward every one. Tongue can never utter, nor pen ever write, the words to express how we miss her.

There is a vacant place in our homes and lives that can never be filled. We know we can never see her on earth again but our great solace is that the parting will only be for a short while. Then we will meet Grandmother in heaven, where parting will be o'er.

I find this is one of the best ways to get the children to attend regularly. I also am using the cards.

Yours truly, Mrs. R. P. Butler.(Pres.)

Fairview Church.—The regular quarterly conference was held at Fairview Church on Saturday afternoon, April 10th. There was a good number present and some important business attended to. We had with us Dr. A. G. Dixon of Greensboro, who also preached a very interesting and instructive sermon on Sunday morning. His text was taken from the first verse of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." He gave some very instructive advice to both young and old. The evening service was held at the regular hour by our pastor, Rev. C. E. Isley.

Our Sunday school work is going on nicely wih a good attendance each Sunday. F. D. M.

Second Church, Charlotte.—We were glad to have our pastor with us again on Sunday, April 4. We were sorry he couldn't be with us for the morning service, but he delivered an inspiring sermon at 3 o'clock. He baptized 10 children and received seven new members into the church at this service.

On Sunday night we had our Easter program which was enjoyed by a large congregation. On the following Sunday the children were carried to Alison Grove, where they rendered the same program, which was enjoyed by another large congregation.

On Saturday, April 10, we held our second quarterly conference at the home of our pastor, Rev. D. A. Braswell, in Concord. Those present had a most enjoyable time.

We are glad to be able to announce we have purchased our lot on which to erect our church.

When our Sunday school was first organized the Junior Class and Senior Class, entered into a new member contest in which the loser was to give the winner a treat. The Juniors outclassed the Seniors by a large number, so the Juniors are expecting a good time at a "weinie roast," next Saturday night.

A Tribute to Dr. C. L. Whitaker.

His labors on earth are ended,
No pain nor sorrows he bears;
He has gone to that beautiful city
Where all are joys that were cares.
He lives and walks with his Savior,
The one for whom he labored so well
And I know his joys are far greater,
Than any who journey down here.
We miss his friendship and counsel
Which he was worthy and willing to give.
We miss him who labored for others.
His labors he cheerfully did give.
Dear Jesus, we pray that you'll help us,
To follow his footsteps so grand,
And ever remember his counsel and friendship
Tho' parted we be for a while.
In presence he is gone from among us,
In influence he will ever remain:
For his kind disposition and goodness
Say, He did not live in vain.
Dear friend, we know you are with Him
With whom we long to be,
And we hope we may meet Him
In that Home for His children who live like you.

M. Ivey Crutchfield.

HIS COMING.

Samuel Valentine Cole.

Silence, and midnight, and a star;
The flash of shining robes afar;
Some wondering shepherds—But they say
He came in such a lowly way,
Though destined this great world to sway,,
The great world never knew.

The dawn begins to break and glow—
Hark! Do you hear the bugles blow,
And hear the throbbing drums?
Again the King! But with such power,
And tyrants so before him cower,
The world scarce knows in this great hour
That it is He who comes.

Yet through all perils and alarms
He kept men's hearts, and nerved the arms
That swung the righteous sword;
The legend which his banner bore
Was "Right is Might," and evermore
The powers of darkness fly before
The glory of the Lord.

—The widow of the late Prof. J. A. W. Thompson died suddenly last Saturday. The funeral was conducted on Sunday at 11 o'clock by her pastor, Rev. H. L. Isley, assisted by Rev. G. W. Holmes and Rev. J. R. Newlin. She was one of the best loved women of her community.

—The Stephens meetings continue with unabated interest. On Sunday night the tabernacle would not contain the congregation. It is to be enlarged.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON,—MAY 2.

God's Covenant with Noah.

Lesson Text: Gen. 9:8-17.

Golden Text: Gen. 9:13.

The Central Truth: Mercy triumphs over judgment. "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works."

Scriptural Points.

1. A covenant of perpetual loving kindness between God and every living creature is given to Noah and his sons. This covenant contained promises, obligations, and a token.

2. There are four promises given. He first gives the promise of no more floods. God said: "I will not again curse the ground any more for your sake;.....neither will I again smite any more every living thing, as I have done,.. neither shall all flesh be cut off any more by the waters of a flood." Gen. 8:21; 9:11.

The second is the promise of perpetual and fruitful seasons: "While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."

The third is the promise of supremacy over the entire animal creation: "And the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hands are they delivered."

In the fourth promise God adds meat to the herb diet that He had prescribed at the creation: "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things."

3. Two great duties are required in this covenant. One is the perpetuation and increase of the human race: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." This duty embraces the duties of family life and the caring and training of children. The other duty set forth in this covenant is the responsibility of setting up an effective civil government in order to punish evil doers, encourage righteousness, and protect society. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," through the channels of organized civil government.

4. The token, seal, or pledge of this covenant was the rainbow. This was evidently the first time the rainbow had appeared. This is conclusive proof that the rain of the flood was the first rain that fell. Up till this time the ground had been watered by means of mists. For it is recorded in Gen. 2:6: "But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground."

5. This covenant, like the covenant of grace, is an everlasting covenant. The covenants with Abraham and Moses had their fulfillment in the coming, ministry and sacrifice of Jesus Christ, and were superceded by the covenant of redemption.

Practical Points.

1. The promises of God are a rich heritage to His saints. Every one of them is a promissory note to be paid on demand.

2. They guarantee the entire divine nature of love and holiness,—the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of peace. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

3. The promises cover every need of the human race. Daily food is pledged to the believer. "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Ps. 37:3. "Bread shall be given him; and his waters shall be sure." Isa 33:16.

4. Constant care and protection are also provided. "Casting all your care upon him for he careth for you." 1 Pet. 5:7. "I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee."

6. There is the promise of the abiding, comforting, and uplifting presence of God. "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Ex. 33:14. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28:20.

7. There are promises of deliverance in times of distress. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." Ps. 46:1. "He shall deliver thee in six troubles: yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee." Job 5:19.

8. There is the promise of forgiveness of sins, even the most corrupt and damnable of sins. "Come now, and let us reason together saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Isa. 1:18.

9. There is the promise of victory in temptation. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it." 1 Cor. 10:13.

10. And there is the promise of immortality. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcome, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. 3:21.—Word of Life.

GOD THE HOLY GHOST.

The third Person of the Holy Trinity occupies a big place in this gospel age. In fact we are living in the dispensation of the Holy Ghost. The Father is exercising sovereignty throughout the worlds. The Son is interceding at the Father's right hand in behalf of a sinning race. And the Holy Spirit has been entrusted with the task of saving lost mankind. He has come into the world to "reprove of sin, of righteousness and of judgment." He has come to impart regeneration, sanctification, power, and all the Christian graces.

But the Holy Spirit does His office work in harmony and in cooperation with human instrumentality. The gospel must be preached in all earnestness and faithfulness. Sinners must repent. Christian workers must pray and believe. The unity and purity of the church must be maintained. The Holy Ghost must be given the right of way to the hearts and lives of all who hear the call of the gospel. And there must be complete yielding to the Holy Spirit's gentle and insistent entreaties and influence. Let us magnify the Personality and work of the Holy Spirit. Let us remove every hindrance that lies in His way. Let us hate sin with a perfect hatred. Let us hunger and thirst after righteousness and all the blessed fruit of the Spirit. And let us seek the cleansing and power of the Holy Ghost, that we may be holy as He is holy.—Word of Life.

MY DREAMS.

Mrs. Susan Leland Baker.

I dreamed I walked by the seashore,
And watched the ebbing tide.
The waves receding from the strand
Left their tribute far and wide.

There were sea shells pink and pearly,
There were weeds with silver hair,
There were spars from a stranded vessel;
Driftwood and jewels rare.

I saw that the beach was crowded
With people who searched the sands
For the broken cups of promise
That had shattered in their hands.

"It was here my ideals vanished;
My prayers were of no avail."
So never looking upward
They lost the sight of the "Grail."

Then I said I may find my treasures
Which I dropped on life's highway.
Lost home, lost joys, lost jewels:
"Lost chords" of the winsome way.

I stooped on the rim of the ocean,
For the scattered parts of a lute,
A voice of keenest sorrow cried
"Please help me to find my flute."

So kneeling, I found the pieces
And placed them in her hands.
"Your flute will breathe thy minor notes
When mended with silver bands."

I looked—and saw in the gloaming,
Two figures aglow in the light.
They beckoned, and words like music
Came clear in the purpling night—

"My child we have found your treasures,
We have them safe over there.

CUSTER'S LAST STAND.

The fiftieth anniversary of the "Custer Massacre," probably the most famous battle with Indians in American history, is to be commemorated next June. General George A. Custer, after making a fine record as a Union commander in the Civil War, went west to fight the Indians. On June 25, 1876, Custer, at the head of 260 men, attacked the Indians near the junction of the Big Horn and Little Big Horn Rivers, in Montana. Although Custer and his soldiers were outnumbered by the Indians twenty to one, they fought valiantly until every man was killed.

Custer and his men were members of the Seventh U. S. Cavalry regiment at the time they were massacred by the Indians. In commemorating the battle it is planned to send the present Seventh Cavalry over the same route taken by Custer. As nearly as possible the battle of fifty years ago will be re-enacted.—Current Events.

—New York City is a busy place. in 1925, railroads and ferryboats carried a total of nearly 340 million passengers into and out of the metropolis, according to a report of the New York Transit Commission. Of that total nearly 250 million were "commuters," that is, persons who have their business or work in New York but who have their homes outside the city.

Mrs. D. B. Johnson.

Minnie Ethel Johnson, wife of D. B. Johnson and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gales, born Nov. 15, 1881, departed this life April 11, 1926.

She leaves in sadness and wonder a husband and eight children, a mother, one sister and two brothers, besides a host of relatives and friends.

But just beyond this there is a sweet thought that presents itself like this: She was ready and we can meet her in the sweet by and by.

She was a sweet and loving wife and mother, always found on the right side of all the problems of life and always ready to help the sick and needy, always giving out cheer and comfort.

She loved her class of children in the Sunday School and hated so bad to stop teaching them.

Some time, some where we will understand

She joined the church in early life and remained a faithful member until her death.

We the husband and children want to thank the good neighbors and friends for their great help, comfort and cheer in these our hours of sickness and death. Also the doctors and nurse for all they have done and the pastors of the different churches for being so faithful in prayer for wife's and mother's health to be restored. D. B. Johnson and children.

The funeral service was conducted in the home of Mr. D. B. Johnson by her pastor, Rev. W. L. Carson, assisted by Rev. W. B. Lockrage, Rev. J. B. Fitzjerald, Rev. A. C. Swaford and Rev. Mr. Armstrong.

To evidence the fact of Mrs. Johnson's faithful service in the Lord's business many many friends and relatives in spite of the inclement weather attended her burial service.

Mrs. Johnson's class of little children made a lasting impression on the mind of those present as they served as flower girls to pay the last tribute of respect to their much loved teacher.

Mrs. Johnson was the queen of her home. She trained her children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, establishing a model home.

Her body was laid to rest in the Lincolnton cemetery under the covering of many beautiful flowers to await the summon on the resurrection morning.

Dear mother, thou hast left us
In our home no more to be,
You are gone but not forgotten.
Thy God shall be my God.

GRACE OPENING NEW CHURCH.

Next Sunday, May 2nd, will be a great day the history of Grace Church, Greensboro will not only be the thirty fifth anniversary the organization of the church, but will be day for opening the beautiful new church lding on North Edgeworth and Gaston Sts We have been looking forward to this day a long time and we shall celebrate the ening with appropriate services. It is the n to open the Sunday School building for regular session at 9:45 o'clock. At the rning hour, 11:00 A. M., Dr. Spahr, the stor, will preach. And an afternoon meeting l be held at 4:30 P. M., to which service we inviting all the former pastors and mem- rs of Grace Church, as well as other friends be with us. According to present plans, Rev. orge Stephens, evangelist, will deliver the ssage, after which a communion service will held. Dr. A. G. Dixon will be with us at time and we hope to make it a great oc- ion.

Grace Church had its beginnings in 1888. when at the Henderson Conference, Rev. J. R Ball was assigned to this field to secure subscriptions and funds toward erection of a building. Early in the spring of 1891 work on the building began and a Sunday School was organized in April of that year. Rev. W. F. Ohrum, of Maryland, was the first pastor and took up his work in April, 1891. He served only six months when he was taken severely ill and died.

The succeeding pastors have been: Rev. J S. Williams, D.D., who served from June, 1891, to the conference of 1896; Rev. J. F. McCulloch, D. D., the year of 1897; Rev. T. M. Johnson, D. D., 1898-1902; Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., 1903-1907; Rev. T. J. Ogburn, 1908-1912; Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D., 1913-1917; Rev. C. W. Bates, 1918-1919; Rev. R. C. Stubbins, 1920-1923.

January 1, 1924, Rev. S. K. Spahr, D. D., of the Pittsburgh Conference, took up the work as pastor and is still leading the church on to higher and bigger things. Rev. Lawrence Little was assigned to the church as Associate Pastor at the last Annual Conference and is devoting his time largely to the religious educational program.

Since the beginning of the church in 1888 two other churches have grown out of the original organization and West End Church organized in 191 , and Calvary Church, organized in 1925, have become strong and influential organizations. These two, with Grace Church and St. Paul, make four strong churches in Greensboro. Grace Church now has 30 members.

It is hoped that the initial service in the new church Sunday will be but the beginning of a much larger and more effective service than the church has ever known. It is hoped that a large number of new members will be received at the morning service, and that a large offering will be given for the benevolences and general interests of the church.

The entire church will be pleased to have any of our friends of the Conference worship with us at either the morning or the afternoon service. Lawrence Little, Associate Pastor.

—We thank President Elderdice for an invitation to the closing exercises of the year at the Westminster Theological Seminary. This will be an interesting occasion. We regret that distance makes it impractable for us to attend. We are glad to believe that the Seminary has enjoyed a good year.

THE BEAST AT THE DOOR.

The word sin first appears in the Bible in Genesis 4:7. God uses the word in speaking to the angry Cain and represents sin as a beast crouching at the door. This beast is at the door ready to spring upon and devour Cain, but it is possible for Cain to subdue the beast and keep it under control.

All men of all generations have had to contend with this sleeping beast. How easily awakened he is, and with what ferocity does he spring upon his intended victim. Yet God does not will that any one should be overcome of this beast, but has made it possible to overcome him. And the thought of bringing him under control seems to suggest that he may be converted from a beast of prey to a useful servant, a bearer of burdens or a drawer of vehicles. Is it not so, that the forces that might and would destroy us if we permitted may be converted into useful servants. Sin is simply perversion, misuse, "missing the mark."

—Bro. R. F. Williams has located in Greensboro at 217 Church St. He will be missed in Burlington where he has lived so long and taken such an active part. We welcome him to our city and hope to see him often. He is now president of the Board of Trustees of High Point College.

—Rev. G. H. Hendry changes his address from Gibsonville to Burlington where he will give his entire time to Fountain Place Church. Gibsonville church will be served by Prof. Hardy, of High Point College.

—Among the graduates of Westminster Theological Seminary this year we note the name of Brother M. P. Chandliss, pastor of Vance circuit.

—Mrs. W. D. Kirkman, of Pleasant Garden, has passed away and will be buried at Tabernacle this P. M. She was the good mother of Norman W. Kirkman, of Clark and Adger and Miss Lelia, and was one of Tabernacle's saintly women. She was about 70 years of age.

FACE TO FACE.

No, I have never seen him face to face;
But I have spoken in his listening ear.
Have tasted freely of his saving grace;
Have proved his promises and felt him near.
I have not seen him face to face; what need?
When day by day, his tender love and care,
Wrap me around; when I can with him plead
My heart's desires, and know he answers prayer.
Not face to face, not yet! but hand in hand!
As he has willed it, I would have it be.
But some sweet day, I shall in his own land
Behold him, and his glorious beauty see!

ABNORMAL EVOLUTION.

A Case in Which Evolution Misses the Mark.

By Luther K. Long.

Evolution does not always mean, going forward. Sometimes the movement is backward. There are losses as well as gains.

Survival of the fittest does not mean that what is best from a moral and spiritual viewpoint will always come out ahead. Conditions may, for a time at least, be on the side of undesirable individuals, groups, or social customs.

Parasites prosper. Leeches live, and weaken the lives of the superior animals on which they fasten themselves. Spanish moss hangs in flourishing festoons from valuable trees in southern forests, doing serious injury. Mistletoe grows in the branches of great live-oak trees, and may eventually suck the life out of the latter.

In much the same way certain individuals and classes in human society fasten themselves on the social body, perhaps for a time serving a useful purpose, and then becoming injurious parasites.

In one of Mark Twain's volumes he has a humorous, satirical section on the doings of a man who had found it profitable to engage in the business of Undertaking. Now, furnishing caskets and attending to the burial of the dead is a perfectly legitimate form of social service. But it has its temptations, and Mark Twain holds up to ridicule and scorn the man who plays upon the sensibilities and sad situation of the bereaved in order to fill his own pockets. The humorist is so discerning and life-like in his presentation of the matter that you would almost think he had been in your neighborhood and was telling of incidents that had come under your own observation.

Just recently a man was telling me of an Undertaker whom he has known for many years and who has built up a large, and financially profitable, business. He advertises, he is on the look-out for new customers, he skilfully displays caskets and other goods, he tactfully talks styles and prices, he advises the use of plenty flowers and a cement vault and a "suitable" monument—and he gets a commission from the florist and from the venders of vaults and monuments. This undertaker has the reputation of being expert in many things that have only remotely to do with his proper business. He likes to have as many details as possible left to him. He knows just what to do—arranges, if the bereaved are willing, for the minister; he knows what ministers and what singers will do the most advertising for him, and arranges their compensation accordingly. Knowing the people in his large territory, and their financial condition, he is able to guard against bad debts. The result is, so my informant told me, that in a region where the people are generally poor, he is making plenty of money. Families need to economize for years in order to pay the expenses connected with the burial of their dead. My friend firmly believes that this particular Undertaker is a harmful social parasite.

Is there any way out of this? Shall we go back to the old ways? Time was when funeral costs were very small. Neighbors dug the grave, a local cabinet-maker put together the coffin, flowers were brought from home gardens, a neighbor's spring-wagon served as a hearse, a simple service at the house and grave was perhaps followed by a memorial service in the church at a later time.

We can't well go back, it would seem too crude to satisfy now. In the case of man evolution works more or less through his intelligence. That is to say, men can determine to a certain extent the lines and directions along which they will attempt to progress. They have developed elaborate educational systems, transportation, business and governmental methods—surely they can work out a satisfactory way of disposing of the bodies of their dead.

As sickness and death are the common lot of men—and they usually mean serious financial loss to the family—it is thought by some that the community should bear the expense of disposing of the bodies. It would be possible to bear the body away and bury it, quickly and in a sanitary manner. Later, a memorial service could be held in the home or in the church—this to be as public or as private as the friends might desire. I know there are people who would not want to go to a funeral in the absence of the dead body and the evident distress of the mourners. I know, also, there are people who would much prefer a service free from the distractions connected with the Undertaker and the final farewell to the remains.

Cremation, as a method of disposing of the bodies of the dead, is slowly winning approval. Eventually we become dust and ashes; why not, in the interest of simplicity and sanitation, hasten the process? When our country is as old as China, we may be as much embarrassed by cemeteries and monuments to the dead as are the Chinese. We can never hope to excel the Egyptians in making the body immortal. Being Christians we don't want to. Then, why should we so much desire to preserve the body for only a few more months or even for many years, from its inevitable destiny?

Whatever may be our present practice in the matter, it seems to me that the time has come for Christians to think the thing through, institute reasonable reforms, and adopt sensible customs.

THE EASY WAY.

Tourists sitting on the veranda of a ho at a mountain resort were idly watchi through glasses a little band of adventuro mountain climbers who were endeavoring reach the summit of a lofty peak in that vici ity. Through the glasses they could be see mere black specks, faintly outlined again the snow-covered slopes. Suddenly there w a commotion. One of the figures, after an a parent struggle, threw up its arms and disa peared. A second followed and then a thir The fourth struggled for a moment and pre ently was seen standing alone upon the slo where his companions had disappeared.

A searching party was hastily organiz and sent out. Late in the evening it returne bringing with it the lone survivor. The othe were lying maimed and battered at the botto of a deep gulch. But to the anxious frien at the hotel it soon became apparent that t survivor was not popular with his rescuer They seemed systematically to avoid him a never spoke to him if they could escape h presence. Finally the explanation leaked ou When the rope was examined the rescuer found it had been cut. Apparently the four man of the party had deliberately decided t save his own life at the sacrifice of the liv of his friends.

It was a dastardly thing to do. The man wh deliberately saves himself at the expense o others is not a man to be admired or imitate He has no place in the chivalry of a mode age. His place is back in that barbaric peri when man believed he must look out for hi self, no matter what happened to the other Measured by today's ethical standards, o cannot only sympathize with, but approve o the attitude of his former friends.

Yet such acts are not so uncommon as o might suppose them to be. Humanity is boun by invisible ropes—ties of social and busines moral and spiritual interests—and history di closes that we rise or fall together. One ma cannot fall without putting an addition strain upon his brothers or dragging dow others with him. Conversely we cannot ri to any honorable height in this world witho lifting others by the power of our examp and the inspiration of our courage and dev tion.

It is to be regretted that with this unive sal knowledge in almost every Christianize community there should be so many wh should deliberately choose to cut the ro that they may save themselves. It must b confessed it is the easier way. One who liv in daily contact with men and women who a struggling against great odds to save then selves from disaster, may, by simply cuttin the rope, doom those unfortunates to destru tion. That is one way, but is it Christ's way

Yet this is what many do. There are mi sionary problems in almost every communit There are foreigners to be Americanize there are social outcasts to be regenerate there are men and women plunging daily ov precipices to moral and spiritual ruin. Th pity is that so many Christians, not realizin their responsibility, should deliberately c e rope rather than take upon themselves the rden of pain and sacrifice that saving an- her naturally involves. Yet their hope of lvation is in One who gave his life for them. -Forward.

HIS PICTURE.

By Minna McEuen Meyer.

On one of the hills above the town in which sus grew to manhood stands a low building. rrounded by fields and fir trees. This build- g is the home of more than a hundred boys om twelve to fourteen years of age—or- ans of the great war or survivors of the de- rtations from Turkey. From their home on e hill they may look out over the valley of sdraelon through which, centuries ago, great ngs with their legions marched to conquest to defeat. It was on this plain that "The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,

His cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold."

ver it the Egyptians passed with their war ariots and their horsemen, and the armies many nations followed until, last of all, llenby, in the year 1917, marched into Pales- ne, and drove out of the land its Turkish pressors, To the west stands Carmel, a long w range, on which Elijah met the priests Baal.

In the valley, a little to the south and west Nazareth, stands the village of Dothan here Joseph went to see his brothers as they red for their father's flocks. It was there e brothers took Joseph and sold him to some erchants passing by on their way to Egypt he boys of the Nazareth orphanage watch e shepherds leading their flocks to pasture nd the merchants with their camel caravans ass along the road, just as they did in the ys of long ago. The events of the Bible stor- s are so real to them that they have drama- zed the story of Joseph, and often act it for sitors from America who visit Nazareth.

In a shop down in the village of Nazareth nd across the street from the place where it supposed stood the carpenter shop of an- her Joseph, a large group of boys from the rphange are learning the trade that Jesus arned when he was a boy. From the wood of ive trees, cut down during the war because the heavy tax on orchards, the boys make rniture for the people of Nazareth, and uvenirs, such as rulers, book-ends and fancy xes, for American visitors who like to take ch souvenirs back to their homes. The boys e interested in their work and try to do it ell.

One evening someone entering the large om where at night the boys sleep, spreading eir pallets on the floor, heard a lad of twelve ose his evening prayer with the words, "and ake me a good carpenter."

The orphanage buildings, though clean and dy are very plain, and the whitewashed alls are bare, except for three pictures. Two these are framed pictures of Lincoln and Roosevelt. They were a gift from some merican friend. The boys are familiar with e words and deeds of these great men which caused others to love them and honor their memory. The third picture is a new one that was recently placed between the other two It is the gift of Mr. Blatchford, the Near East Relief Director for Palestine. After several years of strenuous work, Mr. Blatchford was planning a vacation trip to England. Before sailing he went to say good-bye to the boys of the orphanage and they asked for his picture for their hall.

"Who am I that my picture should be placed beside the pictures of those two illustrious men?" asked Mr. Blatchford, modestly. But the boys urged, and finally he consented to bring them a picture on his return.

His vacation over, the Director was again welcomed to the orphanage. "I have brought my picture, as I promised," he said, and opening a package, held up to the boys' astonished gaze a photograph of that famous statue by Thorwaldson, showing a man wrestling for his life in the coils of a huge serpent.

"That is a picture of me," said Mr. Blatchford. "All my life I have wrestled daily with an old serpent, which is called by such names as my lower self, my temper and my temptations. And so must every man or boy wrestle who would win the victory over himself."

Mr. Blatchford's picture was placed on the wall between the pictures of Lincoln and of Roosevelt, and evenings when the day's work is done, the boys frequently gather in groups before it. One evening a teacher heard a boy say to a friend who stood beside him: "Have you had a fight with the serpent today?"

"Yes, I have," replied the other boy, "and I strangled him, too."

THE EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY IN OUR COLLEGES.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

(The article that folllows, by Bishop Candler, is worthy of consideration by all of our colleges. Are our colleges being paganized? It would seem so, as much as we dislike to admit it. J. F. Dosier.)

In The "Historical Catalogue" of the University of Mississippi is this interesting bit of history:

"In connection with the School of Metaphysics and Ethics there occured in the very infancy of the institution an incident which doubtless, in no unimportant degree, influenced and determined the character of the work to be done by the university throughout the whole of its existence. In one of the first meetings of the board of trustees a proposition was offered to exclude from the course of study the subject of 'Evidences of Christianity.' This proposition provoked a prolonged and heated discussion, a result of which was the resignation of one member of the board, who in his letter of resignation took occasion to make a bitter assault upon the Christian religion. Happily, however, an over-whelming majority of the board were favorable to the admission of the subject into the curriculum, and the result of the contsoversy was to stamp the university as a Christian, though in no sense as a sectarian institution."

At another place in the "Historical Catalogue" it is said:

"It was Judge James M. Howry who successfully led the forces favoring the introduction of the Evidences of Christianity into the curriculum and establishing the university on a basis distinctly Christian."

On still another page of the same publication is this record:

"At a meeting of the board held in Oxford July 12, 1848, the election of a faculty was considered. During this meeting of the board occured an earnest discussion relating to the religious character of the university. Two members of the board vigorously opposed the introduction of the Christian Evidence into the curriculum and the election of any Christian minister to a professorship. It was then definitely settled that the university should have stamped upon it such religious and moral character in its work as would be acceptable to the Christian people of the state of Mississippi."

This position of Judge Mowry and "the overwhelming majority" of the board of trustees of the University of Mississippi was that held almost, if not quite, unanimously by all the educators in the United States, and the Evidences of Christianity continued in the curriculum of the university for a half century after its establishment. There the famous Rev. Augustus Baldwin Longstreet, D. D. LL. D., taught the Evidences of Christianity from 1849 to 1856. In the same work he was followed successively by Rev. Nathaniel M. Crawford, D. D., Rev. George W. Carter, D. D., and Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, LL. D.

The subject of the Evidences of Christianity was a part of the courses offered by all the state universities until some years after the War Between the States; and Christian ministers were the presidents of a majority of them. Then mighty men came forth from these institutions.

Just when and why this wise policy was abandoned cannot be determined with certainty. But it has certainly been renounced by our colleges and universities. Even institutions owned and controlled by Christian churches, with few exceptions, no longer include Christian Evidences in their courses of study, and, many of them, with increasing wealth and the ability to pay larger salaries, cease to engage ministers of the gospel as members of their faculties. Bad results are following this bad policy, and thoughtful men of piety and patriotism are awakening to the fact of the evil consequences that are flowing from it.

In a strong article which recently appeared in "The Presbyterian," of Philadelphia, the subject is most forcibly and wisely discussed. The writer begins his article as follows:

"A basic cause of the current drift from the firm moorings of evangelical Christianity out into the darkening and unchartered sea of Agnosticism and Infidelity, so noted in schools and colleges, seems to be generally overlooked. Briefly, it is that while the honest folk who support supposedly Christian education have been asleep, the pegagogic oligarchy have stealthily removed the reliable landmarks of faith. Specifically, we mean that while courses in material sciences and pseudosciences have been multiplied, the subject of Christian Evidences seems to have been quietly dropped from the curriculums. Formerly 'Christian Evidences' was a required subject in the senior year; now it is not even found in the popular catalogues. An inspection of some fifteen or more catalogues reveals no signs that such an important subject as 'Christian Evidences' exists or has ever been heard of. A dozen of these institutions show a total enrollment (including correspondence and summer students) of around 135,000 men and women—probably a majority of whom are to become teachers or leaders of the people in one way or another. But while there is no apparent attempt to present the evidential claims of historic Christianity, all kinds of freak dishes are served to their students."

After naming a number of the leading universities of the country, and showing how they include in their courses of study such freakish courses as "Police Microscopy," "Evolution of Morality," "Social Activities of the Primitive Man," "The Psychophysiology of Motivation," and much other nonsensical stuff, while excluding the Evidences of Christianity, the writer of the article goes on to say:

"With such rations, can you wonder that the individual products of 'higher education' have chronic spiritual dyspepsia and an unwholesome craving for the know-nothingism of agnosticism, if not the yet more depraved taste of atheism—a very old ailment, for a wise writer said, some thirty-five hundred years ago, "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." It is not strange that students who constantly hear the asserted evidences of biology proclaimed from the housetops, but nothing of the evidences about our spiritual nature and life are like the barrel of a jug—all on one side. Whatever may be the connection between declining Sabbath observance and increasing crime, between both is the demoralizing influence of the traitors in colleges and universities who under the plea of subtly removing the intellectual liberty—license for themselves—are foundations of a God-fearing morality.

"In other words, while all kinds of hypothetical isms or ologies are thrust before students and prospective teachers, the historic and logical evidences of Christian truth are ignored as if they were not. Do you expect to avoid the effects of poison when you have thrown away the remedy and have no antidote to administer? Parents should take care in approving a college or university for their children to see that a legitimate course—properly named—in 'Christian Evidences' is at least offered as elective—preferably required."

The language which he thus employs in the discussion of this important subject is no stronger than it is wise and just.

The subject of the Evidences of Christianity should be restored to its rightful place in the courses of studies of our institutions of higher learning—and most especially in the courses offered by the colleges and universities of the Christian Churches.

In Harvard University a course in "Modern Philosophy" is offered. Why then should not course in Christian Evidences be offered by the institution which bears the revered name of John Harvard and owes its very existence to the thought and efforts of that holy man?

Why should any educational institution which professes to impart useful learning and promote liberal culture exclude from its curriculum the Evidences of Christianity—the religion of the civilized world?

The subject should not be in the courses offered by schools of theology alone, but should be presented in the courses leading to degrees in the undergraduate departments of all colleges and universities.

But even in some schools of theology it is not a required course. It is not surprising that a number of these schools are no longer called theological seminaries, but "schools of religion." Presumably "any old religion" can find place in them. From such institutions no distinctively Christian life or influence can be expected to issue.

But there are left not a few institutions to which the churches and the country have a right to look for better things, and many of them will not disappoint the wishes and expectations of the devout men and women who have founded them and who expect them to render the service which they were founded to render.

Christian colleges and universities have no excuse for hesitating or failing to be Christian. When they renounce or forfeit their Christian character they deserve to die in dishonor.

Let them, therefore, be ready to give to all on a reason for the faith that is in them, and impart that faith to all students who seek the educational advantages which they have to offer.

No one is compelled to patronize them; but they are bound by every consideration of honesty and fidelity to fulfill the high and holy mission which they were established to serve.

Every college or university which professes to be a Christian institution should be able to give a candid, clear and courageous answer to every one who asks it, "What do you more than others?" If it cannot answer that question with a reply comporting with its professedly Christian character it is guilty of educational simony: it seeks to use a holy name to get unholy gains. Certainly nothing can be more discreditable than that.

If Christian institutions will not defend the Christian religion by presenting the evidences by which its divine origin is established, what can be expected of secular colleges and universities?

Shall the cause of Christ and His holy religion be betrayed in the house of His professed friends? Shall His name be worn for gain and His truth betrayed for gold?

Better to do nothing than to do ill.—Pliny.

High Point.—A musical comedy, "The Min-st Friday evening in the Assembly room of a large audience, which was highly pleased ith the entertainment. The parts were well

The Mission Study Class will meet Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the C. E. room at the church. The new Home Mission study book, "Adventures in Brotherhood," will be taken up.

The Brotherhood, which failed to meet last month on account of sickness among the members, will hold a meeting Thursday evening and have supper in the Assembly room. A good program for this occasion is being prepared.

The choir under the leadership of Mr. Dan W. Smith, with Miss Novella McIntyre of the College at the organ, is rendering beautiful music at every service, and the congregation is enjoying it greatly. A lovely Anthem, "O Praise the Lord, Ye Nations," was sung last Sunday morning, and a charming Cello Solo, "Pereense," was rendered by Mr. Frank C. Evans. At the evening service Miss Iola Perryman sang a delightful solo, "Spirit of God," by Neidlinger.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will convene May 12 at High Point College, and several services will be held in our church. About fifty delegates from the different conferences are expected and plans are being made for their entertainment.

On June 6, the commencement sermon of High Point College will be preached by Dr. J. W. Hawley of Pittsburgh, Pa., and his coming to our church is anticipated with much interest and pleasure.

Mrs. S. R. Harris of Henderson, who has been the guest of her daughter, Mrs. R. M. Andrews, has returned home.

Mr. Clifton L. Whitaker Jr. of Gastonia spent Sunday with his mother at the College.

Master Virgil Hinkle, the eight year old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hinkle, underwent an operation for appendicitis at the Barnes Clinic last week, and his friends are pleased to know that his improvement is satisfactory.

We are pleased to see Mrs. Geo. Penny out after a recent illness.

Mrs. Faulkner and son of Henderson was a recent visitor to the college where they were guests of her daughter, Miss Alice Faulkner.

Second Church, Charlotte.—We were glad to have our pastor with us again yesterday. We observed The Lord's Supper, and also received one new member into the church at the morning service. A number of us went to Mt. Zion Grove with Bro. Braswell, where we enjoyed a comforting sermon delivered by our class leader, Bro. J. E. Thomas.

A revival broke out in our midst at the evening service, and Bro. Braswell has kindly consented to remain with us this week and conduct the meetings for us.

In my last report I failed to send in the pastor's report and recommendations, which he gave us in the quarterly conference. This was an over-sight on my part, and I beg your indulgence. I enclose his report herewith.

(This report may be expected next week.—Editor.)

Mt. Lebanon, Randleman Charge.—On Sunday evening, April 18, at 7:30 a band of young people from High Point College chaperoned by Miss Mary Young visited our church and gave us a demonstration of Christian Endeavorers at work. Miss Elizabeth Nicholson was the leader for the evening. The program was carried out in an interesting way and was much enjoyed by the large audience that had gathered for the occasion.

The young people from the college were: Misses Mary Young, Elizabeth Nicholson, Alice Faulkner, Lelia Wagoner, Lillie Mae Braxton, Leo Sowell, Jewel Hughes and Ruth Duncannon from the Children's Home: Messrs Jabus Braxton, Grover Angel, Hermon Cobler and William Herndon.

At the close of the program Miss Mary Young took charge and in her interesting and impressive manner explained the work of the Christian Endeavor Society and organized a Society here with the following officers: President, Miss Dorothy Lamb; Vice President, Miss Bart Caudle; Secretary, Miss Kate Ferree; and Treasurer, Mr. Kenneth Daniel. The Society met Sunday evening to complete their organization and will hold their first meeting Sunday, May 2 at 5:30 P. M. A good attendance is much desired.

On last Sunday our Sunday school was favored with a duet by two young ladies from H. P. College, Miss Leo Sowell and Miss Minnie Cooper. They very impressively sang, "My only hope," then Miss Sowell favored us with a solo, "Jesus is Calling." These young ladies spent the week end with one of our girls who is in school at H. P. College, Miss Jewel Hughes.

Miss Mary V. White of Vance Charge was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. Neese a few days last week. She was on her way to attend the Woman's Missionary Convention at Thomasville and stopped over for a short visit with her former pastor and family.

These people who say that a preacher and his wife have an easy time would not say so any more if they had been with the Randleman pastor and his wife on last Sunday. They attended six services on that day and enjoyed them everyone.

Two of the services were regular meetings of the Missionary Societies. We will report at a later date the forward steps that were taken in those meetings. Mrs. W. H. Neese.

I find in the House of Commons, especially among the labor party, many men who fifty years ago would inevitably have gone into the Christian ministry. They have been drawn into political life from a deep desire to help the people.—Stanley Baldwin, prime minister of Great Britain.

MY FAVORITE ILLUSTRATION.

They called her Old Bust 'er Up. She was a gaspy old steamer that made weekly trips between points on the Ohio River. Her sides were battered and worn, the engine sputtered, and the decks were cluttered with refuse. Moreover, something was eternally wrong with the boat, and great crowds gathered at the docks to poke fun at her and wonder whether she'd ever again make the return journey.

It was the one standing joke of all the river towns, and an ever live topic with the dock loafers who bet among themselves on the time it would take "the old tub" to load her cargo and stumble off down the river again. So things went on year after year, and the wonder is how her captain, Big Bill Smith, ever withstood the onslaught of jibes and sneers.

But one day there came a change, and the usual crowd were surprised to see the boat come in on schedule for the first time in well on to ten years. The crew, usually a sullen and disgruntled lot, were smiling, and the decks were clear, and the engine was working with a steady chug-chug.

What could be the matter? Why, she didn't look like the same boat at all, and curious glances were exchanged by the hangers-on Then a bolder spirit in the crowd took up courage, and cupping his hands over his mouth, hollered:

"I say, man, what's up?"

The crew grinned, and one of their number answered:

"We've got a new captain."

It is so with the life of a man. He goes stumbling through the years with little signs of life, and nothing worth while in view. The great change comes with the changing of the Captain. When Christ takes charge old things pass away, a clean heart is assured, and the new life begins.—Selected.

THE THINGS LEFT UNDONE.

Alice was crying bitterly. As her mother tried to comfort her, she asked her what she had done:

"I didn't do anything," sobbed Alice.

"It is what I did not do. I forgot to feed Peter, and he is dead!" Then she sobbed again as if her heart would break.

Peter was her pet canary, whom she loved very much. The mother felt very sorry for the little girl; but at the same time she knew that she needed a lesson like this to cure her forgetfulness.

Our greatest heartaches may come from the things we have left undone.

It was the man who hid his talent, and made no use of it that received condemnation. Dives did not touch Lazarus; he simply ignored him.

We are more prone to watch against the sin of commission than we are that of omission; but we have great need to guard against both —Selected.

—Grace Church people are to enter their splendid new house of worship next Sunday. Some of them have been looking forward to this for twenty years. They have hoped for it, prayed for it and worked for it, and now they have it. We congratulate them.

MOUNTS OF VISION.

On the Mount of Transfiguration Peter said to Jesus, "Lord, it is good for us to be here. Let us make here three tabernacles, one for Thee; one for Moses and one for Elias."

The first sentence of this suggestion of Peter's was good. It was indeed a blessing for them to be there. They had become weary in well-doing. They had begun to doubt and fear and in their minds was the thought of turning back and forsaking Jesus as so many others had done already. It was the vision of the Mount that called them back to their loyalty and their love.

We all need our mounts of vision. We need, like the Lord and the disciples, to get off in the stillness where the busy din of the world is hushed and we can hear the voice and see the glory of God. We have all known men and women full of zeal for God. They undertake a vast amount of difficult and exhausting work. They give the most abundant promise. But as the years pass their light becomes dimmer and fainter, like a lamp when the oil is exhausted. The trouble is they have never known the quiet hour. They do not know what it is to be alone with God. Of course the light fades and goes out.

But the closing words of Peter's suggestion are utterly foreign to the Lord's purpose. "Let us make here three tabernacles, one for Thee; one for Moses and one for Elias."

Peter had never seen such a vision as that which broke before him there on the mount. He had never before been in such company. All the deep spiritual longings of his heart seemed in that hour to be more than satisfied. He wanted to stay there always. He forgot the foot of the mountain. He forgot the rest of the disciples. He forgot his family and home. He forgot the world of need. He was thinking only of his own spiritual comfort and said, "Lord, let's stay here always."

Many of us, I am sure, have passed through this experience. In the midst of some grand spiritual uplife which has come to us we long to remain there always.

Longfellow in one of his poems pictures a youth who takes in his hand a banner and starts to ascend a mountain. As he goes he gradually leaves behind him his home, his family and friends and everything he had known. Higher and higher he goes shouting the word on his banner "Excelsior." His voice grows fainter and fainter in the distance till it ceases to sound at all. He had ascended so high that the air would no longer sustain life.

So often we see Christians going the same way. They are enthusiastic about their religion and we need enthusiasm. There is too little of it. They rise higher and higher till they have lost vital touch with the practical world in which they were intended to live. They lose sight of their every-day duties. They are so absorbed in meetings and conventions and various forms of spiritual ecstasy that they forget such trifles as truth, and honesty, and loving their neighbors and paying their debts. They have become too religious to pay attention to these minor matters. Before long, like the youth with the banner they reach the point where their spiritual life no longer exists at all.

You recall the legend of St. Simeon Stylites. He was a hermit who lived on the top of a pillar. For three years by day and by night in winter's cold and summer's heat he kept his lonely post at the top of the pillar, schooling his soul in prayer. One day there came an angel who bade him come down. The angel took the worn and half mad old man to a quiet valley where a poor goose herd lived. The goose herd was a simple peasant who rose every morning to pray and spent the rest of the day caring for his flock. He had a little child whose parents had been killed by robbers. He had taken her home and adopted her and loved her as his own child.

Old Simeon looked upon them with envy. "I know now," he said, "why you are so happy. A simple life of kindness and service doing the will of God and loving one's neighbors is holier than mere fastings and austerities and prayers."

Simon would have built Jesus a tabernacle on the hill. But the Lord led him down the hill to the crowd and the Cross and there is where He would find us, putting to the test of service the visions of the mount.—Dr. S. N. Hutchinson, in Presbyterian Banner.

A MODEL CHILD.

Every mother hopes that her child will be a model child, and some secretly think that theirs are models, although they are apt to add that they "don't expect children to be perfect."

But we quote a wise old French philosopher "Children need models rather than critics." When we come to sift the matter down a model child needs a model mother.

A school teacher readily recognizes those children whose mothers are "on their job," for well-behaved children come from such homes. And while school teachers, friends and relatives have influence with the children the mother's influence is first, nearest and most personal. The hand that tucks the cover in at night is more intimate than the one which corrects the arithmetic paper!

Of course the conscientious mother teaches her child honesty, kindliness, charity, thrift, good manners and many other details of good character and breeding. But the model child is not conscious of such teaching, the model mother teaches by example. Children, being extremely imitative naturally, observe and copy whatever is close at hand. The model mother does not say, "Respect your elders," she goes out of her way, herself, to show deference to the grandparents, and the children unconsciously take the cue in their manner toward old age.

If a mother's voice is sweet and gentle children are far less likely to snarl at each other. If she is scrupulous about paying bills and giving every one his due, the model child likewise scorns to cheat.

When a mother permits no waste in the kitchen, keeps clothes neatly mended, brushed and cleaned, the model child, though he does become faultless at once—this is too much xpect—has nevertheless the idea of thrift orderliness very firmly fixed for the rest is life.

hildren, of course, need direction and ad , which can be suggested in a friendly, ful way. But the model child is really the lt of a model mother—for above all "Chil- need models rather than critics."—Mar Brownfield.

CHRIST THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

The secret of a world-overcoming faith to lies in the fact that we have more than a dition of the origin of that faith, more n a history of its rise. We have more than ecorded Jesus, the echoes of whose sayings e come down to us through the corridors time. We need the record; we are more n grateful for its preservation. We have fear what the most exacting criticism may ke of it. Whatever new discovery may yet p to light, that record never shall be sham traiture of our Saviour and Lord which we gaze on with adoring faith and love. But t which makes us understand the enthusi- n for Jesus which its pages speak about l which was the historical start of that be- ficent river of life and love which, in great- and greater volume, is pouring itself over continents, is that the self-same Furnace Divine love incarnate whom we confess fore the visible and invisible world as our rd and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We need neither go back into history, nor mb the heavy stairs, to get in contact with m. He communicates directly by His Spirit th the soul of man. The voice within is the o of His call. He is the inspiration of every ht desire, of every longing after purity every unselfish thought and deed. We have Presence in our modern world. He can heal disorders, solve its questions, direct its ivings after a nobler life and a worthier cial order in which there is a fair opportun for every man. LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

The West Virginia Reform School News falls in line with the command to love one another, in this fashion:

"We may if we choose make the worst of it. Every one has his weak points; every one has his faults.

"We may forgive even as we hope to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others and ask what we should wish to be done to us and thought of us were we in their place. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, love will flow back from them to us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain, and earth will become like heaven. and we shall become not unworthy followers of Him whose home is love. This is absolutely correct, but to see and feel that love is not returned for love and loving service given—what then? There is a lot of love and kindness expended in the world which is never returned in an appreciable degree; but all the same, it makes an impress, and is gold in the matter of example. If every one had the sense to try to be worth the loving of others, and could give love in return, the world would be heaven."—Selected.

THE ROAD TO HAPPINESS.

Alice Freeman Palmer, that wonderful woman who was president of Wellesley College at the age of twenty-six, was to address some children from the tenement districts of Boston on a hot day. She was wondering what she might say to throw a little brightness and joy into their lives. When she arose before them she said: "Well, children, what shall I talk about?" One little voice replied: "Tell us how to be happy." It was just what Mrs. Palmer had thought she ought to say. And her husband, in his sketch of her life, says: "Suddenly she thought of three rules she practiced every day of her life, and which brought happiness to her, so she decided to pass them on. on. And she did." The rules, brought out of her own experience and given to the group of children before her, were these: (1) Memorize something beautiful each day. (2) Look for something beautiful each day. (3) Do something for somebody each day. How many of those children took the rules and planted them in their own lives we can not say. But the rules are living ones, and do not die with any generation. In brief, Mrs. Palmer's rule was reducing the three to one, to improve her own life each day and to make the life of some one else a little happier each day. Beyond that standard, there is nothing higher, and in it is to be found the secret of the fuller life.—Selected.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE ON RELIGION.

Men in public life often speak of Christianity's ethics and of "religion" in general, but not so often of the Gospel and salvation. A recent utterance of President Coolidge, therefore, is the more notable and welcome. Speaking in Washington at the unveiling of a statue to Bishop Asbury, a pioneer of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he said: "Peace, justice humanity, charity—these cannot be legislated into being. They are the result of a divine grace." Of Asbury he said: "He did not come for political motives. He came to bring the Gospel to the people....Our Government rests upon religion....It is of great significance that the generation which fought the American Revolution had seen a very extensive religious revival. They had heard the preaching of Jonathan Edwards. They had seen the great revival meetings that were inspired also by the preaching of Whitefield....The religious movement which he (Asbury) represented was distinctly a movement to reach the great body of the people. Just as our Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are created free, so, it seems to me, the founders of this movement were inspired by the thought that all men were worthy to hear the Word, worthy to be sought out and brought to salvation.... As our ideal has been to bring all men to freedom, so their ideal was to bring all men to salvation." These are bold and blessed words from a President of the United States of America. They frankly recognize the Word of God, the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the salvation that is not the experience of all men, but only of those who receive salvation. Let us praise and pray for our President. and pray for all those in power, that more and more they may be emboldened and empowered to speak no uncertain word, in this Christian land, concerning the Way of Life.—Selected.

A HYMN.

By James D. Deans.

What wouldst Thou have me do,
Dear Lord, today?
Help me to follow Thee
O'er all the way;
Throughout the rushing flood
Lord be my stay!
Help me to know that fire
Burns up the dross;
And what Thou dost inspire
Can ne'er be loss;
Show me that joy of life
Comes through the Cross.
Lord, when the night is near
And shadows fall,
May I know Thou art near,
King over all;
Then faith will vanquish fear
And dread recall.
Lord when, so lovingly,
For friends away
I cry so anxiously
By night and day;
Lord bless those loving hearts
While I do pray.
Thou wert the very first,
The last shalt be,
So what comes in between
Must be from Thee;
Give me the faith that waits
So patiently!

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Edited by Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro, N. C.

Several months ago in this department was used a "Missionary Contest" and we were anxious for our people to try it. A friend wrote: "I enjoyed the work; I know our Missionaries, and their fields of work better by giving a few minutes of my time to study."

This is a list of those names I have received thus far, as having the correct answers. I am sure there are many others who did not send a report in.

At the Branch Meeting in Thomasville last week I was elected State Editor. In trying to follow in the steps of Mrs. J. M. Stone, who has so ably edited this department I feel very keenly my inability and insist the Secretaries of the different departments and the individual societies write often for this column. Send your articles to the Editor of the Herald, Greensboro, N. C. marked for the Missionary Department, or to Miss Esther Ross Asheboro, N. C.

Reports of the committees, adopted in the Branch Meeting, will be published in this column from time to time. Look each week for plays and suggestions for advancing the work. Esther Ross.

Thursday.

This was Home Missionary Day at the Branch Meeting. The attendance was good and reports of all phases of the work most encouraging. Much interest was shown in the SCHOLARSHIP LOAN FUND, which is a fund to lend students attending High Point College, who need financial assistance. In the three years we have had this phase of work $1,286.61 has been contributed.

The Treasurer's report gave much cause for rejoicing as she compared the finances of ten years ago with this year. In 1916 our total receipts were $252.07 while the total receipts for 1926 were $4,888.31.

Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk speaking of the work of the Children's Home cheered our hearts with reference to the things that had been accomplished and stirred us with a desire to do more than ever for the boys and girls of our denomination.

It was a pleasure to have Rev. Homer Caste tell us of the year's work at Bethel Home and we rejoice that the addition to the building is nearing completion and that this makes it possible for Bethel Home to open its doors to a larger number of patients.

The following officers were elected:

President, Mrs. Wm. C. Hammer, Asheboro N. C.

1st Vice President, Mrs. C. W. Bates, Asheville, N. C.

Bessemer City.—Some one has said that the Bessemer City M. P. Church is in a better condition than it has been for ten years.

Brother W. H. Henderson has been on the sick list since the beginning of this conference year and was not able to serve as Sunday school superintendent of the Sunday school so Brother Francis Lutz has been elected and Brother Lutz says: "Watch the Sundayschool grow."

There is a better day dawning for Bessemer City M. P. Church; during our meeting we had twelve conversions and the church is moving at a better pace.

We are going to have home coming day the first Sunday in June. Come with a basket of dinner and a big smile.

We said, I said, you say "you."

Lincolnton.—Since the revival conducted by Rev. S. W. Taylor, of Burlington, N. C., the church has taken on new life because Brother Taylor preached the fundamental truth that the church and people needed—truth that will enable an individual, home and church to become stabilized.

I am very proud of the work of the Junior C. E. Society; there are on roll 68 and these people are taking a lively interest in the work that will mean much for the church in coming days.

We have established a teacher's class in connection with our Wednesday evening prayer meeting to give our Sunday school teachers a broader knowledge of the Bible and train teachers for the Sunday school.

W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Union Grove, Orange Ct.—We held our Easter exercise the 3rd Sunday P. M., and hope to have the Children's Day exercise 1st Sunday in June.

We were glad to have second quarterly conference with us in March with more members present than usual, when it meets with us.

We are well pleased with our pastor, Rev. B. M. Williams, who is always at his post, a faithful pastor.

Our Missionary Societies are still doing, not all that could be done, for we do not have many taking part in it that should, but the best they can under the circumstances.

The special meeting is to begin 1st Sunday in August. We ask prayer that we may have a revival which is so badly needed in our community, so many are careless and indifferent have almost quit attending worship. May we be made to realize the seriousness of life, and what God requires of us who profess to be His followers.

Death has again entered our ranks. On April 2 Mrs. Kate Dodson, wife of A. M. Dodson passed to the beyond after two weeks of intense suffering. Mrs. Dodson came to our church from the M. E. when she moved to the community several years ago, was first president of our Foreign Mission Society. She will be greatly missed in her home and community. She leaves besides husband, four sons and one daughter. Messrs. Hedrick and Orr who are on the farm with their father, Clarence who lives at High Point and Roland who finishes high school at Chapel Hill this year and Mrs. W. A. Minnie who lives near. Burial service by her pastor Rev. B. M. Williams, of Union Grove and body laid to rest in cemetery.

On April 22, about 1 A. M. Mrs. Betty Ashley passed away very unexpectedly, having been in her usual health looking after her household duties and retired well as usual. Her sons heard her making a peculiar sound in breathing and went to her bed side and she was gone. She was not a member of the church but was a hard working harmless creature who staid at home and looked after her own affairs. Her husband, Larkin Ashley, died a good many years ago, left her with four boys Messrs. Johnnie (who is a member of our church), Willie, Henry and Joe all at home with her. Burial at Chestnut Ridge, service by Rev. B. M. Williams. May God comfort these sad lonely boys and may we all take warning and be prepared when our summons come.

The many friends of Rev. D. R. William regret to hear of his illness and wish for him speedy recovery. N. B. L.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Christian Endeavor Charts Mailed.

The denominational charts for Christian Endeavor societies have been mailed to the corresponding secretary, president, or superintendent of every society on our records. If you have not received a chart for your society your officers are not listed in our office. If you will write the address given above, we shall be very glad to mail you a copy. Please be sure to give the names and addresses of your officers when you write.

Topic for Sunday, May 9th: "How to Build Happy Homes." Eph. 6:1-10. (Mother's Day)

Plan for the Meeting.

Invite all your mothers, as well as all members of your society, to this meeting. You might include the fathers also. Ask several mothers to speak briefly on some topic relating to home life, love in the family, Christian atmosphere in the home, etc. Have your Endeavorers to take part in the meeting, then ask the mothers to participate. Of course some of them will not care to talk but be sure to give all an opportunity to take part who care to do so. It would be well to ask all your Endeavorers to sit by their mothers and fathers who are present.

Assign to several of your Endeavorers, in advance, the brief story of famous mothers in the Bible, and ask them to show in what ways they were great and in what ways they contributed to happy home life. Such stories may be found in the lives of such women as Sarah, the mother of Moses, the Shunemite woman, Naomi, Hannah, and the mother of Jesus.

Ask your pastor to discuss the topic, "Some Needs in American Home Life today."

Suggestion for Poster.

You will find abundant material for your poster in the magazine this month. Make it lend attractiveness to our love and respect for motherhood and the home. Use one of the many beautiful pictures of mothers you will find on the magazine covers, or use some scene of quiet and peaceful home life. Word your slogan so as to create interest in the meeting.

Topic for a Debate.

Resolved, that modern civilization is detrimental to the best home life. (Christian Endeavor World.)

THE BIRMINGHAM CONVENTION.

One of the special features of the Convention of the International Council of Religious Education, held in Birmingham, April 12-19 was the "Interdenominational Young People's Conference," held in the Sixth Avenue Presbyterian Church, from Friday night through Sunday evening. Over 1000 young people from all over the United States and Canada were in attendance, and a finer bunch of young people one seldom sees. It would be a sure cure for pessimistic "calamity howlers" to have seen those fine clean-cut young people discussing such topics as, "Christian Citizenship and the Churches," "The Home," "Social Problems," "The Races and Nations," etc.

The young people themselves presided over meetings; led the discussions, and came to their own conclusions. In their discussions of the church, they were of the opinion that narrow denominational prejudices and bigotry were the causes of a lot of inefficient and ineffective work; that no adequate provision had been made for the development of the talents young people have for kingdom service in the average church; that modern youth is interested not in creeds or dogma but in life and living—in the Jesus' way of life. They believed that Jesus' program of love, of unselfish service, of world brotherhood, is still applicable today. Believing in this way, they declared that "War is in all its phases un-christian"; that "Race hatreds are contrary to Jesus' ideals"; that "The church of Christ can do its best work only when all Christian forces cooperate in unifying their work and activities."

Such young people, who thus face up frankly with life and its problems, are going to mean much in the work of the church in the days to come. Would that we had more of their type! And we will have if church leaders do their part in their development.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS

The State Sunday School Convention is meeting next week in two sections, at Hickory, for the western section, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, May 3, 4 and 5; and at New Bern, for the eastern section, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, May 7, 8, and 9.

Every Sunday School in the state should send a delegation to one of these conventions. It will well repay your school to get acquainted with the leaders in the Sunday School work and fill your heart with inspiration that you can put into practice in your local school.

Entertainment will be provided delegates on the "Harvard Plan," that is, room and breakfast will be provided free. Delegates will pay for their other two meals at the cafes and restaurants of the city.

Among the outstanding workers who will take part on the program are: D. W. Sims, of Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Cynthia Pearl Mann, the Young People's Division Superintendent of the United Christian Missionary Society, of St. Louis; Mr. Robert B. Davids, Director of Organization and Promotion of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, Ill.; Miss Mabel Lee Cooper, Field Worker of the Protestant Episcopal Church, New York City; Dr. Owen C. Brown, Editor-in-chief of Sunday School Publications of the Northern Baptist Church, Philadelphia; and Mrs. S. K. Askew, of Atlanta, Ga., the Daily Vacation Bible School specialist of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

HEAR THESE SPECIALISTS AT NEW BERN AND HICKORY.

Albemarle.—As I have been elected as reporter I will try to write. We are still moving on nicely. We are having a very good Sunday school though not as many present as we would love to see. Rev. Mr. Kelly preached two good sermons Sunday. We think he gets better every time we hear him preach.

We have a good Christian Endeavor that meets Sunday evenings at 6:30. We enjoy these meetings very much.

Our Ladies' Aid Society met with Mrs. J. P. Green at Boidin, the business of the meeting being attended to the hostess assisted by Mesdames Efird and Burrelson served a delicious salad course. It was truly a good meeting.

The Woman's Home Mission met Tuesday, April 20th, at the parsonage with Rev. Mrs. Kelly. All the members were very much interested in this new work. We had truly a good meeting. We were glad indeed to receive Mrs. R. L. Leonard as a new member. We hope some more of our good ladies will join with us.

Our hearts were made glad indeed to see such a good report from Shiloh last week. Go ahead, good folks, we know there is much laid up in store for you. Hope you reach your goal of 300 hundred in Sunday school, then I think some of our good folks will wake up and build some much needed Sunday school rooms.

We are looking forward to a much needed revival in the near future, let's all pray that the Lord will send us a man with fire from off the altar and fill our souls to overflowing joy.

Yours in His name. R. L. Leonard.

GETTING UP IN THE MORNING.

"G'by, Ma," called Norton in a stage whisper at the door of his mother's sleeping room, "Nat is outside waiting for me."

"Is Nat going to have breakfast with Phil ip, too?" she asked.

"Yes, and Mother," his sunny face overcasting, "I couldn't find the extra fish-hooks."

"There is some change in the bureau," she said, "you had better take it; you may have a chance to get some."

After he had gone she lay pondering. It was only half-past-five. Usually it was difficult to get Norton up at seven. "Nothing like the prospect of a fishing trip to stimulate the small boys' activity in the early morning," she mused.

How delightfully easy it had been! She had helped him to set the alarm clock the night before, and he had evidently obeyed its first summons. He had bathed and dressed himself without a word to anyone, and when he had come to her room his face had been just glowing with the joy of anticipation.

"I wish he could feel that way about his school," she said to herself. But on further consideration she had to acknowledge that he was fond of his school. It was simply that he had always depended on her, knowing that she would get him up in season. Not at all would he have liked being late. She wondered how it would do to give him the alarm clock and tell him that in the future he must depend upon himself in this matter. But she was afraid he would not get up in time for breakfast, and she was not willing that he should go to school without it even as an experiment. Not being able to think a way out of this difficulty she put the question aside. Nevertheless from time to time, when she was annoyed by Norton's "laziness" in the morning there would come the recollection of his eager animated little face as she had seen it on the morning of the fishing trip. He certainly had felt the inner urge on that occasion and had responded. She felt certain that if she could supply a strong motive for his regular early rising he would respond to it. But there was so little for a boy to do when one lived in a flat.

One morning after she had experienced unusual difficulty in getting Norton up, he said to her, "Ma, if you go to Uncle John's today will you ask him some questions for me about the radio?"

"Yes," she answered with a sudden inspiration, "and I will tell you what he says tomorrow morning at 25 minutes after seven if you are all ready for breakfast."

He grinned.

"Will you call me?" he asked.

"No," she answered, "but you may have the alarm clock."

He was ready at the appointed time.

She kept this up. Each day she told him of something that she had to give, show or tell to him on the following morning. Once it was his new suit, once, only an unusual pencil very often, and he seemed quite as well pleased, it was punctuality itself.

Finally one morning he said to her, "Say, Ma, I have a hunch. Let's have our surprises at night instead of in the morning. We'd have more time." Then, forestalling her objection, "O, you don't need to keep 'em for bait any more, I'll get up. Gee, there's no fun staying in bed half the day. A fellow misses a lot. Sure I'll get up."

And he did.—Ex.

POOR LITTLE EFFIE.

"Mamma, what do you think? There is a little girl in our school who never had a doll in her life! She says she has a rag doll, but not a real one. I feel so sorry for her."

"Do you want to give her one of your dolls, dear?" asked her mamma.

"Why, no, I hadn't thought of that, mamma, but I feel sorry for her. She lives way down by the river in a little bit of a house and I guess her folks are awful poor."

"Perhaps you had better divide your playthings with her," said Mrs. Ross. "You have too many for one little girl, anyway."

"All right, mamma," said Amy, who was a generous little girl. "How can I get them to her?"

"I am going to see if Effie's mamma can do some washing for me," said Mrs. Ross, "and you may go with me. Pick out the doll you want Effie to have, and we'll start at once."

"Poor little Effie!" said Amy as they neared the little house. "Just think of living in that little bit of a house and having no playthings!"

But when they reached the house three rosy little children were digging their pink toes in to a heap of warm, white sand, and having the best time in the world. There were corncob dolls standing solemnly around the sand pile, and each child had a tiny farm with pebbles and shells for animals, and little stick fences to divide the fields. Amy dropped right down to see the wonderful things the children had made, and forgot all about Polly Dolly wrapped up in a newspaper.

"What did Effie think of Polly Dolly?" asked mamma when they started home.

"I didn't give her to Effie, mamma," said Amy. "She has the loveliest plaything in the world, and mine aren't half as nice. She isn't poor at all, but rich."

"All little boys and girls are rich who know how to have good times and be happy," said her mamma. "Never forget that, dearie! All the playthings in the world will not make selfish children happy, while good boys and girls can make their own playthings and have good times all the year round. I am very glad to hear she isn't poor little Effie, but a rich happy little girl."—Helen Richmond.

SOFT STINGERS.

By Etta Cornelia Squier.

Joe Knapp and Bert Nelson lay flat on their stomachs on the little dock at Pleasant Beach and with heads and arms overhanging, anxiously watched their fish lines as they trailed below them in the water. The incoming tide swung them about a bit, and Bert began drawing his up to see if the bait was all right.

"How many hooks have you got on your line?" asked Joe.

"Five," replied Bert; "fishing this way for rock cod on the bottom, you have to have a heavy sinker on first, and then I put the hooks about six inches apart and use five or six of them, because if the bait doesn't attract a cod, why maybe a nice fat perch will take one of the upper hooks. Method in my madness you see."

It was Joe's first visit to the Puget Sound country, and everything thrilled him, even to the wiggly pile-worms he helped Bert get for bait. They had some clam necks cut up, too, and baited their hooks alternately with worm and clam, hoping to thus be sure to catch the fancy of some hungry rock cod or perch. They were just lowering their weighted lines after the bait inspection, when Joe cried out.

"Oh, see the big jellyfish! Hello, jelly, softly, softly, hasn't any backbone, YA-A-H! Look at him swim! I'd like to pick him up and give him a shock."

"Oh, you would, would you?" retorted Bert. "Well, I'll tell you right now that you'd be the one to get the shock; and the queer thing is, you wouldn't believe what was hurting you either."

"Go on! What do you think I am? Think you can make me believe a squshy jellyfish could hurt any one? I may not be from the West, but there are a few things you can't make me swallow."

Bert started to remonstrate and explain, but was cut short by a good pull on his line, and at the same time, Joe had a bite, and jellyfish were forgotten as they each pulled up a good catch. Bert had a rock cod, and Joe a perch. After that, the luck was good, and at dark they went to their camp with enough fine fish for a substantial meal. The next day was very warm, and when the tide was well in, every one from the camp went swimming. Joe was a good swimmer, but not used to such cold water as he found at this beach; however, he did his full bit of splashing about, and then, he saw gracefully undulating near him, a reddish brown jellyfish of great beauty. Propelling itself through the water by alternately expanding and contracting, the star-shaped creature swept near him, trailing its long root-like tentacles several feet behind it. With not a thought of injury, Joe swam directly to it and clutched the slippery thing by the fluffy curtain-like ruffle which hung just below the lobed top. The floating tentacles swung about becoming entangled with Joe's legs, and a sudden yell rent the air. As all the boys were shouting, little attention was paid to his cries; but soon he screamed so piercingly that Bert and Mr. Norton, who had charge of the camp, hurried towards him Bert called:

"What's the matter?"

Joe was thrashing the water with his arms, but making almost no headway. His legs did not seem to be working at all.

"Something's got me," he gasped, and then they reached him and drew him into shallow water and carried him up on the beach. Nothing had him, and yet he was in great pain and the lower part of his body would hardly respond to his frantic efforts to move. The other boys came running, each suggesting something as the solution. Several were sure a devil-fish must have had him in its clutches, but it was Bert who promptly solved the problem.

"Joe," he said, "Joe, listen! You tried to catch one of those big jellyfishes, didn't you?"

Almost unable to speak from the pain, Joe nodded his head.

"Ah," exclaimed Mr. Norton, "so that's the trouble!" Then at his order, one boy was dispatched to the first-aid kit for gauze, another to the cook for a box of common baking soda. Others brought absorbent cotton and basins of warm water, and the work began. First he was bathed in a strong solution of soda water, and later, thoroughly powdered with soda, wrapped with strips of guaze, and put to bed, to be given cooling drinks at stated intervals.

"Now, then," announced Mr. Norton, "we will discuss Joe's enemy. His name, as most folks know it, is just jellyfish; but naturalists know his as Cyanea; a beautiful, but highly poisonous type of jellyfish. He looks so graceful and harmless pulsating through the water that it is no wonder that Joe was tempted to pick him up, but the mischief of it is, that he is remarkably equipped with stinging tentacles. The root-like threads which he trails behind him serve both to get him his food, and to protect him from attack. Those threads are really wonderful; he can make them long or short at his pleasure, and you have all seen that when the creature swims it fairly rakes the water. If small sea creatures or fish come in contact with those tentacles, they receive a shock that paralyzes them for a time, and they sink to the bottom; if Mr. Jellyfish is not very hungry, and goes on his way the stunned fish recovers later.

"You see, Joe got the full benefit of those sweeping threads. Along their entire length are tiny cells, and in those cells are fine coiled threads with plain or barbed points loaded with what is thought to be formic acid. At all events, the sting is much more severe than that of bees, wasps, or spiders. It is a pity to have Joe get his knowledge quite so vigorously applied, but I think he will be none the worse in a few days; and I fancy none of you boys will ever feel inclined to capture Mr. Cyanea or his relatives for pets."

A groan from Joe's bunk answered Mr. Norton, and a weak voice piped,

"Pets! Good gracious, no! And just yesterday I made fun of the thing because it didn't have any backbone. Look how he came back at me. Oh, Well, I'm an awful lot smarter, anyhow."—Selected.

A THIMBLE CAKE PARTY.

By Maud Wilcox Niedermeyer.

Lorena held up a cunning little thimble cake and turned it around slowly. "U-M-" she breathed between her lips, "I bet it's good." Then she opened her mouth, and pop went the cake into it.

She was wiping away some crumbs from her chin when she thought, "I know what I'll do, and I'll have the bestest fun!" She gathered the rest of the thimble cakes into a paper napkin, and tip-toed out of the kitchen.

"Come on, Kate Morency," she called to the kitten, who was rubbing its back against the leg of a chair. "I'm going to have a party." And right then and there a naughty little imp jumped into her heart, for she added, "You may come to my party, but nobody else. It's just for us!"

As she spoke, Lorena peeked between the window curtains at her little sister, Virginia, who was playing in the yard. She jumped back quickly, as she saw Virginia turn and look in her direction. Then she ran upstairs to the playroom, the thimble cakes held tightly in her hands. Kate Morency was close at her heels ready and eager for anything that looked like play.

"I guess I had better lock the door," Lorena confided to the kitten. "Now then, first I'll set the table with these little cups and saucers and plates. Of course they belong to Virginia, but she ought not to mind. Goodness, she's always borrowing my things. I'll put the cakes on this plate. Kate Morency, you may have Virginia's chair. Come, sit up here nice. Oh, who's that knocking at the door?"

"Let me in, please let me in," called a voice from the hallway.

"I guess not, Virginia Day! This is my party, and you can just go outside and play." Lorena stamped her foot as she spoke. Oh, it was a horrid little imp that had crept into her heart, I can tell you!

"But it's my playroom, too. And I want to come in," wailed Virginia.

"I'll open the door, if you'll promise me not to bother or nag," said Lorena.

"Yes, I'll promise anything," replied Virginia, eagerly.

Lorena turned the key, and Virginia, who was pushing the door on the other side, fairly fell into the room head first.

"Look out, clumsy," said Lorena crossly.

But Virginia had spied the cakes on the little table. Her eyes grew round and large with surprise.

"A party, a real party! I just guess I will come. So there!" she cried.

"No you won't. Don't you dare sit there." Lorena jerked her out of the chair. "I thought of this party first, and I guess if I want to have it all by myself I can."

"I want a thimble cake. Stop, you're hurting me. Oh, dear, how can you be so horrid?" Virginia jerked herself away from her sister's grasp.

"You promised not to bother."

"I don't care what I promised," retorted Viriginia. She twisted her arms about Lorena and the next instant they both landed in a heap on the floor.

They rolled about, waving their arms and thumping each other. Then, suddenly, they overturned the Noah's Ark, and Mr. and Mrs Noah, their sons and their sons' wives, and all the animals fell out.

The sisters sat up instantly.

"Gracious! Look what we've done!" exclaimed Lorena.

"Oh, I hope we haven't broken anything," cried Virginia.

"What a silly way for us to act," continued Lorena, a little sheepishly. And the wicked imp jumped out of her heart the minute he saw she was sorry.

"Well—well—I guess it was my fault. I promised not to nag, if you would let me in," said Virginia, slowly.

"But I shouldn't have made you promise anything. I should have invited you to the party," said Lorena, now anxious to make amends. "I've been horribly selfish."

"I guess I have been too."

"Well, let's start over again," cried Lorena, jumping up. "We'll both have a party. Why—why, where are the thimble cakes?" She stood staring at the empty plate on the table.

Virginia bounded up. "Isn't that funny! Look at Kate Morency sitting there as calm as you please, and actually washing her face."

Lorena threw back her head and laughed. "That's where our party has gone," she said.

"The kitten has eaten every one of those cakes while we were quarreling. New weren't we silly?"

"I should say so!" exclaimed Virginia. "Maybe Mary has more in the kitchen. Shall we ask her,"

"Yes, let's."

And the sisters went down stairs, their arms about each other.—Selected.

"THE LITTLE OUTCAST."

"'No home, no home!' said a little girl
At the door of a princely hall
As she tremblingly stood on the polished steps
And leaned on the marble wall;
Her feet were bare and her dress was thin,
And the snow had covered her head,
'Oh! give me a home, she feebly said,
'A home and a bit of bread.'
'My father, alas! I never knew,'
And the tears dimmed her eyes so bright,
'My mother sleeps in a new made grave,
'Tis an orphan that begs to-night.
The night was dark and the snow fell fast
As the rich man shut his door
With a frown on his face as he scornfully said
'No room, no bread for the poor.'
The rich man slept on his velvet couch
And dreamed of his silver and gold,
But the poor little girl on a bed of snow
And murmured, 'So cold! so cold!'
The morning dawned and the little girl
Still lay at the rich man's door,
But her soul had gone to the world above,
Where there's room and bread for the poor."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

A Tribute of Love to Sister Samuel Marion.

In the going out of Sister Marion Pilot Church has lost one of its most consecrated members. It is more than just the going away of one of her members that could only be reckoned in numbers, it was the removing a pillar upon which rests the sure foundation of the church.

She was a woman of strong convictions, she believed something, stood for something and followed her conviction unswervingly. Her going out was like the ending of a perfect day.

Her home was one of generous hospitality. While in her home, she was to us like a mother, her devoted husband like a father and her children like brothers and sisters. A dear old mother in Israel has gone home, and we shall miss her blessings if shall we be privileged to pass that way again. But most of all, she will be missed by her husband and children who cared for her so tenderly when the end drew near.

Truly, it can be said of her:

"Servant of God, well done."

Will some one pause to drop a tear and plant a flower in her grave for us.

W. D. Reed and wife.

In Loving Memory of Mr. and Mrs. M. A Lineberry.

(Written by their daughter, Mrs. Frances (Lineberry) Bowman.)

You are gone, dear father, mother,
There are two vacant chairs,
But some day we hope to greet you;
As we climb the golden stairs.
Your good advice, dear father, mother
(Oh, that I had heeded more)
Will always serve me as a beacon,
To help me gain the other shore.
You were old, dear father, mother
Footsteps uncertain upon the floor.
But I often helped direct them,
As you did mine in days of yore.
I am lonely, dear father, mother,
I miss your presence here below,
But your battles all are over,
And heavenly joys now you know.
As the days, dear father, mother,
Are swiftly passing on their way.
I often stop and wonder, wonder,
If my worthless life will pay?
Oh, so often, dear father, mother,
When the weary day is done.
I remember that you left me,
At the setting of the sun.
A beautiful symbol, dear father, mother,
Of two lives so well spent,
That for both, the angel reaper,
At close of day was sent.
My life's sun, dear father, mother,
Is sinking now oh, very fast,
And I know old Father Time,
With his sword strikes at the last.
You are gone, dear father, mother,
But forgotten never shall be,
And we trust that in God's heaven,
No vacant chairs we shall see.

Teague.

One by one our friends are passing over the river, and we are again called upon to mourn a break in our circle, the going home of a beloved member and an excellent woman, Mrs. W. K. Teague, who succumbed to an illness of five weeks in the early morning of Tuesday, March 15, 1926. On January 30 she suffered a stroke of paralysis, and never left her bed from that time. Her family gave her every care and attention, but their prayers and thoughtful nursing could not prolong the precious life of the mother. Before her marriage she was Miss Emma V. Horney, daughter of the late Geoffrey C. and Keziah Weichel Horney, and was born near Deep Riverchurch Guilford Co., January 7, 1867, where she grew to womanhood. She and her sister, Octavia, now Mrs. A. J. Elliott of High Point, were gifted with beautiful voices, and were noted singers of their day. On February 9, 1886 she was united in marriage to Mr. William K. Teague of High Point, and this proved to be a happy and congenial union. A few months later the young couple moved to their new home on North Main St., where their wedded life of 40 years was passed. The town was only a scattered village at that time, and the new home was then in the suburbs of High Point. To this happy home nine children came, eight of whom grew to maturity: Mrs. W. P. Bodenheimer of High Point, W. Carson Teague of Richmond, Va. Mabel, who died several years ago at age of 14, Homer C., Hunter, Lester, and Lewis E. Teague of High Point, J. Boyd Teague of A. and E. College, Bryan, Tex., and Miss Gertrude Teague, student in High Point College. There are five grand-children. Of a family of six brothers and sisters only one sister, Mrs. O. L. Elliott of High Point, and one brother, Julius O. Horney of Oates, Kansas, survive.

Mrs. Teague had been a member of the First Methodist Protestant church for 25 years. She was of a modest, kind and gentle nature, and was unusually devoted to her home, her husband, and children. Her time, talents, and thought were unselfishly given to them—she spent every effort for their welfare, and every thought and prayer centered in their success. She was a true and consecrated Christian, who lived her religion every day, and a loyal friend and neighbor.

It is the lives of such women as Mrs. W. K. Teague that has made America great. The daily sacrifice and devotion to duty, the inculcation of the old-fashioned virtues of industry, honor, integrity, and right living in her children, the making of a home home to which they will look back in after years with great love, are the real foundations of our civilization, and the bulwarks of our country.

"The truest battle that ever was fought
Shall I tell you where and where?
On the mans of the world you will find it not
But 'twas fought by the mothers of men."

Her contribution to the world is her children, six splendid sons and two fine daughters (who rejoice in, and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praiseth her."

Funeral services were conducted in the home on Friday morning, March 18th, by her pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, and her near neighbors and friends, Rev. Messrs. J. M. Hilliard and Thomas Carrick of the Baptist church. God speed the day when we may have more women of the type of Mrs. Teague, who was a splendid example of the true wife and mother.

"No life can be pure in its purpose and strong in its strife,
And all life not be purer and stronger thereby."

Blanche Armfield Pickens.

Murphy.

Edward L. Murphy, born July the 15, 1884, died April 1, 1926.

He was married December 24, 1903, to Miss Myrtle Hilton. To this union were born seven children, five of whom survive together with his companion. The children are Miss Mabel, Athel, Arlin, Virginia, and Lillie Mae. Ed, as we loved to call him, came from a sturdy family. His father, J. M., and Mrs. Barbary Murphy raised a family of 11 children, five boys and six girls. All grew into manhood and womanhood. Edward, the first of this large family to fall by the sickle of death. He professed religion and joined the M. P. Church at Mt. Pleasant in early manhood. Some years ago he moved to Thomasville, taking his membership with him to the first M. P. Church of that place, yet never losing interest in his home church. A few years ago he with his family reconnected themselves with the church of his youth at old Mt. Pleasant. Always true to the cause, fully devoted to the church and his God. He was liberal to all calls that came to him for the support of the church. When not a resident of this State, he always came back as often as possible. The last regular service he attended he left a good contribution to the support of the gospel.

Brother Ed looked to the future with fond hopes of a long life, but in the prime of vigorous manhood he was stricken with a malady that medical skill could not arrest. All that loving hands could do was to make his last days as comfortable as possible.

He expressed himself as ready to go and be with Jesus, the object of his life. In passing friends of his on the streets this morning some would say, "I loved him." Some, "He was my friend" another, "the best man I ever worked with" and so on. Surely a good man is gone. A noble husband and father has fallen. But we should not grieve as those who have no hopes. In that glorious resurrection we hope to see his face.

His brothers and sisters: Geo. M., Robert L., Herman F., and Joseph R. Murphy. Sisters—Mrs. Geo. W. Hayworth; Mrs. M. Ball, Mrs. Z. B. Morris, Mrs. J. A. Chinan, Mrs. Jack-or Seehrest, Mrs. Felix Mendenhall all of which survive.

For nearly six years I have known Brother Murphy, I have always found him to be a real true friend and always ready to help in any way he could.

As pastor of Mt. Pleasant Church I have lost a good member and true friend, the church has lost a loyal and faithful member home will miss a good father and husband.

Many good things could be said of this noble life, but it is enough to say that he lived a Christian life, and when the death angel came, he said he was ready.

When our time comes, if we can look death in the face and say, I am ready to go, it will be well.

The funeral was conducted by the pastor assisted by Rev. Mr. Palmer and Rev. D. C. Cox of Thomasville.

The body laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Marion.

Joanna Elizabeth Butner Marion, born September 5, 1850, died March 26, 1926.

She was married to Samuel Haywood Marion August 8, 1872. To this union were born 12 children: Mrs. Mary Watson, Mrs. Maggie Wall, Mrs. Lillian Hawks, Mrs. Mattie Hardee, Mrs. Ada Blades, Carrie Marion, Nellie Marion, Eddie, Julian, Sammie and Harmon Marion. There are 27 grand children and one great-grand-child.

She professed faith in Christ in early childhood and lived a consistent Christian life, until she was called home.

Just before crossing over she called her family around her, and repeated the Lord's Prayer, and told them not to grieve for her that she was going to Heaven and wanted them all to meet her. Her last request was for the children to look after their father.

I have known Sister Marion about 28 years and served as her pastor nearly 17 years of this time. Her home was always open to her pastor, and she was every ready to greet him with a smile of welcome, and willing to divide of her worldly means for the comfort of his family.

She will be greatly missed in her church and community, but most of all in her home where she so faithfully administered to all their wants and needs.

They will never find another in this world that can fill the vacancy that has been made by her departure, but we trust that this means of sad providence may serve to draw each member of the family nearer the Master, and some day they may be an undivided family around the great white throne.

Funeral services conducted by the writer assisted by Brother Reed of Haw River Ct. and Brother Williams of the M. E. Church.

The bereaved have our sympathy in this sad hour.

A. L. Hunter.

We the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Mt. Lebanon, M. P. Church of Randleman desire to offer a tribute of love and esteem to the memory of our dear friend and co-worker Mrs. Martha Lineberry.

She was intensely interested in all our plans and anxious that the society perform its full duty. She was a personal friend of each member and we honored her for what she did with faithfulness, and loved her for what she was a quiet, true, oper-hearted Christian.

Our Society will miss her presence and aid during the years of her loyal service; while he would not always be present at our meetings we were sure of her encouragement and prayers.

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call her to her reward,

Therefore be it resolved that this society shall ever hold in loving remembrance her Christ-like spirit of her association with us and her Christian influence among us.

Resolved that we have lost a dear friend and a kind neighbor and her children have lost one of the dearest of mothers. Especially do we extend our sincere sympathy to the children and grand children who have so faithfully ministered to one who has gone to be with the Lord.

Resolved that a copy of the resolutions be sent to the families, one to the Methodist Protestant Herald, one to the Asheboro Courier and a copy placed on the minutes of our society.

Mrs. W. F. Ivey,
Mrs. S. N. Bowman,
Miss May Parsons.

Pleasant Grove.—Our Easter exercise was held the first Sunday at 11:00 o'clock. The children acted their parts well and the offering taken for the Board of Home missions was something over $23.00.

The second quarterly conference will convene Tuesday evening after the fourth Sunday in April at 7:30 o'clock.

We are planning to have an all-day service the second Sunday in May. Mother's Day program in the morning and a Memorial service in the afternoon. We hope to have a large attendance. Brother Reynolds delivered more splendid sermons Sunday and Sunday night he made plain the great necessity of spending more time preparing for our eternal home.

The second Sunday in July is the time set for our special meeting. Rev. W. L. Carson is to be the pulpit help. Pray for the meeting.

Mrs. Ralph J. Kennedy, Reporter.

Concord Church, Saxapahaw Charge.—Since springtime here Concord people have been taking new interest in Sunday school and church work.

Rev. H. L. Isley preached one of his splendid sermons last Sunday afternoon. His topic was, "The Marks of a Christian." It was enjoyed by all present.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. The Junior class has been divided into two classes. This seems to create new interest. The Sunday school is reading large numbers of Bible chapters. The total amount read by the Sunday school last week was 5,378. One number is increasing each Sunday.

Children's Day services will be held at Concord church Sunday night, May 16, at 7:30. The public is cordially invited.

The annual memorial service will be held at Concord on Sunday, May 2. The pastor will preach at the eleven o'clock service and a visiting speaker will speak in the afternoon. Dinner on the ground; everybody come.

Orange Charge.—Things seem to be brightening up here down here since the good weather has opened up.

The Sunday school at Chestnut Ridge was reorganized yesterday afternoon. The following officers were elected: J. T. Hobbs, Supt.; Joe Dodson, Asst. Supt.; Dewitte Pender, Sec. and Treas.

The election will be held for delegate to represent this charge in the next annual conference at the morning appointments at each church in May as follows: Union Grove 1st Sunday; Chestnut Ridge 2nd Sunday; Enland 3rd Sunday; Hebron 4th Sunday.

The candidates for delegate are Bros. M. P. Enland of the Enland Church and W. B. Jones of the Hebron Church.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—We are having larger attendance in our Sunday school and church service.

Bro. Madison preached us a wonderful sermon Sunday. He gave us some strong points. Come on, Bros. Madison and Carroll; we are ready to watch for you.

We had quite an excitement at our church a few Sundays ago! The roof on our church caught fire from the stove flue and was falling in before we discovered it. By the heroic work of the people and by the help of the Lord we saved the church and now we have a complete new cover on and are still in business for the Lord.

We were very sorry to give up our organist Miss Ferrin Ridge, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Ridge. She was married Easter Sunday to Mr. Lorenzo Surratt of Jacksons Hill, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Surratt. Rev. T. H. Hill, a brother of the bride, the pastor of Davidson Charge, performed the ceremony. The prayers and good wishes of their friends and a great number of relatives go with these young people as they launch out on the voyage of life together.

Reporter.

Mr. J. R. Dickens, of Enfield, N. C., one of our most prominent laymen, a member of Elm Grove Charge, Halifax Circuit passed to his eternal reward on the night of April 22.

The death of Mr. Dickens was a great shock to the surrounding country as he was sick only a few days. He died in the Hospital in Richmond, Va., where all that human aid could do was done.

In his demise we mourn the Methodist Protestant Church as well as the local Church at Enfield and the town of Enfield and community has sustained a great loss.

A suitable obituary will appear later.

IF I WERE A GIRL.

If I were a girl, but warned and guided by some knowledge of life that comes with maturer years there are some things done by well intentioned girls in this year of grace, 1924, that I would try to leave undone, and some other things frequently neglected by them that I would try to do.

If I were a girl, I would determine to have, if possible, a sound, healthy, well-knit body. I would not ruin my digestion by eating caramels, nor my nerves by keeping late hours, nor my lungs by breathing bad air and wearing uncomfortable clothing. I would have my regular hours of eating and sleeping, and not be tempted from them oftener than once or twice. I would have my own ideas of what was sensible, economical, and appropriate in dress, and never be tempted from them on any occasion.

If I were a girl, I would learn as soon as possible to do the homely duties which come to a vast majority of women sooner or later. I would learn to make and mend my own clothes, to sweep and dust and iron and cook and do all these things so easily and well that the doing could never be drudgery.

If I were a girl, I would not make a confidential friend of a new acquaintance. I would know just as many pleasant people as it was possible for me to know, but I would try them for a long, long time before I began to share my innermost thoughts and feelings with them.

If I were a girl, I would try very hard to keep my lips clear of slang, hasty words and stupid gossip. I would not seek a reputation for vivacity and "smartness" at the expense of candor and kindness. I would resolve, and resolve with all my might, to say what I meant, and to mean what I said. It pays to be positive.

If I were a girl I would learn some things about the events and the prominent characters and questions of the day. I would learn to place the central figures of history—to know whether Socrates was a Greek or a Roman and how and where Joan of Arc achieved immortality. I would not go through life tortured by an ignorance which may be remedied wherever the English language is known, and a public library is accessible.

If I were a girl I would not spend hours in reading light novels—even harmless ones—when the same time wisely used would give me a life long acquaintance with Shakespeare, Milton, Burns, Scott, Thackeray, Macaulay, Dickens, George Elliot, Hawthorne, Browning, Tennyson, Longfellow, and still others of the masters of literature.

If I were a girl, I would be a Christian and I would not be ashamed to own that I bore the name. If I could not be a wise mature and influential Christian, I would be content to be an honest Christian girl, and wait for time and training to do the rest, I would let my position regarding the dance, the card table and the theater be so clearly defined that I need not go through the agnony of decision every day I live. I would try not to make myself and my religion offensive by cant and "goodishness," but I would try to have it understood which side I was on and why I was there.

To put it briefly, if I were a girl, and if youth could look forward as easily as later life could look backward, I would begin to be in girlhood what I shall wish in old age I had become.

For the achievement it is necessary but to speak and live up to a resolution "I will!"—Selected.

ADVICE TO BOYS.

Boys! Who in all humanity, are so interesting and important? especially those who in the first flush of manhood are pushing towards its open door. To such let me say:

Be Clean. There is not much use to-day for the boy that is careless even in his personal appearance. Admitting his dress should suit his work, yet there are plenty of occasions when his reputation will depend on his appearance. But, boys' clean moral character and clean personal habits are far more important than mere outward garb. There are habits and associations that necessarily defile. The boy that has them is contaminated. He cannot be clean. He is at once at a disadvantage. The business world, the social world, as well as the religious world puts a discount on uncleanness. Foul words, foul habits, foul associations are estimated at their proper unworth. Boys, be every whit clean.

Be Manly. Your proper ambition is to be a man. An unmanly boy has little hope of ever reaching that desired goal. He may attain to the stature, may obtain the outward rights but the real, genuine character will evade him. Trifling attention to duty, a selfish disregard of others, a disrespect for older ones, even rude impoliteness, are just as surely unmanly as the more offensive sins of profanity, fast living and evil habits. Manliness does more than refrain from the wrong; it dares to do the right. In little and great things alike be boldly, habitually manly.

Be Religious. The Bible, the church, the religion they teach, are the greatest factors in the world's progress—the greatest factors in human concerns. Right attention to these allies us with God, and puts us on the side of the infinite. It is the very greatness of this that makes it the part of wisdom to possess. It will be impossible for you to meet in the best way, the duties, the trials, the perplexities of life without this highest help. Greatest success depends upon it. Indeed, nothing else can give eternal success. Yours is an eternal life, and your time of life on earth is a very little part of the endless while. Yet that little part is long enough to enable you to become truly religious, and for this it is chiefly given. You will waste your life if you neglect it. For clean, manly, religious boys there is always a place in the world's business, in the world's honors, in the world's affections, in the world's helpfulness, and in Heaven's home.—Selected.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MAY 9.

Abram and the Kings.

Lesson Text: Gen. 14:13-24.

Golden Text: Rom. 8:37.

The Central Truth: Melchizedec, one of the holiest men that ever lived, and the most prominent type of Jesus Christ, conferred a blessing upon Abraham that has enriched the entire world.

Scriptural Points.

1. The first recorded battle of history was fought upon the plains of Sodom. It was the battle of four kings against five. The king of Sodom and the four confederate with him were decisively defeated by the four invading kings. Much loot and many prisoners were taken, including all the likable women.

2. A number of years before this battle Lot had separated from his uncle Abram. Their possessions of flocks and herds had become so large that they could not dwell together without more or less strife between their respective herdsmen. Abram proposed to Lot that he choose the portion of country he preferred and he himself would take what was left. Lot choose the lowlands of the Jordan valley, because they were well-watered. Lot eventually came to live in Sodom.

3. Lot (and likely his entire family) was taken prisoner along with the rest. Abram heard of the result of the battle and of Lot's capture. He quickly organized an army of rescue. His own trained servants and a few of his neighbors, the Hittites, composed the little army of less than four hundred. He over took the victorous armies at Dan. He divided his forces and made a night attack upon both flanks of the invaders. The enemy were surprised, became fantic-stricken, and fled in disorder. Abram pursued them to Hobah, which was to the left of Damascus. He recovered the loot, prisoners, and the women.

4. Upon his triumphant return the king of Sodom went out to meet Abram and proposed that he keep all the goods that he recovered. By the customs of war the goods, as well as the prisoners, belonged to Abram, the conqueror. Abram refused to take even as much as a shoe-latchet.

5. Abram was also met by Melchizedec, king of Salem, or Jerusalem. He was one of a long line of kings. One of his successors, Adonizedec, is mentioned in the Book of Joshua. Melchizedec was also a priest of the true and living God, and a very holy man. The Psalmist and the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews wrote of him as the most illustrious type of Jesus Christ: "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedec."

6. He blessed Abram, thus showing that he was greater than Abraham, who became the father of the faithful, and the friend of God. For the less is always blessed by the greater.

7. "Blessed be Abram of the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth: and blessed be the Most High God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thine hand." This is a wonderful and farreaching blessing in many respects. He recognized Abram as the servant or property of the Most High God. He declared that God was the rightful and indisputed owner of every person and thing throughout the entire universe.

He invoked upon Abram a blessing of divine grace which has flowered out into world-wide Christianity. He also ascribed to God the glory due unto His name.

Practical Points.

1. Disaster, loss, and ruin often overtake those found in bad company. If Lot had never drifted into Sodom he probably never would have been captured, or subsequently lost his home and loved ones. "Evil communications corrupt good manners," good morals, and good hopes of immortality.

2. War of conquest, of hate, or of petty spite is hell. It is the devil's most gruesome pastime.

3. War of rescue is heaven's most prominent program. Jesus Christ came into the world to seek and save the lost, the fallen, and the dead in trespasses and sins. He outlined the program of redemption in this quotation from Isaiah: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised." Luke 4:18.

4. The war between right and wrong is as old as time, and will continue till time shall be no more. The war against sin is the only way to have and maintain the peace of righteousness.

5. Friendship, true, loyal, and self-sacrificing, is a wealth that cannot be measured in terms of money values. A rich man upon his death bed spoke this to his son: "Son, I have spent my life making money. If I had my life to live over, I would spend it largely in making friends. Take this advice of a father. Take friends."

6. To be a channel of blessing is the supreme privilege of humankind. Melchizedec and Abraham became channels of large blessings that have gone sweeping down the centuries. The Father of mercies has given each of us this double promise: "I will bless thee;....And thou shalt be a blessing." Happy is the man that sows beside all waters, for he shall reap an abundant harvest.

FAITH WORKS.

By Carl W. Hiser.

Faith is the title deed to things unseen,"
The certain hope of things beyond today;
Faith tunnels through the hills to fertile fields
And has no need to take the hills away.
Faith is believing, since the Lord hath said,
And is not founded on a wish or whim;
For false belief creates no certitudes,
But faith believes His word, since knowing Him.
And when He says, "I give," faith gladly takes,,
And when He aught withholds, faith does not fear,
For having Him, faith has no other need,
And does not grope to feel if He is near.

USING OUR MISTAKES.

Note: This article is reprinted from "King's Treasuries," and is one of sixty-one talks included in, "Boy-Talks" by Phillip E. Howard (The Sunday School Times Company. 1031 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, $1.50 postpaid.)

He was a tennis player who was very much in earnest, a boy who wanted to be at his best, and didn't intend to play a poor game if he could help it. He asked an older man who understood the game thoroughly to watch him while he played, and to criticize his methods.

After the game was over, the boy came to the side of the court for his friend's judgment.

"Do you really want to know what I think of your game?" asked the friend.

"Indeed I do," said the boy. "Tell me exactly what you think, and tell me why it is that I do not win more games."

"Well," said his friend, "if you really want to know, I'll tell you. I think your mistakes trouble you far too much. Every time you send a ball into the net, or put one outside the lines, you examine your racket, shake your head, and seem very much concerned about it. Now, that kind of thing hinders your playing. You should play straight ahead learning what you can from your mistakes, yet not grieving over them, or making any fuss about them. If you keep thinking about your mistakes, you can't give your attention to winning."

Another boy, who had the feeling that he was not good at anything, gave up wood-working in his school course, thinking that he had no special gift in that direction. One day, shortly after the opening of the school, he met the manual-training teacher, who said to him greatly to the boy's surprise: "I am sorry to hear that you are not going to take wood-working this year. You were so good at it I had hoped that you would go on."

"Why," said the boy, "I had no idea I was good at it. I thought I did pretty poor work."

"Yes, and that is just your trouble!" exclaimed his teacher. "It is only once in a great while that I find a boy who does as good work as you do. But when you make the least mistake, you are so troubled over it that you get into the habit of thinking you can't do good work at all. I hope you will go on with the course."

That was a tremendously encouraging surprise to the boy who had thought his work was so poor, and he at once planned to take the course. If he had allowed his mistake to be the deciding factor, and if his teacher had failed to point out the good side of his work, he might have missed a fine bit of mind and hand training.

While we should not let our mistakes lead us to give up in hopelessness, neither should we think of them so lightly that we shall become indifferent and careless. The best thing we can do with a mistake is to use it as a stone in the building of character. Mistakes make wonderfully fine material for this, if they are used as instructors and not as discouragers.

One of the most accurate and painstaking men that the writer ever knew said this: "Let no one of us congratulate himself on being free from blundering; for every one of us is a blunderer. Let no one of us be overdespondent when he finds that he has blundered; for no one of us is alone in his blundering. Let no one of us think lightly of his blundering or fail to watch against his liability to blunder."

The next time you're tempted to drag into all your work, or into any recreation, the mistake that you have made, just let it be a point in a lesson learned, and cheerily go on to the next thing. If God should remember all our mistakes against us, and remind us of them every little while, what an awful climb through the dark this life would be.—Selected.

A CHALLENGE TO THE GIRLS OF TODAY

Every girl who reads this paper knows the story of the Pilgrims and of the first Thanksgiving Day. It is a splendid thing to read the story at least once a year—if not oftener—for it is more thrilling than any romance.

There were young girls in that group who gathered around the first Thanksgiving Day feast—and, compared with what the average girl of to-day has and enjoys, those Puritan maidens had little for which to rejoice and give thanks. Yet we find them praising God.

Think of what those girls endured. First of all, they took great risks in the journey over the seas. They did not come in airships, nor on a gigantic palatial steamer—they came in the rudest kind of a sailboat. They were weeks upon the stormy seas. They had no assurance that they would ever see land.

For the first few months here they endured hardships, met dangers and faced suffering of which you and I can scarcely dream. How much easier it would have been to have complained of the old home they had left, to have become bitter over their privations, to have grieved over the new graves that had been made in the new land. Yet we find them thanking God. Over and above all the hardships and privations and suffering was gratitude because they were free to worship God—free to be true to their highest aspirations and deepest convictions.

When as girls of today we compare our lot with those girls who endured so much, it makes us ask ourselves: "Of what stuff are we made?" Have we the courage, the strength of character, the high ideals which actuated these girls? How much are we willing to sacrifice, to suffer, to endure, for our ideals? Do we hold to them at all costs?

As we study and think anew of those brave girls among that band of Pilgrims, shall we not look deep down into our own hearts and honestly ask ourselves if we are willing to sacrifice the cheap, the vulgar, and the low are we ready to give up selfish desires, in order to have integrity of character, in order to be true to our high ideals, to be loyal to our convictions? And when we think of the wonderful privileges afforded the average girl of today to worship and work for God, compared with the girls of those Pilgrim days.

surely we have deep cause for thanksgiving—the kind of thanksgiving that should express itself in lives of generous, self-forgetful service.

The Pilgrim girls challenge the girls of today to sacrifice, to endurance, to courage in order to be true to the highest and best that we know. How shall we answer the challenge girls?—Selected.

DIED.

Thomas.

Stacy Susanna Thomas, born November 12 1903, died April 1, 1926. Funeral services was held on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock April 4th by her pastor in Pleasant Hill Church of which she was a faithful member from early life until death. How she was held in esteem was testified to by an over flowing attendance at the funeral service, and the floral decoration. The casket was covered over with beautiful wreaths of flowers.

Stacy leaves to mourn their loss a young husband, a father and mother, six sisters and two brothers and a host of relatives and friends. We preach our funerals while we live Stacy had only a little over 22 years in which to preach here, but we feel that Stacy has preached here in such a good way, that her Christian influence will speak in the lives of them who knew her. For those who knew her most loved her best.

May the bereaved be comforted by the Spirit of him who once trod the paths of earth and mourned with them that mourned.

D. I. Garner.

Bevil.

On April 14, 1926, Pro. Madison Green Bevil, was called to his reward at the ripe old age of 77 years and 13 days.

Pro. Bevil was one of the best members of Fair Grove Church a pioneer church of Methodist Protestant faith, having united with the Church in 1872, to which he remained a faithful member until the end came.

Pro. Bevil impressed us as being a man of quiet unassuming disposition and was greatly loved by his many friends. In 1880, he was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Brookbank who preceded him to her reward about four months ago. He was conscious of the approaching end and said to his pastor: "I'm going to see Rachel." In a short while, with the gentleness of a child, he fell into death's slumber. He leaves three children to mourn their loss: one boy and two girls, who cared for him very tenderly until the end came.

The following lines express the grief felt by his children:

Farewell we say,
To our best friend
Who has stood by us to the end.

W. D. Reed.

—Joseph Paul, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Caudle of the Level Cross Community, died Sunday night and was buried Monday, P. M. at Level Cross. Burial Services were in charge of Rev. W. H. Neese, the pastor of the church.

OBEDIENCE.

Under the simple statement, "The Lord said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country," here are probably hidden years of questioning and meditation. God's revelation of Himself to Abram in all probability did not take the determinate form or articulate command with us having passed through many preliminary stages of surmise and doubt and mental conflict. But once assured that God is calling him, Abram responds quickly and resolutely. The revelation has come to a mind in which it will not be lost.—Marcus Dods.

IEF HISTORICAL SKETCH OF GRACE CHURCH.

race Methodist Protestant Church had its nning in March, 1891, when a Sunday ool was organized in Newell's Hall, on eboro Street. The first church building, on t Lee Street, was begun under the direc- of Rev. J. R. Ball. The first pastor assign- o the church was Rev. W. F. Ohrum, of yland, who served only six months before vas called to his reward. Upon the opening ne new church, Rev. T. J. Ogburn, of Hen- on, preached the initial sermon.

wenty-two persons were enrolled in this organization as charter members. Of e, ten are still active members of the con- ation.

he church on Lee Street was used until , 1907, when it was sold to the Moravian rch. The Grace Church congregation then ed into its building on Washington and ene Streets, which had been purchased n the First Baptist Church. It had been ad been thoroughly renovated; a pipe or- oughly renovated; a pipe organ had been alled, and other improvements made.

he following pastors have faithfully serv- he church during the thirty-five years of istory: Rev. W. F. Ohrum, Rev. J. S. Wil s, J. F. McCulloch, D. D.; Rev. T. M nson, D. D.; Rev. R. M. Andrews, D. D.; . T. J. Ogburn, Rev. C. W. Bates and Rev. C. Stubbins, Rev. S. K. Spahr, D. D., of Pittsburgh Conference, came to the church astor in January, 1924. Under his patient far-visioned leadership, the church was to erect the new building. At the last An- l Conference, Rev. Lawrence Little was gned to Grace Church as Associate Pastor. ooking toward the building of larger and e adequate quarters for worship and ser- than was to be had in the Greene Street perty, a lot was purchased on the corner aston and Edgeworth Streets in April, 1922, during the pastorate of Rev. R. C. Stubbins. The old property was sold in the Spring of 1924. The need was felt for the organization of a Methodist Protestant Church in South Greensboro; the old building was torn down and the materials used in the erection of Calvary Church. This new organization ha had a rapid and substantial growth under the leadership of Rev. L. W. Gerringer, pastor.

For the past two years, Grace Church congregation has held its worship services in a hut erected on the back of the lot intended for the new building, and the Sunday School has been conducted in a large residence building also on the back of this lot.

The Building Committee, consisting of J. Norman Wills, Chairman; Mrs. J. M. Millikan, Mrs. E. S. Wills, Dr. A. H. Johnson, W. S. Jones, B. W. Terrell, R. C. Millikan, T. D. Sharpe, and B. T. Baynes, have worked most faithfully and untiringly and have pushed to completion the efforts of a splendid corps of architects and workmen.

Hobart Upjohn, of New York, was engaged as architect, with whom was associated Harry Simonds, as supervising architect. The general contract was let to J. L. Crouse; the plumbing contract to A. S. Pettit, Inc.; and the heating to Dermott Heating Company. The pews and pulpit furniture were especially designed for Grace Church by Mr. Upjohn and were furnished and installed by A. H. Davenport and Company, of New York.

Ground was first broken for the new building in May last year, and the corner stone was laid on July 31, 1925. Thus, in less than a year, there has been completed a beautiful and commodious new temple of which all of us are proud. The cost of the building, lot, etc., was approximately as follows: Lot, $26,000; Hut, $5,100; Church and furnishings $114,000; Organ, $9,000. Some needed equipment for the department of religious education will bring the total to $155,000.

For the past several months we have been trying to carry on our work with crowded quarters and inadequate equipment. May we not now plan for a great advance program in our new place of worship and service? Of course, the church building is only one of the small factors in a church program. The most important factors are the leadership of God and His Holy Spirit, a genuine sense of fellowship with God in His world-wide program for the salvation of men, and a dedication of life to that program.

Let us pray for a fresh anointing with the power of the Holy Spirit and for the direction of the Master in the new opportunities that lie out ahead of us. Let us enter our new church building with our hearts attune with God's. Let us plan to do greater things, trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, than ever we dared before.

The action which resulted in the establishment of a Methodist Protestant Church in Greensboro had its origin at the Conference held in Henderson, November, 1888, when Rev. J. R. Ball was appointed to take care of the work. The building was begun in the Spring of 1891. On the first Sunday in April of that year a Sunday School was organized in "Newell's Hall," Asheboro Street, South Greensboro, and later the church was organized, there being twenty-two charter members. The basement of the building was occupied on Sunday, November 8, 1891. The auditorium was completed and opened for services in September, 1892, and the building, situated on Lee Street, was used until May, 1907, when we moved to the church on Greene and Washington Streets, which we had purchased from the Baptist congregation. We moved from this building two years ago, occupying the hut which had been erected on this lot.

Work on this church was begun a year ago The congregation authorized the appointment of a building committee, which consisted of the following, in addition to the chairman:

Dr. A. H. Johnson, Mrs. E. S. Wills, B. W. Terrell, T. D. Sharpe, J. M. Millikan, Mrs. J. M. Millkan, W. S. Jones, B. T. Baynes.

Later Mr. J. M. Millikan resigned, and Mr R. C. Millikan was elected to take his place. Mr. J. M. Millikan accepting the important post of Chairman of the Finance Committee.

After investigating thoroughly different styles of architecture, and the claims of different architects, as well as inspecting the work of a number, the committee voted unanimously to retain Mr. Hobart Upjohn as architect, with Mr. Harry Simmonds as his local associate, the construction to be under the direct supervision of Mr. Simmonds. The work of these gentlemen speaks for itself; but it may not be amiss to say that Mr. Upjohn has shown a personal interest in the building, which we have greatly appreciated, and Mr Simmonds has given us constant and effective supervision, and has rendered invaluable service in this way.

The general contract was let to Mr. J. L Crouse for the sum of $91,941, this being $3,412.23 less than the next lowest bid, and $47,-.59 less than the highest bid. The plumbing was awarded to A. S. Pettit, Incorporated, for $1,665, and the heating to Dermott Heating Company for $3,250. The fixtures were furnished by R. H. Milton Electric Company who also had the contract, under the general

KEEP ON POURING IN.

During a dry period in summer the people in an Eastern city were sprinkling their lawns, using the water from the hydrants without stint. No order had gone out from city hall that any restrictions were to be placed on the use of water. How could the supply hold out? The situation might have been puzzling to anyone who did not know that the water was coming from a great river into which had been pouring the streams of a vast territory for many rainy months.

There had to be a pouring-in process before there could be a drawing-out process. The same is true of the mind as a writer on the psychology of leadership points out. He says that if you want poetry to come out, you must pour in poetry. If you want oratory to come out of your subconscious self, you must pour in oratory. If you want pictures to emerge, then you must pour in pictures. Nothing can come out of the mind that has not been put into it.

This rule applies with equal force in the sphere of character development. You cannot pull out what you do not put in. Many a young man and young woman have said in effect: "Oh, yes, I know I ought to do better. But, you know, I am having such a good time that it seems so stupid to bother with church and that sort of thing. Some day I shall be good."

Take the matter of "going to heaven," a phrase which to some carries the entire content of the religious life. The desire to go to heaven is well-nigh universal. An old Negro had a saying, "Everybody is going to heaven." When asked how that could be, he would reply, "Well, you see, everybody is going to heaven, but not everybody is going to get in."

The mere desire to attain a high degree of moral perfection and its rewards is not enough The desire needs something to support it. First of all, the whole life must be surrendered to Jesus Christ. This is a matter of free choice and requires an act of the will. Every man who comes in touch with Jesus is tested. All must make a decision in regard to Him. When we take Him as the supreme Master of our lives, then we begin a new and definite stage of the pouring-in process that will result in the highest type of character.

The acceptance of Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord is an act, but the attainment of Christian character is a continuing process. We must be constantly pouring in. The weak-water hope to be good some day cannot be realized unless something is being done day by day that will make the dream come true.

If you have wondered at the goodness that has radiated from an ideal of yours, and have marveled at the superb character of the Apostle Paul, wistfully wishing that somehow you might come as near to perfection, the way is open. You can do as they did. They did not reach the heights by a single bound, but climbed the ladder round by round. Only by a gradual process could they attain fullness of character.

John Bunyan, author of "The Pilgrim's Progress," confessed that he had been the most profane person in Bedford. George Whitefield the great evangelist, when a boy, sold beer over the counter. Both found in Christ a Saviour from sin, and then, by earnest striving and patient effort, they reached the point where they could give forth to the world their wonderful messages. What they sowed in character, they could also reap in Christian influence and service.—Forward.

TOBACCO AND CAR SHORTAGE.

Will H. Brown.

The Tobacco Leaf is authority for the statement that the tobacco industry requires 650,000,000 tons of coal annually, and the shipping by freight of 2,250,000 tons of tobacco. The reader should get the significance of this in view of the fact that one reason given for the high cost of coal is the lack of shipping facilities to move it to different parts of the country at the time it is needed. The cars used in shipping 650,000,000 tons of coal to tobacco factories, and in moving 2,250,000 tons of tobacco by freight, would mean a great deal to the poor people of the country if the coal were shipped to those actually needing it, and if the large amount of car space devoted to hauling tobacco were used in shipping fruits and vegetable to the consumers in the large cities. The car shortage during the fruit season of 1922 need not have occurred had the cars been used for hauling necessities, instead of luxuries in the form of poison, wrapped up in the various tobacco products.

Another thing that is working a hardship on the poor people is the high cost of lumber preventing many from building and owning their own homes. The causes for lumber-yard fires for the years 1919 and 1920 are headed by the carelessness of smokers, causing a loss of $1,045,992. The same thing caused more fire losses in general in the United States for the year 1921 than any other one thing. In other words, smokers caused a loss of $25,992,033, leading the nearest competitor by more than $5,000,000. Tobacco and its ancessories are doing the people of America great harm.

COLUMBUS.

How would you like to become so famous that several towns would fight for the honor of saying that you were born in them? No less than 16 towns have claimed to be the birth-place of Christopher Columbus. However, it seems safe to assume that Genoa, a beautiful Italian city, may claim that distinction, since Columbus in his writings refers to Genoa as the city of his birth. The exact date of that event cannot be determined but it has been placed at about 1436. Dominico Columbus, the father of Christopher, was a wool comber, following the trade that had supported the family through several generations. The boy Christopher grew up with the companship of his two younger brothers Bartholomew and Diego and a sister of whom nothing is known. Indeed, very little is known of the boyhood of Christopher. Although the family was a respectable one, they had little money and no special influence, and were it not for their distinguished son they would very likely never have been heard of. Christopher Columbus did not enjoy the advantages of a great education. No doubt, he learned the common studies of his time and in addition, Latin, higher mathematics and astronomy. But the boy had a natural curiosity and took every means available to acquaint himself with those things in which he was most interested, so he made it his business to know something of nautical science and cosmography, in which subjects he was a lifelong student and acquired all the learning of the age in which he lived.

When Christopher Columbus was 14 years of age he began his voyages on the Mediterranean Sea, and by the time he was a grown man he was a hardy and skilled mariner. He had experiences of all kinds while at sea, for, while many of his voyages were merely in the interest of commerce, he at other times engaged in naval struggles between the warring Italian states. His son, Fernando, tells the story that on one occasion he commanded a vessel which came to grips with a large Venetian galley. The two ships grappled and the crews fought hand to hand for many hours, many being slain, when at last both vessels caught fire. Most of those remaining perished, but Columbus saved his life by leaping to the sea and swimming to the shore.

Columbus was a man of striking appearance. He was tall and muscular, courtly in manner and affable in conversation. He was rough in character and passionate when irritated. His eyes were light gray, his cheeks were ruddy as those of a boy, while his hair was waving and as white as snow. His one great belief as you all know, was that he could reach India by sailing westward. He was not the first man to believe this, but he was the first who was willing to risk all that he had in order to demonstrate his theory, and for this he deserves to be placed among the greatest characters of history. You all know the story of his struggles and rebuffs when trying to convince a stubborn people of his theories and how he finally overcame all obstacles and made the greatest maritime voyage of all time. You know how he crossed the great Atlantic and landed on what he believed to be the coast of India and how after all he had done he ended a glorious life in poverty and want. A writer has said of Columbus: "His discovery was a blunder, his blunder was a new world, and the new world, and the new world is his monument."—Selected.

A STEADY FLOW.

It is very gratifying to report that the orders for the Children's Day supplies are reaching us by every mail, and already at this date, April 29th, the number is in excess of any former year—over three hundred.

It is far better for your order to be sent to me early, and the supplies secured, for it gives the school ample time for necessary rehearsal of the program, and for holding a fine and profitable service.

I regret the delay in forwarding the pageant which, as heretofore, forms a part of the service, but causes which have been unavoidable, as sickness in the home of the writer and of herself, and other matters, prevented it being printed earlier.

Copies will in a few days be mailed to those who have sent in their orders, and copies will be added to the other supplies for subsequent orders.

Very favorable comment has been made on the new illustrated collection envelopes which carry a picture of a Japanese woman with parasol, and a Chinaman, and an Indian about to pluck a lily from the pond before which he kneels.

It is earnestly hoped that a sufficient number of the envelopes will be ordered by each Sunday school so that the scholars may canvass the entire church to have all the members and friends share in the raising of the largest possible offering.

Let it be remembered that the two beautifully embroidered Japanese banners which were secured last year from Japan, and were awarded to the two schools which met the conditions, are to be awarded again this year under the same conditions—one to the Sunday school making the largest offering for foreign missions, and the other one to the Sunday school making the largest offering in proportion to membership.

It was a difficult matter last year to ascertain the facts necessary to make the awards properly, because so few Sunday schools reported their membership when they sent their offering to the treasurer of their conference for a number of them to whom I wrote could give me no information as to the details needed. Please bear in mind, brother superintendent, and be sure to see that the membership of your school is given to your conference treasurer when the offering is sent.

Then, please, PLEASE see that the Children's Day offering is forwarded without delay to the conference treasurer, because every dollar that can possibly be secured is needed by the Union Board now.

At the Maryland Conference held April 7-13, over Two Thousand Dollars was paid in cash which had been raised at the Children's Day service way last year, and while waiting for the money to come in the Board was paying interest on borrowed money.

The Conference passed an order that the Children's Day offering must be sent by the Sunday schools to the conference treasurer within thirty days after the service is held It is sincerely hoped that not only the Maryland Conference schools, but those of all our conferences will follow that plan, as it will be a great help to the Board in meeting its regular monthly obligations.

Readers of our church papers have learned of the Board's most urgent need of funds and as the Children's Day Service has been one of the main sources of its income, and as the offering raised on that day will count on the local church's budget, there is every reason for the most earnest efforts being put forth to make the offering the greatest in the history of the church. Your help and that of your Sunday school is needed.

Save in very exceptional cases, every Sunday school can hold a service, for the supplies are sent free, the program can be arranged to suit local requirements, and it will help the schools, and the Board for all to share in the good work. Send me your order at once at Berwyn, Md. Fred C. Klein.

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

To write up a ship like the Republic, though it is neither the fastest nor the largest, is somewhat of a task. Length, 615 feet, 3 inches beam, 68 feet; 2950 tons displacement; 18,400 tons register; 7,500 horsepower; 52 life boats with a capacity for 50 persons each, and seven decks.

I may have omitted something that needs description but you will see by this and the following something of her size.

Stocking the Ship.

Then to think of what it takes to stock a vessel like this for a fifty day cruise we can hardly take in what it means. Here is the cargo as best I could ascertain, besides all the linens, toilet articles, moving picture department, with a variety for each night, but without a bar, or rather a closed one for this company of passengers do not demand that.

Here is the grocery list:

294 barrels Graham flour, 60 bags of tea, 4 tons of coffee, 3,000 tons fresh water, 15,000 lbs., fish, 12,000 Shell Clams, 40,000 lbs. beef. 10,000 lbs. mutton, 10,000 lbs. pork, 100,000 smoked meat, 2,000 lbs., lard, 4,000 cans smoked meat, 30,000 lbs. sausage, 11,000 lbs. butter, 11,000 dozen eggs, 11,000 gallons ice cream, 100,000 lbs., potatoes, 4 car loads, lemons, oranges, grape fruit, besides a bountiful supply of cabbage, brussels sprouts, string beans, corn, beets, carrots, turnips, cauliflower, lettuce, celery, asparagus, grapes, apples and bananas with all kinds of canned and dried fruits, 200 barrels white flour, 420 barrels rye flour. Then syrups, mostly maple, honey, 20,000 lbs., sugar, both granulated and domino. Poultry, 70,000 lbs., including ducks goslings, turkey, chicken, quail, venison and reindeer steak, oysters and lobsters.

Many Mouths to Feed

I wish I had the exact figures for all these items. This may seem like a joke but when you think of feeding 843 souls, as they are called three times each day you will realize and most of us have ravenous appetites, and a crew including officers of 321. I have just looked over three menu cards, breakfast, luncheon and dinner, and I find there are 71 dishes on the first, 70 on the second, 57 on third. So with this great variety cooked in the best of style you can readily see why one regrets to be sea sick. Of course that includes the tea, coffee, milk, postum and cocoa served at each meal. In addition to these three full ments, tea and cake is served at 10:30 A. M. and 3 P. M. They seem to strive to keep you from getting hungry. These teas come in the Social Hall. All these extras are without extra pay. But as much as I like to eat, these extra meals do not appeal to me, for I am never hungry at that time of day. It is a great wonder to me that some do not die from over eating and many do.

In Touch With World.

A radio office is sending and receiving messages to all parts of the world and posting boards on the ship. A printing office is here also with a daily paper. A library has all kinds of books and the latest magazines. On the decks different games are played, also a well equipped gymnasium where one may keep physically fit. There is also a dance hall for those who rather exercise their heels than their heads. An ice plant, steam laundry, drug store physician and surgeon, an operating room, a hospital with about fifty beds, nurses etc. In fact this ship is a little world within itself.

This I hope will prove interesting to those who have never been on a great ocean liner. It has been a revelation to me.

I failed to tell you that there were 21,000 barrels of fuel oil put on to start with and water and oil has been taken on at other ports. I have spoken in former letters about our religious service which are held regularly.

There is some form of entertainment going on all the time.

About seventy of our number left us at Rome and Nice for optional tours in Europe. these included Dr. and Mrs. Clark. Mr. Boring has done everything in his power to make the trip pleasant for us. The ship's crew from Captain Randall are kind and courteous. Above all a kind Providence has given us fine weather for which we thank him. We have only had two rains when we were off the ship and that did not bother us as we were embarking at the time and only fell upon us for a few minutes. After getting my mind free from the whirl and confusion that has naturally come in seeing things so rapidly. I hope to use some of my Sunday evenings telling my people some of my experiences.

In Conclusion.

If you have followed me in these disconnected accounts I thank you, also the Editor for giving the space. One week from today I am hoping to land in New York, and from there rush home to be in my regular services March 15. How glad I am we are on the last lap of the journey, a little over two thousand miles yet to sail and then we land on the soil of the best country in the world. By the time this is read I will have been home some days.

S. S. Republic, March 5, 1926.

P. S. Glad to tell you that I have not been sick, never missed a meal.

THE BRITISH IN INDIA.

(H. G. Wells in A Year of Prophesying.)

We British have not sufficient natural moral and intellectual superiority to the Indial peoples, we have not a sufficiently organized educational system nor a sufficient surplus of highly educated men, to justify our continued usurpation of India's right to think out and work out its own role in the confederation of mankind. And we are different from these duskey peoples; we do not work with them easily; we hamper them and they hamper us intolerably. But released from our entanglement with a population six or seven times as numerous as our own, our entanglement with this great mix-up of temperamentally alien peoples, the British and associated English-speaking communities scattered round the earth, extending their educational organizations and developing their still crude intellectual and political possibilities, may play a reasonable and yet leading part in the great synthesis which will ultimately give the world enduring peace. "Disentangle from India. draw near to America, come out of and keep out of entantes and alliances upon the continent of Europe;" these are the broad lines upon which I conceive the British system may best serve itself and mankind.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Saturday and Sunday, April 25, we spent at Pine Ridge, Ky., where I preached the dedicatory sermon for the new building there, which is a combination church and school building, and assisted Dr. T. R. Woodford in dedicating same. Then in the afternoon I had the pleasure of preaching the commencement sermon to the school and graduating class. It was a great pleasure to be priviledged to visit this school once more. I was there about ten years ago, before Dr. Woodford took charge and the improvements and progress have been simply wnderful. One can but stand in amazement at the amount of work, and the class of work that is being done. I plan to write of this work more at length when I have the time for it.

Meeting of Young People's Board.

On Thursday, April 29th, I was in Baltimore, Md. Sitting all day with the Board of Young People's Work in its annual meeting struggling with the problem confronting the Board because of the resignation of the Executive Secretary, Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D. D. The work of the Board is in fine shape and is moving successfully on, and it is a very great regret to the entire denomination that Dr. Sexsmith resigned; but with the condition of his wife's health he could not do otherwise.

The Board cannot yet make full announcement of its action in electing a successor to Dr. Sexsmith, suffice it to say, the work will be taken care of and will go right along.

Commencement at Stokesdale.

Sunday morning, May 2nd, I had the pleasure of preaching the commencement sermon to a large audience at the closing of the Stokesdale school.

It was a beautiful May day, and the large auditorum was filled with people who listened eagerly to the preaching of the Word. It was pleasant to preach to them.

Grace Church Opening.

Because of the engagement to preach the above commencement sermon, it was not my privilege to be with our people at Grace church all day last Sunday, as I would like to have done. They had a Great Day. They have a beautiful new temple, which will be a source of joy and pride and comfort to them for many years to come.

It was a great joy to be with them on Sunday afternoon, and bear to them my personal congratulations and greetings, the greetings of the North Carolina Conference, and also the greetings of the entire Methodist Protestant Church. The auditorium is one of the most beautiful church auditoriums I have ever seen. We rejoice with these dear people that they are now housed in such comfortable, and in such beautiful quarters.

Children's Day.

If you workers have not already received sample copies of Children's Day programs send at once to Rev. F. C. Klein, D. D., Berwyn, Md., and he will gladly mail you supplies, or better still, why not just order the supplies and begin soon to prepare for Children's Day? Surely all Sunday schools will hold the Children's Day services, and they should be held during May or June.

Asheville.—Our church here and our denomination have lost a loyal member and friend in the passing of Mrs. M. D. Council, formerly of Easton, Md. After more than a year of suffering, the end came last week in Miami, Fla.

Mrs. Council came to Asheville about twenty years ago for the climate, her niece, Mrs. Hardee—then Miss Maude Sheedan—being ill. Her nephew, Mr. George Sheehan accompanied them. This trio of devoted relatives lived in Asheville and made many friends. Mrs. Council was a faithful member of our church [illegible] since her arrival from Maryland.

Pastor Bates and Rev. O. H. Emrich, pastor of the Central and Collegiate Chapel, exchanged pulpits last Sunday. Brother Bates and Mrs. Bates and Mrs. Gales and Mrs. Ward and Miss Estelle Swain attended the Missionary conference in Thomasville two weeks ago.

Last Sunday was the 21st anniversary of the Asheville Church organization. While the pastorate began December 1, 1904, the list of charter members was completed and officers were eleced the first Sunday in May 1905. Though the membership is not large, the church here has blessed many people. Even before a building was erected the Sunday school averaged around 130, the cradle roll numbered more than 300, the home department about 100. Our pastor and his assiciates are eager to launch out on a self maintenance basis and to win souls and to increase the membership both from among resident Methodist Protestants and from the unchurched.

Reidsville.—While we have not been reporting for quite a while the work has been going on very successfully. Our pastor, Dr. J. D. Williams, preached two helpful and inspiring sermons last Sunday. Our Sunday school continues to grow in number and in interest, under the able leadership of Mr. J. H. Allen.

Our choir deserves special praise for their faithfulness. They have been rendering some special music at each service for some time and are always ready to help out in any program any organization of the church wishes to give.

We feel that our senior C. E. Society will have a very bright future; for our president,

Mr. C. R. Reed, is much interested in the work and has the whole-hearted support of every member of the society.

Last Sunday evening our C. E. Meeting was led by Mr. G. M. Reed. We were very glad to have with us at this time Mr. D. F. Mayberry, Supt. J. H. Fleming, and Mrs. J. M. Weatherly, who brought us splendid messages on the following subjects:

"A Lawyer's chances for usefulness." "Why I chose to be a teacher." And "The High Calling of a Nurse."

We hope that our society may be privileged to have these people with us again as we feel that their messages were very helpful.

The Intermediate C. E. Society is growing rapidly and doing splendid work with Mr. C J. Roberts as their leader. This society decided to enter the recent oratorical contest put on by the All-South C. E. convention for Intermediate societies and now they are rejoicing over the fact that Miss Nellie Mitchell, one of their most loyal members, won in this state. This society, not yet one year old, is to be corgratulated upon being the possessor of the N. C. State representative in the Intermediate Oratorical Contest to be held in Daytona Beach, Fla. in July. We are looking forward to Nellie's coming home from Florida with the medal that is to be awarded to the state that wins in the final contest.

The church realizing the importance of this society voted unanimously to pay Miss Mitchell's expenses to High Point convention and also to Daytona Beach.

The W. F. M. and W. H. M. Societies met with Mrs. M. T. Smith Monday afternoon Mrs. J. H. Allen, delegate to Branch meeting, gave a splendid report of the meeting held at Thomasville. Mrs. Smith, at the close of the business meeting, served delicious refreshments.

The church voted unanimously to continue to pay its part toward the salary of Miss Beach, the Bible teacher in the city schools. This is a great work that the various churches of the town undertook two years ago and the results have been so satisfactory that we do not feel that we could do without this feature of the educational program of our schools.

Fountain Place.—According to arrangements and announcements made by the President of the conference my relation as pastor of the Gibsonville church terminated with the close of May. Mrs. Hendry and I are one in our feeling on enjoyment that was ours while serving this church. I believe that it is the feeling generally that the church there is going forward in the work. They have definitely committed themselves to the building of a parsonage, on the lot given by Mr. Davidson for the purpose. Some effort has been made towards raising the necessary money for its construction, and it has developed sufficiently as to make all feel hopeful. The major portion of the necessary money for the painting of the church is in hand, and that job will be completed this summer, we are sure. All departments of the work are more or less alive and under proper leadership this will in days to come be one of our larger churches.

Rev. J. D. Hardy has succeeded me there, and the people are already much in love with Mr. and Mrs. Hardy. I predict for them a fruitful season in the work.

Yesterday here at Fountain Place we had a good day. The Sunday school was well attended, so were the morning and evening services This is fast becoming an efficient Sunday school and will soon take its rightful place in the community. We have not got our hands well enough on the work to tell you much about what we are going to do, other than to say that all claims are to be paid. and all the various organizations of the church are facing up with a twenty- five percent increase, numerically and financially. With more time and a better oppotunity to serve, such as we now have under this full-time arrangements we are quite confident of a larger and better Fountain-Place.

Friday night of this week there will be a young people's banquet in the social hall of the Sunday school building. We have a fine group of young people and they are bound to grow.

Wednesday of this week, 7:30, will hold our second quarterly conference.

When in Burlington stop in at Fountain-Place and get refreshed with its inspiration.

C. H. Hendry.

Haw River Charge.—Our 2nd quarterly conference was held at Midway church May 1st. All churches were represented. Reports better than last year.

Bros. Pink Gordon and Dr. W. A. Johnson were nominated delegates to conference.

One of the startling things in connection with the quarterly conference was the challenge, unprovoked, of two members of the conference to give one thousand dollars to build a community church—fine.

The tension runs higher for a new church at Midway. Our young, progressive Dr Moore is one of the ardent supporters of the endeavor. With the loyal support of other good men and the ambitious good women, it look like something will take definite shape in the very near future.

Mizpah church is still growing. Their new church with its Sunday school rooms is inadequate, and they need additional rooms.

The children were delighted last Sunday when they were given a nice treat as a reward for their faithfulness with the suggestion that they had better attend every Sunday, since something else might happen any day.

W. D. Reed.

Henderson.—The second quarterly conference met Wednesday evening. April 21. Mr J. P. Hicks and Mr. W. B. Hight were nominated for delegates for the annual conference

The interest continues to grow in the Christian Endeavor Societies. The intermediates average twenty-three and seniors seventeen at their Sunday night prayer meeting.

Our Sunday school has set 300 as a goal by Mother's Day. As we have already passed the 200 mark, we expect to make it.

A committee has been appointed to get up the Children's Day exercises.

We hope to have a Daily Vacation Bible School sometime during the summer, either have one of our own or join the Christian denomination in theirs.

The Senior Philathea Class feel quite proud of the fact they won third place, for the best average class, at the Baraca-Philathea Convention in Salisbury, April 23-25.

The delegates from the Missionary Societies came back full of enthusiam too. They had splendid reports at the regular meeting.

We still have quite a number sick ones. All the parsonage folks have been sick with colds. All are up at this writing except little Miss Thelma, who is still right sick.

Mothers' Day will be observed next Sunday morning. Rev. R. A. Hunter will preach an appropriate sermon for the occasion. At the evening service the choir will give the cantata. "The Sermon on the Mount."

We have lost another member by death, Mr Stephen Satterwhite. Rev. Mr. Hunter conducted the funeral services at the home of Mr. S. T. Satterwhite, Sunday 5 P. M. We sympathize with the loved ones left behind

BURBANK AND DAVY.

Men and women who give thought to the more vital things of life find many interesting points in the contrast between the life and death of Luther Burbank as a professed infidel, and the life and death of John Davey Father of Tree Surgery, as an avowed Christian.

Here were two great naturalists working with the instruments of nature, and yet one believed that death is the end of life and the other that death is but a door to a new existence. It is difficult to realize that such dissimilar views could be held by men whose work, in the main, was along the same general lines.

Luther Burbank worked with plants and vegetables, which come into life in the spring and pass away in the fall. The falling leaf to him, was not a prophecy of spring but only a token of death. Was he influenced in his mental attitude by the brevity of the life with which he dealt?

John Davey with trees, whose lives extend through many generations of mankind and ofttimes through many centuries. Perhaps he was subtly affected by the grandeur and the longevity of his friends, the trees.

John Davey saw the tree as a living thing —as the handiwork of God. Natural objects, the stately tree, the roadside flower, the green carpet of grass—all were to him manifestations of Divine Providence.

His soul thrilled to the beauty of the tree He wanted to save it from wanton destruction and preserve it for generations to come as a living friend and benefactor of man And yet he was not unmindful of its economic value, nor of its profound effect on climate, water supply and soil fertility.

Luther Burbank, twice married, left no offspring to perpetuate his name; John Davey left five children—four sons and one daughter—to carry on his life's work and maintain his life's traditions.

Burbank spent his closing days in proclaiming a doctrine of atheism; John Davey to expounding the Christian religion. His book "A Prayer-Made Man," written after he was 70, is a striking testimonial of the efficacy of prayer.

Each man was a naturalist; each knew privation and hardship in youth; each had a vigorous struggle to succeed; each lived nearly 80 years. Strange, indeed, that as death drew near one should turn his face toward the setting sun, and the other toward the rising sun.

HE WAS A CHRISTIAN MAN.

When the Kent, Ohio, Grange held a memorial meeting in honor of the memory of John Davey, Father of Tree Surgery, it is noteworthy that the speakers, all men of national repute, emphasized John Davey's spiritual qualities—his Christianity—more than the material and scientific achievements that have made his name famous.

The meeting was held in the same church in which his funeral services were observed. Standing in front of the altar where his body lay three years ago, the speakers gave homage to the memory of the quiet, unostentatious man who sought in life neither fame nor wealth but who so loved trees that his entire life was a quest for means of protecting them.

The speakers were Lester S. Ivins, Director of Agriculture at the Kent State Normal College, L. J. Taber, Master of the National Grange, and J. Horace McFarland, former president of the American Civic Association.

Professor Ivins who is John Davey's biographer and co-author of the book "Fifty Famous Farmers" told why John Davey's life story was told in his book. "Our purpose," he said, "was to give recognition for the first time in this country's history, to the men who were leaders in peace time, constructive industry, rather than the leaders of war time, destructive industry."

Mr. Taber said that John Davey, as a pioneer in Tree Surgery, was a leader, teaching men a better understanding of the character and life around them as well as an understanding of the responsibility of the individual toward his country and his God. "Let the membership of this Grange," was his concluding word, "not only those, but our membership everywhere, emulate the fine qualities and high character of this American whose love for his family and his country was second only to his love for his God; a man whose life typified a fine conception of the relationship that men should hold to the trees which, next to man, constitute the most perfect creations of God."

Pointing out that the world of books was closed to John Davey until he was a grown man, Mr. McFarland said it was of the utmost significance that it was opened to him through the Bible door, and that this door continued open all through his long life for himself and through himself, for others.

"To John Davey" he said, "the world about him was a fascinating study. His love for nature made the sky and the stars, the clouds and the storm, the sunrise and the sunset, all manifestations of God's providence. Particularly birds and plants touched his quickened heart. I believe that they knew him as well as he knew them.

"John Davey stood all the time for clean, sound, working Christianity. He stood for family life and for the home. His regard for his parents was notable and he used all his life the motto his father gave him—'Do it Right or Not at All.'"

The ideals of the father are being carried on by a son, Martin L. Davey, president of The Davey Tree Expert Company, which his father founded, and Congressman from the Fourteenth Ohio District.

The Davey Company is the only one of its kind in the world organized on a national scale. Its mission is to preserve individual trees by arboreal medicine and surgery.

ARE YOU MAD?

Richard Braunstein.

According to Max Nordau, if we can take his book "Degeneration" as a serious work every great man and every famous woman, ability and genius, expressed in works of art, music, literature, sculpture, and other results of creative work, give evidence of madness. "Certainly people of great talent are always a little queer." Readers of Ouida will recognize the quotation. Or if men and women of talent are not always mad, they come out of a mad ancestry.

Bernard Shaw in "The Sanity of Art" refutes the statements of Max Nordau and his school: "Why should I not ask Herr Nordau himself to step before the looking-glass and tell us frankly whether, even in the ranks of 'psychiatrists' and lunacy doctors, he can pick out a crank more hopelessly obsessed with one idea than himself? If you want an example of echolalia, can you find a more shocking one than this gentleman who, when you say 'mania,' immediately begins to gabble Egomania Graphomania, Megalomania, Onomatomania, Pyromania. Kleptomania, Dipsomania, Erotomania, Arithmomania, Oniomania, and is started off by the termination 'phobia' with a string of Agoraphobia, Claustrophobia, Rupophobia, Iophobia, Nosophobia, Aichmophobia Belenophobia, Cremnophobia, and Trichophobia?....He is so utterly mad on the subject of degeneration that he finds the symptoms of it in the loftiest geniuses as plainly as in the lowest jail-birds, the exceptions being himself Lombroso, Krafft-Ebing, Dr. Maudsley, Goethe, Shakespeare, and Beethoven."

All of which is exceedingly interesting. But who is right? As an indoor sport, may we suggest the study of history? Surely history has an eloquence concerning, if not the madness certainly the eccentricities of genius. Perhaps we are all eccentric but have not the advantages of fame to emphasize our peculiar twists and divers furbelows of character. Of this we may be sure: the profession of the press-agent knows its history. When Horace Greeley suggested to the bidders for success and fame, "Go West, young man," he might have said, "Get a press-agent, young man." But what has history to give us on the theme? This:

Victor Hugo offering to settle a war by fighting a duel. William Morris displaying outbursts of anger. Schopenhauer refusing to pay a debt because his name is misspelled on the bill. Swift characterized as "the mad parson." Trees walking like men before Sir Joshua Reynolds. Luther imagining he sees the devil and hurling his ink-pot at the vision of his satanic majesty. Schumann pursued by turning tables and dying in an asylum after trying to end life by drowning. Pope seeing an arm come out of the wall. Richelieu thinking he is a horse. Goethe taking a walk for the purpose of meeting himself. Cowper having hallucinations, and carrying poison about his person but unable to bring himself to the task of self-infliction. Charles Lamb not only having a sister with a sick mind but himself spending six weeks in a hospital and afterward writing, "I am got somewhat rational now and do not bite." It was Lamb who wrote "The Sanity of Pure Genius," perhaps giving the world his manuscript as a matter of self-defense.

Mark Twain wrote in bed. More than one author has made notes on his cuffs. Some have been known to get their inspiration from cups—coffee and otherwise. Washington Irving was morbid by spells and genial other times, but could not create unless his surroundings were exactly to his liking. Maturin wrote with a wafer pasted on his forehead—a signal to his family that he was writing and therefore not to be disturbed as they entered the room.

The list is almost endless. The material enriches many a treatise. Space writers glory in the facts. Headline writers play upon them. Thus: "Famous Singer in Temperamental Mood Proves Mad Theory of Genius," "Candidate for Political Honors Accused by Enemies of Possessing Ancestry of Lunacy," "International Savant Psychoanalyzes Rivals in Love Plot," "Noted Psychiatrist Declares Gunman a Submicrocephalic and Oxycephalic." We are told what ails us in such terms as complex, fixation, introversion, extraversion, divagations, and what-not, ad infinitum, ad nauseam.

Perhaps the romantic school may yet give us difinitions and interpretations for trouser legs that measure twenty inches across the bottom, raincoats adorned with hieroglyphics, worn by a hatless male of the species, accompanied by a person of the opposite sex robed in a fur coat, sheer silk stockings, and suede slippers with three-inch heels—in the dead of winter with the thermometer far below freezing. Perhaps it is genius expectant, potential, rampant, emerging from classic halls of modern learning, intent, with an intent that only madnessean understand, upon revolutionizing industry with a new kind of clothespin or reducing the cost of transportation with a motorized wheelbarrow, thus enabling every citizen, be he rich or poor, to own his on taxicab. A case in point, but only a hint of what is yet to be, the suggestion of a great invention as yet in its infancy, the crude attempt at a solution of a great problem, was the news film depicting a pair of lovers going to their nuptials on a pushcart drawn by the wedding party in a high state of jubilation or twelve-mile-limit contraband—the captions omitted to state which. Our guess would be a mixture of both, each contributing to the other.

If we are to believe Mr. Havelock Ellis, we shall have to bid farewell to our favorite myths and traditions—a price every lover of progress should be willing to pay. Mr. Ellis tells us that out of 1030 cases of genius investigated, he could find only thirteen who were downright insane. His was the refutation of "writers who rake together cases of insane men of genius without considering what proportion they bear to sane men of genius nor what relation their insanity bears to their genius."

Mad or otherwise, we revel in the creative art that teaches, helps, and inspires. We shall continue to listen to symphonies, and so long as the purse holds out we shall purchase books. Health and strength permitting, we shall journey to shrines and centers of genius. Viewing what has been accomplished and recalling what has been thought and written, all the lore of brush and chisel, musical score and pencil, pen and instrument, those tools with which wisdom works and knowledge makes itself known, the best we can say is: "If this be madness, rave on, O world."—Zion's Herald.

A SIGNIFICANT LETTER.

(A Communication Appearing in the Paris Edition of The New York Herald of April 6).

Rome, March 30, 1926.

To The Editor of The New York Herald:

We have all been interested in what we read in your esteemed paper, especially about prohibition. What his eminence, Cardinal O'Connell, is reported to have said is most illuminating, especially as it came so soon after his audience of his holiness the Pope.

The following might also interesting to some of your readers:

Before prohibition we had in New York City nearly 13,000 licensed saloons. The sisters of charities, who do so much good for the unfortunate, in pairs visited each of those saloons every afternoon and evening of pay-days when the men were in the saloons drinking. They came, one pair after another, asking alms. The more intoxicated the men were, the more they gave. I have seen them get as much as five dollars in one visit. The sisters collected at the lowest estimate five dollars a week from each one of the 13,000 saloons. When the saloons were closed, some of the Catholic charities had to be abandoned and the church had to raise an endowment fund of a million and a half or two millions to support the charities retained.

His eminence advocates light wine and beer. This would open the doors to the shipping of all kind of liquors into the United States, and would necessitate the providing a place where men could drink. That is the saloon again. Why should it not be so? Should not the sisters of charities, who do so much to help the hungry and poorly clothed mothers and children, be able to collect more funds and with less labor? S. H.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.
Edited by Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro, N. C.

THE NORTH CAROLINA BRANCH MEETING.

(Written by request of the joint Executive Committee.)

It was my first time to attend the sessions of the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies. And if all of them are like this one, I hope to attend many more. I have never seen such co-operation and harmony shown in the gathering of two bodies in my life. I have attended various meetings, but never attended two meetings at the same time. These good women of our beloved church have taught me a lesson which I feel would have been good for all our people to have gotten.

The first session was held on Tuesday morning in the library of Community (Methodist Protestant) Church. Mrs. W. C. Hammer and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown presided jointly. Two presiding officers each wielding the gavel equal to a speaker of congress was a new sight. But as said above, not one thing came to mar the progress of the meeting. This morning session was an executive meeting, and the problems confronting the ladies at that time were handled with ease and grace found in no other meeting save one of this kind. The discussion of the Board meeting in May was brought up and the ladies decided to take care of all who came to attend the meeting. This is the first time the Board meeting has been held in High Point College—as Mrs. Milikan always says—"Our College"—and the ladies of North Carolina are preparing to do the job up brown.

The afternoon session convened at 2:30 o' clock, with Mrs. J. M. Millikan presiding, and she can preside as well as Brother Millikan can sell land and write insurance. Mrs. Hammer, president of the Home Missionary Societies of N. C., made the opening address for the convention. Mrs. Hammer gave some interesting facts in her address, which I believe should be printed in our M. P. Herald. I feel that our people all over the state should get the benefit of this address. Following this Mrs Geo. R. Brown spoke on the work of the Foreign Society. Both these ladies handled their subject well, and the delegates were inspired by their attitude towards their work which could not but be seen thru their speeches.

This paper would be incomplete if we failed to tell of the wonderfully inspiring addresses on the Women of the Bible, delivered by that father in Israel, Rev. T. M. Johnson. D. D. It seemed that Dr. Johnson was at his best. The first address had to do with The Model Sister of the Bible—Miriam.

Dr. Johnson took his hearers to the banks of the Nile, and there we saw the drama of the hiding, finding, and turning Moses over to a nurse of the Hebrew women. Dr. Johnson said that Moses' sister had a great part to play, in the making of the great Lawgiver and she played it well.

At the evening service on Tuesday Dr Johnson discussed, "Ruth—the Model Wife." It was with much feeling that he told of her beauty. For instance, 'The roses of her cheeks were not brought from the corner drug store." "The curls in her hair were those the Maker put there," and other sentences like these.

The children from the Home came over and gave a program following Dr. Johnson's address. This was said by many to have been the best they have rendered in this city.

In the address on the Bible Women on Wednesday morning, the speaker struck a keynote that found a responsive cord in the hearts of the mothers present. "Hannah, the Model Mother" was the subject, and in the beginning Dr. Johnson said, "Hannah had a real man for a husband, for he had long ago established a family altar in the home.—Neglect of public prayer results in the loss of the form of prayer while the neglect of private prayer results in the loss of the spirit of prayer." "Unlike some women, Hannah did not want a poodle dog, a tom cat, or a canary bird, but her great heart cried out to God for a son, upon whom she could lavish her motherly elections." For thirty minutes Dr. Johnson counseled the mothers to pray, and to put a beautiful and lasting impression upon the congregation, at the close of this address, Mrs R. M. Andrews, of High Point, sang as only a mother could sing "The Beautiful Garden of Prayer," ending the half hour of devotion with what seemed to be the realization that if we come to this Garden, Jesus will receive and answer.

Wednesday afternoon was taken up mostly with the election of officers and the reports of committees and officers. The officers elected in the Foreign Society for the ensuing year, are—President, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown High Point; First vice-president, Mrs. J Norman Wills, Greensboro; Second vice-president, Mrs. W. C. Hammer, of Asheboro; Third vice-president, Mrs. J. E. Pritchard Asheboro; Recording Secretary, Mrs. J. W Boyles, Thomasville; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell, High Point; Secretary of Young People's Work, Miss Mary Young, High Point College; Secretary Native Workers, Mrs. M. H. Wavnick, Greensboro; Secretary Life, Memorial and Perpetual Members, Mrs. S. R. Harris, Henderson; Secretary Thank-Offering Miss Velna McCulloch, Greensboro; Secretary Tithers and Intercessors Dr. Joy Harris Glasgock, Greensboro, N. C.; Secretary Education, Mrs. C. L. Whitaker. High Point College; State Editor, Miss Esther Ross, Asheboro; Record Agent, Mrs. A. G Dixon, Greensboro; Districts Chairman, Mrs. W. T. Hanner, Julian. These are capable of leading the Foreign Societies to a great year's work, if those of us who make up the rank and file, will but do our part.

Rev. Lawrence Little, known by every one in the conference as "Lawrence," came on Wednesday evening with a soul stirring message on "The Stewardship of Missions." Bro Little held his audience for more than a half-hour with his rapid fire discussion of this important message. He said that if we are Christians, we are already missionaries, and if we did not believe in missions, we were not in accord with the Bible. He took up the different phases of stewardship, and developed th so that no one present could go away ignor of his or her duty. Brother Little said, ' is not enough to be tithers, be more, put you got on the altar and let God use it you." He said "Stingy tithers" were go but those who gave their all were far bett At the close of his address the Commun Dramatic Club gave a pageant, "The Liv Christ."

Thursday was Home Missions Day. M Hammer took the Chair, and directed the fairs from start to close. At this time Johnson came with his address on Dorcas, Community Mother. He laid upon the hea of those Home Missionary workers the ne of the unfortunate children in every comm ity. He said, "There are many fatherless motherless children, who are not orphans it was these whom Dorcas helped." Then was he told how the Home Missionary So ties could help the children in their commu ties. The address left such an impression to cause Mrs. Hammer and others to sugg that the societies take this idea under cons eration.

Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk was introduced spoke at some length on the work of the Cl dren's Home, of which he is superintende Rev. Homer Casto, superintendent of Bet Tubercular Home, Weaverville, came with message and information concerning his wo during the afternoon session.

Dr. Johnson came with the last of his m sages on Thursday afternoon using as his s ject, "The Obscure, Yet Necessary Women the Church." The writer was out of the ro at the time, and cannot give an outline of address.

After Brother Casto had spoken, Branch went into the election of officers. (I printed last week in Herald.)

I feel that every minister in the confere shou'd have attended the Branch meeting, because it met in Thomasville, but because would have made him catch a clearer vis of the work being done by the Woman's cieties in the church. It was an inspiration sit by and see, hear, and learn of this gr work. I am like a young lady of my chu who attended the Summer Conference for first time. "I'm glad I am a Methodist Prot tant for I've learned of some of the gr things my church is doing." I long for the to come when every church within the bou of our conference will have both the Fore and Home Missionary societies in their org ization. The forward steps taken in the rec Branch Meeting, will eventually lead to t end, and the sooner these ideals are realiz the sooner will our church begin to grow she has never grown before.

NOTICE FIRST DISTRICT.

District Rally will be at Spring Church, Spring Church Charge, 5th Saturday and Sunday in May. We expect the best attendance we have ever had. All who desire entertainment Saturday night, be sure and send your name to Rev. A. D. Shelton, Pleasant Hill, N. C., as soon as possible. That's a great place to go and we are planning a great Rally!

R. C. Stubbins.

Pleasant Hill, Why Not.—Since Spring has come Pleasant Hill people have been taking more interest in Sunday school and church work.

Rev. D. I. Garner preached one of his splendid sermons Sunday morning. His sermon was enjoyed by all present.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely, and we have a right good attendance every Sunday.

There will be a memorial service at Pleasant Hill the first Sunday in June; everybody come.

We regret the loss of Sister Thomas who departed this life on April 1, 1926.

She will be greatly missed in her church and community, but most of all in her home. But our Heavenly Father knoweth best. When the trump of God shall sound, may we meet by the golden strand. Reporter.

Randleman Charge.—At Worthville our special meeting embraced the second Sunday in April and continued eight days. Brother Millaway was our helper and did excellent work throughout. He delivered his messages with his usual vigor and earnestness.

The weather during the entire period was rainy and cold and in a measure unfavorable. The church was greatly benefited and has taken on added life. One new member, an adult, was received at the close.

On the fourth Sunday in April a birthday dinner was served at Mr. Arthur Ferree's, Worthville, in honor of Mrs. Daniel Ferree, she being seventy-one. A goodly number of relatives and friends were present. All seemed to enjoy the occasion. Wm. H. Neese.

Philadelphia, Greensville Ct.—Yesterday a right large crowd filled the church to hear Rev. H. L. Powell preach one of his most excellent sermons. He brought out some strong truths and gave us new thought for the week.

We are glad to report that our Sunday school has been moving along nicely for the last month. Our superintendent had been kept away from us quite a while, but glad to have him with us again.

We are now working on a Children's Day program and we're planning to have it soon.

May our church go forward in all lines for good. Reporter.

England is tied up with a great labor strike. It is hoped that all will see the folly of it and soon come to an agreement.

—Time and tide wait—for whom?

A BRIGHT BIRD.

He was an English starling, and was owned by a barber. A starling can be taught to speak, and speak well, too. This one had been taught to answer certain questions, so that a dialogue like this could be carried on:

"Who are you?"

"I am Joe."

"Where are you from?"

"From Pimlico."

"Who is your master?"

"The barber."

"What brought you here?"

"Bad company."

One day the starling escaped from his cage and flew away to enjoy his liberty. The barber was in despair. Joe was the life of the shop: many a customer came, attracted by the tricks of the bird, and the barber saw his receipts falling off. Then, too, he loved the bird which had proved so apt a pupil. But all efforts to find the stray bird were in vain.

Meantime Joe had been enjoying life on his own account. A few days passed very pleasantly, and then, alas! he fell into the snare of the fowler, literally.

A few miles from the barber's home lived a man who made the stuffing of birds his business. Some of the birds he stuffed and sold; others, again, were sold to hotels near by, to be served up in delicate tidbits to fastidious guests. Much to his surprise, Joe found himself one day in the fowler's net, in company with a large number of birds as frightened as himself. The fowler began drawing out the birds, one after another, and wringing their necks. Joe saw that his time was coming, and something must be done. It was clear that the fowler would not ask questions, so Joe piped out: "I'm Joe!"

"Hey! What's that?" cried the fowler.

"I'm Joe," repeated the bird.

"You are?" said the astonished fowler "What brings you here?"

"Bad company," said Joe promptly.

It is needless to say that Joe's neck was not wrung, and that he was soon restored to his rejoicing master, the barber.—Sunday School Advocate.

THE STORY OF GENERAL LEE AND HIS DOG, "SPEC."

The following story, taken from a recent issue of The Confederate Veteran, published at Nashville, Tenn., will be of interest to the many boys and girls:

Robert E. Lee, Jr., who compiled his father's letters in book form, and from which the foregoing quotations were taken, intermingled valuable biographic sketches. In one he relates that while the family lived in Baltimore, "I was greatly struck one day by hearing two ladies who were visiting us saying: 'Everybody and everything—his family, his friends, his horse, and his dog—loves Colonel Lee.'"

The dog referred to was a black-and-tan terrier named "Spec," very bright and intelligent and really a member of the family, whose mother, "Dart," General Lee rescued at an earlier date floating in the waters of the "Narrows," while he was crossing from Fort Hamilton to Staten Island. He carried her home, where she was welcomed by his children and made much of. Dart was a good ratter and with the assistance of a Maltese cat, also a member of the family, soon drove away or destroyed the numerous colony of rats which infested the place.

Spec was the joy of the children, and when it was proposed to trim his ears and tail, the condition in which Dart was when rescued, General Lee prevented it. Spec was a welcome companion of the family wherever they went, even accompanying them to church. Because of the disturbance among the little ones at church, General Lee determined he should not accompany the family to that place. So the next Sunday morning Spec was taken to a second-story front room and the door closed. As the widow was open, he contented himself by looking from that for a while. Presently his patience overcame his judgment and he jumped to the ground, landed safely, joined the family just as they reached the church, and went in with them as usual. He was allowed to go to church afterwards whenever he wished. Captain Lee says: "My father was very fond of Spec and loved to talk to him and about him as if he were really one of us. In a letter to my mother, January 18, 1846, when she and her children were on a visit to Arlington, he thus speaks of him: 'I am very solitary, and my only company is my dog and cats. But Spec has become so jealous that he will hardly let me look at the cats. He seems to be afraid that I am going off from him and never lets me stir without him. Lies down in the office from eight to four without moving, and turns himself before the fire as the side from it becomes cold. I catch him sometimes sitting up looking at me so intently that I am for a moment startled!'"

In a letter written from Mexico a year later, December 25, 1846, to Mrs. Lee, he said:

"Won't you cure poor Spec? Cheer him up—take him to walk with you, and tell the children to cheer him up?"

In another letter from Mexico to his eldest son, just after the capture of Vera Cruz, he sent this message to Spec:

"Tell him I wish he was here with me. He would have been of great service in telling me when I was coming upon the Mexicans. When I was reconnoitering around Vera Cruz, their dogs frequently told me by barking when I was approaching them too nearly."

When General Lee returned to Arlington from Mexico, Spec was the first to recognize him, and the extravagance of his demonstrations of delight left no doubt that he knew at once his kind master and loving friend, though during General Lee's residence in Baltimore Spec disappeared and the family never knew his fate.—Alabama Advocate.

WHEN ERNEST DISOBEYED.

"Here, children," said mother early one morning, "I want you to go to the store over at Hillville and buy the groceries I have marked on the slip of paper. And be sure to get back by eleven o'clock," she added with a mysterious twinkle in her eyes.

"Yes, mother," said Violet. "May Ernest go too?" You know the big snake we saw in the woods the last time we went to the store? We may need brother along to protect us."

"Yes, Ernest can go with you, only be sure to get back by eleven o'clock."

It was about a mile to the grocery store. Arriving there, the children purchased the groceries mother wished and also some candy with the dime she had given them. Then they started for home.

"I wonder if we will have time to pick some raspberries," suggested Violet. "I saw such nice ones on our way over."

"Sure, loads of time," replied Ernest with the air of one who knew a great deal. So they stepped into the wood, and all picked berries until they had several quarts.

As they were again starting for home John Groves happened by with his big dog. He was whistling and seemed to be having a great time.

"Come on, Erny," he said, "let's go down to the creek and have a swim."

"No," replied Ernest. "We must get home by eleven, and we won't have time."

"Sure we will. My dad's coming down this way with the team, and he said he would stop at the creek and get me at 10:30. You just come along and you'll have plenty of time."

"No, brother, don't go," pleaded Violet.

Ernest was undecided. He looked first at John and then at his sister. Then he said: "You walk slowly home, Violet, and I'll go with John, have a swim, and then catch up with you before you reach home."

"O, but Erny," pleaded Violet, "you know mother said we are to be back by eleven o'clock, and besides, I might meet a snake!"

"There are no snakes at this time of the year," said John Groves scornfully. "Come on, Erny."

Ernest followed with hesitation. He felt rather bad and that he should not have left his sister. But the creek looked so cool and inviting.

The boys had a fine swim. They were splashing and having a splendid time when suddenly Ernest realized that a great length of time had passed since he left his sister. "O, John, it surely must be after 10:30 by now!" he cried.

"O, I don't think so! Father will most likely be here any minute now."

But father did not come.

The boys presently started to walk home. Meeting a man on the road, they inquired what time it was.

"Ten minutes to eleven," he replied.

When Ernest reached home it was just noon. His mother prepared lunch and they sat down. Mother was very quiet. Ernest wished she would talk.

After lunch mother asked him to go into the garden and finish weeding.

But he could stand the silence no longer. "Where is Violet, mother?" he asked.

"She has gone to town with your Uncle

James. They are going to the Zoo this afternoon. Uncle James said he had to leave promptly at eleven o'clock, but that if you and Violet were ready he would come and take you in his new automobile. That was why I wanted you to be sure to be back by eleven."

"But, mother, why didn't you tell me?" asked Ernest.

"Your uncle wanted to surprise you, so I promised not to tell you until he drove up in his car."

Ernest wended his way slowly and thoughtfully into the garden, where he set about the task of weeding.

The Zoo! that was the one place Ernest had been wanting to visit for a long, long time.

But Ernest was a good boy, and the thing that caused a little ache in his heart was that he had disobeyed his mother.

As he weeded the garden beds a little bird sat up in a tree nearby and seemed to say with his merry voice: "Al-ways o-bey! Al-ways o-bey!"

Ernest looked up at the little bird, and then with a smile he said aloud: "All right, birdie, I guess it's the best thing to do."—Primary Weekly.

HER CHANCE.

Susie Potter Hesse.

It was her favorite spot—the low seat under the old elm behind the house. There she had taken her baby naps; had cuddled her family of dolls; had struggled with fractions and cube root and conjugations. All the while, the great elm held its protecting arms about her.

Now tonight, beneath the dear old tree, she was waiting for some one to come. She would like to say "good-by" here where she felt so safe. In three short months he would be back again for the holidays. Had he not reminded her of this? But as she sat waiting in the shadows, she felt that he would never come back—to her. It would not be his fault. But from tonight their paths would lead in opposite directions.

"Earl doesn't see it yet, but he will gradually come to understand," she whispered to herself.

Her thoughts reviewed the happy summer they had spent together. Their friendship of high school days had ripened into something very precious of late.. She had listened to Earl's plans for a college education and counseled with him about his choice of a career. He needed her level head and balanced judgment, he told her. Now all was settled. Tomorrow he was to take the first turn in the road. It would lead him directly into a life beyond her reach.

There had been moments of temptation for her, when she had almost argued against college. He surely might find some good business opening—then there would be no widening gulf between them. But her better self had won. Earl was meant for leadership. He had dedicated his life to the work of the Lord. He must have the training. She must make the sacrifice bigger than he would ever guess. Some day he would awake to find that she could not stand shoulder to shoulder with him as now she stood.

No, college was out of the question for her. Father had worked hard, but wages in the big factory were small, making impossible the laying aside of any funds for such a luxury as a college education. He had done exceedingly well to give his two daughters a high school course. Now the boys should receive equal privileges. It would mean that the close figuring and cramping economy would continue for another period of years. From now on, she must care for herself. She must forget her loved books: her dreams and ambitions. She must forget Earl. His wife must be some one with training equivalent to his. It was for her not to prevent it.

Then he came with long strides up the path. Their hour together was full of eager talk about the new life just ahead for him. Miriam entered into it heartily, bravely crushing her own hurt. Earl sobered a moment at the last "good-by" with an earnest look into her eyes—a silent promise for the future. Then he was gone, and with his going there fell upon the girl the full bitterness of her lot. Suddenly it all seemed so unfair. There was so much money everywhere in evidence. Many of her girl friends had plenty for an education they did not want. For the first time people appeared to her selfish and full of greed. The world, which up to now in her young life had looked friendly and kind, seemed all at once to have grown cold and heartless.

In her inexperience she did not know that there are warm hearts everywhere; that generosity and love hover in all places; that many are always making search for opportunity to lift burdens and brighten paths. She knew only, after she had gone to her room, how long the night hours grew; how her head ached, how sore her heart became.

Then after the night of darkness the dawn broke. Youth and courage asserted themselves. With resolution to make the most and the best of life as it came to her, she stepped into a new day.

There had been nothing to tell Miriam in the gloom of the preceding evening that at that very hour, a woman rich in purse was keeping vigil also, trying to think a certain matter through to a satisfying conclusion. Harriet Rogers was a widow and childless. An imposing monument marked the quiet beds of husband and daughter. There, all she had known of happiness lay buried. The amount of money in her possession was far in excess of her wants. For years she had spent it listlessly and selfishly. It was the only occupation she had.

Then one day something spoke to her. Something brought to her mind a story she had heard many times from her husband's lips. As a young man his business ventures had not prospered. Because of this he had restrained himself from asking Harriet to marry him. Then a wealthy man had voluntarily lent his aid. Fortune had turned, and that turn, made possible by another's goodness, had meant twenty years of affluence and happiness for her. The story persisted in her thoughts. It halted her in her aimless living. Why not? Indeed, why should she not pass on the boon to some one baffled and discouraged? The thought captivated her.

How could she go about it? What would it not mean to have some living, throbbing interest in her life, which had for so long been an empty, hollow thing? The more she pondered it the more enticing grew the idea. She found herself reveling in imagination pictures of what might be. Why not make them realities? Thus grew into being a purpose with firm hold upon her as the morning light dissipated the darkness. At last she slept in the peace which unfailingly accompanies every unselfish turn we make.

Soon her plan crystallized into action. It grew in scope until she found herself wholly absorbed in the bigness of the enterprise. If the thing was worth her doing, there were others whom she might enlist in a similar adventure. She moved among the well-to-do. She knew women who might easily open their hearts and purses to some needy young person of worth. It had probably never occured to them. They had contented themselves with spasmodic giving to causes urged upon them but of which they knew little and cared less. They had missed the blessing vouchsafed to those who give themselves with their alms.

There was Miss Hamlin, living alone in her spacious house, worrying because she had no one to whom to bequeath her fortune save a nephew who did not need it and in whom she had little interest. Lonely soul, poor in everything except the material possessions which burdened her! Harriet Rogers was her one intimate friend. Usually their time together was spent in petty social chatter or in seeking to extract some sweetness from a fresh form of amusement—sometimes in assuring each other of their conviction that life was very little worth while. Harriet would go to her with this new proposition. She would endeavor to make her feel what she herself had just begun to comprehend—that if life is not worth while, the fault lies at the individual's door. Life abundant is possible—abundant in good works, in love, in satisfaction, in hope.

There were Mrs. Flemming and her husband, always talking enviously of the homes full of children; spending their idle days and inherited wealth traveling from land to land. Admittedly weary of it all, yet creatures of lifelong habit, they seemed to know no other way. More than once she had journeyed with them, and their intimacy gave her the right to suggest to them a new method of enjoyment.

Others came to her mind who, by combining their resources, might together take care of the education of some young man or woman, if they could not manage it as individuals.

One afternoon Mrs. Rogers dressed with her usual care and summoned her chauffeur. For the first time in many years there was joy and zest in her heart as she started out upon her strange new quest. It took time to accomplish her purpose. It required some persuasive eloquence, but both were at her command. Her heart was in the venture, and at last she won the interest and fervor of her friends.

So it came to pass that during the day when Miriam was slowly gathering stones for the sacrifice she must make, Mrs. Rogers and her followers were busy, as usual, with the high school principal, seeking names of well-dressing young folks whose vocation they might use for [illegible] a telephonic call summoned Miriam to the presidential office. As she met the gracious eyes that had elected to open to her the magic door of opportunity and privilege, the girl knelt down with the old sense of dedication.

"The only thanks I want, dear," said her new friend as Miriam tried to speak her gratitude, "are that you one day, if possible, will create for some other girl the same opportunity she sees in life and which might be lost except for you." —Zion's Herald.

contractor, for the white. While we have not yet obtained final figures, the cost of lot improvements, building and furniture was approximately as follows:

Lot,	$23,000
Grading, Walks, Driveway, etc.	1,000
Building, Complete,	104,577.9
Pews, Organ, Front, Chancel Furniture	7,195.00
Opening for Sunday School Auditorium	[illegible]
Heat,	5,[illegible]27
Organ,	[illegible]
Total,	[illegible]

This does not include expense of moving and renovating the house which has been used for Sunday school purposes, nor does it include furniture provided by a division class.

On behalf of the building committee I have the pleasure of tendering to the pastor and the congregation of Grace Church this temple which has been erected to the glory of the ever living God, and to his Son Jesus Christ. We do not need to say, as Isaiah did by the mouth of the prophet [illegible] unto the second temple, "Who is left among you that saw this house in its former glory and how do you see it now? Is it in your eyes as nothing?" For this temple far exceeds in beauty and in comfort both of its predecessors.

May I register the earnest wish of my heart with regard to this church?

First—I would that it may be, in addition to a place of worship for our own people, a source of pleasure and helpfulness to the people of the neighborhood. All its beautiful [illegible] may be enjoyed by all the people of the community and all the things that are eternal.

Second—That it may be a place of prayer for all who pass by and desire to make use of it. To that end it is our purpose that it [illegible] open [illegible] for private prayer. That it [illegible] and [illegible] will be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] here that [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] once.

Third—That with our superior equipment we may be greatly improved service rendered in the Sunday school and in the Christian Endeavor Society, to the end that our young people may be better trained, and become more useful members of the Church of Christ. It is a matter of great regret to us [illegible] our thirty-five years of church history no young men have gone out to preach the gospel of Christ; and no young women have [illegible] their lives to service in the mission field. [illegible] the churches are not furnishing [illegible] for the ministry, but need this be so? [illegible] people pray that God will from this [illegible] send forth laborers into His harvest [illegible] [illegible] that God will answer that [illegible]

Fourth—That the gospel may be preached with great power from the pulpit. That this [illegible] be attained, it is necessary that we [illegible] praying congregation. If we realize [illegible] responsibility upon us I do [illegible] so we will permit our pastor to enter [illegible] without the knowledge that his people [illegible] engaged in earnest prayer that [illegible] of the Spirit may rest upon him [illegible] the gospel message may reach the [illegible] hearts. The must be the right [illegible] [illegible] whose if the pastor is to preach [illegible] and this can be supplied only by [illegible] of the Spirit of God, in response [illegible] the prayers of the congregation.

Fifth—That we may have an evangelistic spirit. While I believe that the most effective work must be done in the training of the [illegible] I expect that souls may be born anew into the courts of the Lord's house. Shall we be satisfied with anything [illegible] of this?

Sixth—That people may enter this church and worship with a heart longer unsatisfied with spiritual need unmet. Whether this is to be done through the sermon, through the ministry, or through the cordiality of the members who shall welcome those who come, it must be kept in mind that our expectation is [illegible] and He is the One who satisfies the [illegible] of every soul.

Seventh—That we may be, in a true sense [illegible] mary church, and that its members may be witnesses unto Jesus Christ, in Greensboro in North Carolina in the United States, and [illegible] the uttermost ends of the earth. "The light of his further [illegible] right star home." [illegible] house shall be realized, I know that it will be true of this house, as Jehovah promised concerning the second temple: "The latter glory of this house shall be greater than the former, saith Jehovah of hosts; and in this place will I give peace, saith Jehovah of hosts."

J. Norman Wills, Chairman of Building Committee.

Resolution of Thanks and Appreciation to the Pastor, the Building Committee, and the Builders of the New Grace M. P. Church.

[illegible] the new Grace Methodist Protestant Church in its completion surpasses in [illegible] heart and workmanship even the fond hopes and dreams of our congregation, and

Whereas, because of the wise and patient leadership of our beloved pastor, Rev. S. [illegible] Spahr, D. D., whose far-seeing vision promoted us to undertake a larger and more commodious structure than we at first thought possible, and whose kindly interest and courage have so well kept up the morale of our people during the trying days of our building program, our eager anticipations have been more than realized, and

Whereas, because of the untiring labors and devotion of the Building Committee, and especially of the Chairman, Mr. J. Norman Wills, who has given of his time and strength without stint or reserve, and to whom the building, erected to the glory of God, and a sanctuary for his people, will stand as a monument for all time, and

Whereas, the architect, Mr. Hobart Upjohn, his associate, Mr. Harry Simmonds, the general contractor, Mr. J. L. Crouse, and the capable and efficient corps of contractors and workmen have displayed unusual interest and concern in their work, and have not only completed the building well within the specified time, but have given us one conceded to be in excess of the value usually obtained for the same outlay;

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the members of Grace Church, assembled on our opening day, May 2, 1926, express by a standing vote our heartfelt thanks and appreciation to Dr. Spahr, Mr. Wills, and the Building Committee, the architects, workmen, and all others who had any part in making possible the building of our new church; and

Be it further resolved that copies of these resolutions be sent to the parties named, with assurance of our prayers for God's continued blessings upon their lives and work, and that a copy be spread upon the minutes of the quarter'y conference.

OPENING SERVICE OF GRACE CHURCH

This was attended by a great congregation filling the house. All were impressed with the rare hearty of the interior. An elaborate program was carried out, including special music by the trained choir, and a sermon of special appropriateness by Dr. Spahr, the pastor, Bro. Little, associate pastor, assisted, and did the editor of the Herald. At the close of the service fourteen persons were received into membership. In the afternoon a communion service was held, and there were people present not only from other Greensboro churches, but from High Point, Winston-Salem, Mebane and perhaps other points. It was a red letter day for Grace Church. This central M. P. church in Greensboro has a special responsibility, and may divine grace ever enable it to bear its important part. We hope for Grace continued success and enlargement in the work of the Lord.

—President Lewis has undergone an operation in a Baltimore hospital. His recovery is hoped for.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Vest Lexington, South Davidson Charge.—
readers of the Herald may have thought t the West Lexington reporter had quit job of reporting the events of the Sunday ool and church, but we have not quit; have

Last Sunday was a good day for the West ington church and Sunday school. The at-dance in Sunday school was 150, which is largest attendance the school has ever had offering was $5.08 and was for the Chil-n's Home. The attendance has been increas for the past several Sundays. There were present on the previous Sunday.

The regular preaching service was well atded last Sunday night. Our pastor, Rev. M. y Crutchfield, brought us a good sermon on text, Isaiah 40:3—"Prepare ye the way of Lord." The theme of the sermon was reparation." The sermon was the first of eries of sermons to be preached during the nth of May looking forward to the begin-g of the revival meeting on the First Sun-

First Church, Thomasville, will assist the tor and do the preaching during the meet ent of about 65 members. There were 62 sent last Sunday, including six or eight itors. There is a faithful band of church l Sunday school workers at Mt. Carmel who always present for the services. Brother itchfield delivered a discourse on the sub-

r. 11:23. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper

At the April meeting of the Lexington Miners' Association our pastor, Bro. Crutchthe association, to succeed Rev. Wade H

Pastor Crutchfield has been wearing a new the members of West Lexington church and to know and admire him since he came to

State St. Church.—Mr. Bethea preached an excellent sermon Sunday morning to a large and appreciative audience. There was no service Sunday night because of the service held at the First Reformed Church by Miss Cole and other C. E. workers. Mr. Bethea took this opportunity to speak at the Community church at Thomasville in the interest of our new church building which is to be started right soon. Mr. J. F. Barrett accompanied Mr. Bethea and talked to the congregation in his very convincing and able way.

Our revival meeting begins with the C. E. Society a week from next Wednesday night. We are hoping for and expecting great results from the meeting. Brother Pritchard will come to preach for us on Thursday night, May 6, and will be with us at least a week, probably longer. Reporter.

Pastor's Report.

To the 2nd quarterly conference of Spencer Charge Methodist Protestant Church Concord, N. C., at the home of the pastor, D. A. Braswell, April 10, 1:30 P. M. 1926.

My dear brothers and sisters: We have once more met in a quarterly session to report what we have done during the quarter, and to plan for the future work.

1. Let us plan wisely and get behind our plans and push them on to completion.

Trees nor animals do not plan their growth; but all intelligent people know in order to accomplish high things we must lay big plans and then do our very best to carry out those plans. During the quarter none of our official members have been called from below to their reward. Yet death's dark shadow has fallen on some of our homes. On March 15 the death angel visited the home of Bro. D. R. and Sister Minnie Hackney, and took away little Emma Lee; and that left a dark shadow over that home. They have our deep sympathy. Other families have had some sad sickness. Let us remember those that are in trouble and pray for them.

Some Signs of Improvement.

A very nice lot has been secured in Charlotte on which to build a Second Methodist Protestant Church. Over one hundred dollars has been paid on the lot. We have had fifteen professions and twenty-one accessions at Charlotte and baptised twelve children. The congregation continues to improve in size and interest.

The Church at Spencer is very much alive. What members we have there are active.

I have preached 31 sermons and made about 100 visits.

We have received on pastoral support as follows: Charlotte on pastor's salary, $54.78; on Church Extension, $10; on Colllege Expense, $3.35; Easter collection, $3.69; Spencer on pastor's salary, $81.50; on Church Extension, $10; on College Expense, $3.60; Alison Grove on salary, $3.11.

I have married one couple.

We have been laboring under disadvantage at Charlotte and Spencer on account of convenient places to hold our services. Brother A. L. and Sister Moore have opened their home for us, and we have our services there. It is a real nice comfortable place to hold services, and we are truly grateful to them for their kindness in giving us the use of their nice home in which to worship.

We now have a very nice hall at Charlotte in which to worship, but it is upstairs and we are paying $15.00 per month rent. We are looking forward to a time when we shall have better quarters.

We have some opposition at both places and also some slackers, just such as Christ and his disciples had. But none of these things should move us from our work.

2. Our Educational work.

We now have a good college at High Point, and I am told that the work is progressing nicely. The greatest need at present seems to be money and students. They claim that the work done there is as good as the very best. More of our young people should be encouraged to attend our own schools.

The High Point College cannot do its best work without the support and hearty cooperation of the M. P. Church at large. All who can give money, now is the time to give it; and all who have children to send off to college, or know of children who are going off to college would do well to direct them to the High Point College.

4. The Revival Work. One of our greatest moral needs is a Holy Ghost revival in all our churches and homes, and in our lives. Without the Holy Spirit the church is dead and can not nor will not work, and will pine away and die. Let this be our motto, A revival in every home on our charge.

5. Our Church Literature. A number of our people are taking our church paper. To those who are interested in the wider circulation of our church literature and upbuilding of the Redeemer's Kingdom through our church: let us read our church papers and do all we can to get others to take them and read them. Possibly we are falling below the mark in some things because we do not know; and we do not know because we do not read. If any one would be strong regarding anything he must have knowledge of that thing. And the best way to learn about it is by reading about it.

6. Pastoral Support. There has been some improvement in this matter, but the increase in salary has not kept pace with the increase of living and new expenses. Some do nobly, and they will receive their reward. Would that all laymen and preachers could break away from the first law of nature, which is self-preservation; and be more fully under the law of Grace, which is self-sacrefice. Brethren, these short-comings are not brought to your attention to discourage any one, but, having discovered where we fail, let us try to overcome our faults, in the name of Him, who has called us with a holy calling.

7. The Outlook. That God has placed the Methodist Protestant Church in a peculiar position is clear to every observant mind. The movement of other religious bodies has made the ground occupied by the Methodist Protestant Church unlike any that has gone before. The Methodist Protestant Church today is not the battle ground on which is to be waged the war for supremacy; but a generous hearted, broad-minded, far-seeing messenger, bearing the olive branch to those who yet contend with each other, when the real cause for conflict has long since been removed. By precept and example we are moving the hearts and minds of others as we have never done before. There are those who say there is no difference. That is like saying, Peace, when there is no peace. It is not the intention of any broad-minded man, who has Christ for his example, to throw one straw in the way of closer fraternal relationship. But, be it known, that in the concessions made, there is no disposition to throw away the best for the thing conceded to be not quite so good, even by those who have it. Possibly, just at this point, we should be more guarded than ever before. If God intends to use the Methodist Protestant Church for some great end to which we have not yet arrived, then let us patiently plod on, bide our time and wait until He shall have accomplished His purpose in us. The best way to help others is to be true to one's self.

And now permit me to return to my brethern and sisters, and to the friends on the entire field, my sincere thanks for the help and encouragement you have given me; without which I could not serve the charge. I am sorry that I have not been able to render better service on the charge; but there have been many hindrances over which I had no control.

May our Father richly reward you all for all you have done. With thankful hearts to Almighty God for all his mercies to us during the past, I am yours in his service. I shall need your prayers and help in the future as much as I have in the past, and I feel sure I shall have them.

D. A. Braswell.

Friendship Station.—Our pastor filled his appointment Sunday morning with a large crowd attending the service; he preached a most wonderful sermon.

Our Sunday school is still growing. We are having the best enrollment we have had for some while. We miss our superintendent, Mr. J. H. Snotherly, very much since he has been sick and we hope for him a speedy recover.

The good ladies have reorganized their Aid society and are growing very rapidly.

Our Mother's Day service will be held on the second Sunday night of May at 7:45 with a program being given by Miss Minnie Sue Sides in memory of our dear old mothers.

As the days and the months go on, we still desire the prayers of all Christians.

April 23, Brother Walter R. Stanfield and Miss Annie Archie were united in marriage by the writer.

Young Brother Stanfield is a member of Friendship Methodist Protestant Church.

Mrs. Stanfield is one of Guilford's most accomplished young ladies. Immediately after the marriage they left for St. Petersburg, Fla., where Brother Stanfield holds a prominent position as electrician. Many good wishes follow the happy pair. W. D. Reed.

DIED.

Dickens.

Mr. J. R. Dickens, one of Enfield's most beloved citizens, passed away April 23rd at Johnson-Willis hospital, Richmond, Va.

Mr. Dickens was a loyal member of Eden Methodist Protestant Church, Halifax Charge, Rev. N. G. Bethea, seven years his pastor, says: "I had the privilege of being closely associated with him and never have I known him to turn down a call made for his church." He was a beloved member of the Enfield Church Bible Class.

Mr. Dickens was one of the most successful farmers and business men in Eastern North Carolina. He was prominently connected with many business concerns and was a director of the Commercial and Farmers' Bank and the Building and Loan association of Enfield. He was a progressive citizen deeply interested in the welfare of his State and community. He loved home and provided well for his family. He gave his children every educational advantage. He was a thirty second degree mason, Odd Fellow and Woodman of the World.

Mr. Dickens was outstanding in the friends he had numbering them among the old and young, the black and white. He was always a special friend of the preachers and seemed to love to be in their presence. He always remembered them in substantial ways and showed them many favors.

He leaves a widow and three children: Misses Ruth and Margie and Mr. Everett Dickens.

The funeral was conducted in the home by his pastor, Rev. C. L. Spencer, and all the ministers of Enfield. The final rites at the grave were said by the masonic order of Knight Templars. Interment was made in Elms wood cemetery.

"To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

R. C. Stubbins.

Clements.

The community was made sad when news came that Mrs. Mary E. Clements had gone from an earthly home to an eternal home. Mrs Mary E. Clements, born October 2, 1853, died March 8, 1926.

Sister Clements was married to George B Clements February 12, 1873. To this union were born 13 children, ten now living: Mr. B. F. Clements, Mrs. Bettie Gay, D. S. Clements, Mrs. Minnie Rook, Mrs. Ada Rook, Mrs May Rook, Rev. J. B. Clements of the M. P. Church, Rev. G. W. Clements of the Baptist Church, Mr. P. H. Clements, Mr. R. A. Clements. There are 58 grandchildren, 20 great-grand children.

In early life she professed faith in Christ and joined Mt. Vernard Baptist Church. Later in life she joined Ebenezer Methodist Protestant Church where she was faithful till death. It was always an inspiration to have her in the congregation. She was always attentive and would lead public prayer. Sister Clements has been feeble for several years. She was at church only a few days before death called her hence. She seemed to enjoy the service.

She told the writer at different times that she was ready for the exchange of worlds. Her mortal remains were brought to her church and laid to rest in Ebenezer cemetery to await the resurrection call. We shall miss her greatly at the services. The pastor was away at the time of her death and could not be reached for her funeral. I have not been informed who conducted her funeral.

Surely a good woman has gone from among us. Our loss we believe is her eternal gain. We do not weep as those who have no hope but hope to meet again.

May the Lord bless the bereaved family and help them to so live as to meet mother and grandmother in that home not made with hands but eternal and in the heavens.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—MAY 16.

Abraham and the Strangers.

Lesson Text: Gen. 18:1-8; 16-19.

Golden Text: Gen. 18:18.

The Central Truth: "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Heb. 13:2.

Scriptural Points.

1. Three messengers from heaven appeared as human beings to Abraham in the plains of Mamre. One of them was the Lord, the Jehovah of the Old Testment dispensation and Jesus Christ of the New Testiment dispensation. The other two were angels who afterward visited Lot in Sodom and hastened his escape from that doomed city, in answer to Abraham's prayer.

2. Abraham greeted the three strangers with abounding oriental hospitality. He ran to meet them and bowed a most hearty welcome. He also ran unto the herd of cattle and selected a fatted calf which one of his servants dressed for a noonday feast. Sarah was told to bake cakes of bread in abundance.

3. The running of this patriarch of ninety nine years displayed a gladness of heart that quivered in every muscle. This visit of three from the glory world was an event of tremendous importance. It was a red-letter day in the life of Abraham. It was a day of feasting both for body and soul. Heaven touched earth that day.

They came to bring two important messages. One of them related to the birth of a son. This is evidence of the keen and abiding interest of the heavenly hosts in family life and the propagation of the race. For twenty-five years the faith of Abraham had clung to the promise that his posterity would be as numerous as the stars of heaven and the sand upon the seashore. Now this promise was beginning to be fulfilled in the early birth of an heir.

5. Sarah, overhearing the statement that she would become a mother, laughed her incredulity. She could not believe such news that was too good to be true, as she thought. When the Lord reproved her for this display of unbelief she denied having laughed at all. She was afraid the good promise might be withdrawn.

6. The other message was concerning the impending destruction of Sodom and the other cities of the plain. "And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" It was a most distinguished honor to be thus entrusted with one of the secrets of the Most High God.

7. Abraham was worthy and entitled to this confidence, and for two reasons. His faith, after twenty-five years of sore testing, made him the father of believers of all succeeding time. His faith in the coming Messiah made him righteous. And by the sacrifice of his illustrious descendant all the nations of the earth would share this blessing of righteousness.

8. Another reason for this divine confidence in Abraham was his future loyalty and faithfulness which the Lord foreknew. "For I know him, that he will command his children and household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord might bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."

9. The home and the faithful government of the family are the pillars that uphold and assure the stability and prosperity of the nation.

Practical Points.

1. The society of God is the all-sufficient refuge and joy of His saints. "My presence shall go with thee." To walk with God, to talk with God, and to share His mind and Spirit are delights, of which the world knows nothing.

2. One must get away from the confusion and perplexity of earthly life to be able to realize the divine presence, and hear the still small voice. The elevated life of sitting in heavenly places in Christ Jesus is indispensable to having a part in this elevated "fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ."

3. Holiness is the experience and atmosphere that give assurance of the abiding and uplifting presence of God: "Be ye holy, for I am holy."

4. The divine fellowship is a gracious foretaste of that blissful immortality where "the years of eternity roll, and the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul."

"If our fellowship here below
In Jesus be so sweet,
What heights of rapture shall we know,
When round His throne we meet?"

5. The proper training of children in the way and service of the Lord is the supreme privilege and duty of parenthood. Without such training children are most apt to go astray. "A child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." To be ashamed of a dishonorable posterity and the neglect that caused it is a most doleful calamity. Children are the best entrusted gifts of God. Let parents be true and faithful to this sacred trust.

A Kansas general store owner recently mailed a right-hand cotton glove to three hundred farmers. The farmers were asked to call at the store to receive the left-hand glove. They came—and went home with other things they had bought and paid for.—The Outlook.

Pair Grove, Why Not Ct.—The annual memorial service was held here yesterday afternoon, May 2. Our pastor, Rev. D. I. Garner, preached from the subject Christian Rest, after which Jos. Moser of Asheboro made an address stressing honoring our parents.

Both were heard with interest by the congregation. We were glad to have so many visitors present. After the service the graves were decorated with flowers.

s my Lord, I will, I can

Fred W. Robertson.

e worship of the merely Supernatural , as science progresses, legitimately end theism. Yes, all science removes the Cause auses farther and farther back from hu- ken, so that the baffled intellect is com- d to confess at last that we cannot find "The world by wisdom knew not God." e is a power in the soul, quite separate the intellect, which sweeps away or rec- zes the marvelous, by which God is fe t. h stands far above the reach of the athe- of science. It does not rest on the wonder- ful, but on the eternal wisdom and goodness of God. The revelation of the Son was to pro claim a Father, not a mystery. No science can sweep away the everlasting love which the HEART feels, and which the intellect does not even pretend to judge or recognize.—Se lected.
